Includes provisions as follows:

Provides for the appointment of an Area Redevelopment Administrator in the Department of Commerce to perform such duties in the execution of this Act as the Secretary of Commerce may assign.

Provides that the Secretary of Commerce shall designate as "redevelopment areas" those areas in the United States in which he determines that there has existed substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended period of time, based upon certain standards as to current percentage rates of unemployment and annual average percentage rates of unemployment. Authorizes loans not to exceed $100,000,000 for projects in redevelopment areas so designated.

Provides that the Secretary of Commerce shall also designate as "redevelopment areas" those areas in the United States which do not meet the requirements under the standards prescribed above but which he determines are among the highest in numbers and percentages of low-income families, and in which there exists a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment. Provides that in the formulation of standards for the designation of these areas the Secretary shall consider, among other relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families in the various rural areas of the United States, the proportion that such low-income families are of the total farm families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of the families in each such area to the general levels of income in the United States, the extent to which "rural development" projects have previously been located in any such area under programs administered by the Department of Agriculture, the current and prospective employment opportunities in each such area, the availability of manpower in each such area for supplemental employment, the extent of migration out of the area, and the proportion of the population of each such area which has been receiving public assistance from the Federal Government or from the State or States in which such area is located or from any municipality therein. In making such determinations the Secretary shall be guided, but not conclusively governed, by pertinent studies made, and information and data collected or compiled, by Federal departments and agencies, State and local governments, universities and land-grant colleges, and private organizations. Provides that the Department of Agriculture and other departments and agencies may conduct such special studies, obtain such information, and compile and furnish to the Secretary of Commerce, on a reimbursable basis, such data as the Secretary may deem necessary or proper to enable him to make determinations regarding these proposed redevelopment areas. Authorizes loans not to exceed $100,000,000 for projects in such designated redevelopment areas.

Authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to make loans not in excess of $100,000,000 and to make grants not in excess of $75,000,000 to assist in financing the purchase or development of land for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities in redevelopment areas.

Establishes an area redevelopment fund in the Treasury Department of not to exceed $300,000,000 to provide funds for loans for projects in redevelopment areas.

Authorizes the appropriation of $4.5 million annually for technical assistance to redevelopment areas and to other areas which have need of such assistance to alleviate or prevent excessive unemployment or underemployment.

Provides for the appointment of a National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment of 25 members composed of representatives of labor, agriculture, management, State and local governments, and the public in general to make recommendations to the Secretary of Commerce relative to the carrying out of his duties under this Act.

Authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to aid redevelopment areas and other areas by furnishing technical information, market research, or other forms of assistance, information, or advice which are obtainable from other Federal agencies and which would be useful in alleviating or preventing conditions of excessive unemployment or underemployment within such areas.

Requires the Secretary of Commerce to furnish procurement offices of Federal agencies with the names and addresses of business firms located in redevelopment areas which are desirous of obtaining Government contracts to furnish supplies or services.

Authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to delegate any of his functions under this Act to other Federal departments and agencies. Authorizes the Secretary to use the services and facilities of other Federal departments and agencies with their consent and on a reimbursable basis. Authorizes the transfer of funds authorized to be appropriated by this Act, with the approval of the Budget Bureau, between Federal departments and agencies.

Requires the Secretary of Commerce to make an annual report to the Congress of his operations under this Act.

Provides that the authority conferred by this Act shall terminate June 30, 1965.

PUBLIC LAW 87-28 (S. 1027) AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954 (approved May 4, 1961). Amends title I of Public Law 480, 83d Congress, by increasing the authorization for the calendar year 1961 by $2 billion to a total of $3.5 billion, plus any unused authority carried over from 1960. Title I of Public Law 480 authorizes the President to enter into agreements with friendly nations to provide for the sale of surplus agricultural commodities for foreign currencies, which are then used for a number of purposes enumerated in title I for the benefit of the United States and the purchasing country.

PUBLIC LAW 87-30 (H. R. 3935) FAIR LABOR STANDARDS AMENDMENTS OF 1961 (approved May 5, 1961). Amends the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to provide coverage for additional employees, increase the minimum wage for presently covered employees gradually to $1.25 per hour within 2 years, and increase the minimum wage for newly covered employees to $1.25 an hour over a 5-year period. Exempts workers who may occasionally engage in livestock auction operations as an adjunct to their regular work of raising livestock, workers employed at country elevators that market farm products for farmers if not more than 5 employees are employed at the elevator, workers engaged in ginning cotton for market at any location in a county where cotton is grown in commercial quantities, workers engaged in processing shade-grown tobacco for use as cigar wrapper tobacco if the workers are engaged in the growing and harvesting of such tobacco, and workers engaged in the transportation of fruits and vegetables from the farm to a place of first processing or first marketing within the same State and the transportation between the farm and any point within the same State of workers employed or to be employed in the harvesting of the commodity.

Requires the Secretary of Labor, when he has reason to believe that employment in an industry under the Act has decreased or is likely to decrease because of foreign competition, to investigate the matter and report to the President and Congress.

Requires the Secretary of Labor to study the system of exemptions now available for handling and processing of agricultural products and to submit to the second session of the 87th Congress a report on the results of the study, with recommendations for further legislation designed to simplify and remove inequities in the application of such exemptions.

PUBLIC LAW 87-33 (S. 1372) POOLED ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS (approved May 16, 1961). Amends section 378 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 by authorizing the temporary release and reapportionment of pooled acreage allotments on lands acquired by agencies having the right of eminent domain.

This is an emergency measure which applies to the 1961 crop only.

A BILL

To establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

- 1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
- 2 tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
- 3 That this Act may be cited as the "Area Redevelopment
- 4 Act".

DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

2 SEC. 2. The Congress declares that the maintenance of
3 the national economy at a high level is vital to the best in-
4 terests of the United States, but that some of our communi-
5 ties are suffering substantial and persistent unemployment
6 and underemployment; that such unemployment and under-
7 employment cause hardship to many individuals and their
8 families and detract from the national welfare by wasting 9 vital human resources; that to overcome this problem the
10 Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, should 11 help areas of substantial and persistent unemployment and 12 underemployment to take effective steps in planning and
13 financing their economic redevelopment; that Federal as-
14 sistance to communities, industries, enterprises, and indi-
15 viduals in areas needing redevelopment should enable such
16 areas to achieve lasting improvement and enhance the do-
17 mestic prosperity by the establishment of stable and diver-
18 sified local economies; and that under the provisions of this
19 Act new employment opportunities should be created by 20 developing and expanding new and existing facilities and 21 resources without substantially reducing employment in other
22 areas of the United States.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

24 SEC. 3. In order to carry out the purposes of this Act,
25 there is hereby established, within the executive branch of

1 the Government, an Area Redevelopment Administration.
2 Such Administration shall be under the direction and control
3 of an Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Admin-
4 istrator") who shall be appointed by the President, by and 5 with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be 6 compensated at the same rate as that prescribed by law for 7 an assistant secretary of an executive department.

8 ADVISORY BOARD

9 SEC. 4. (a) To advise the Administrator in the per-
10 formance of functions authorized by this Act, there is author-
11 ized to be created an Area Redevelopment Advisory Board
12 (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), which shall con-
13 sist of the following members, all ex officio: the Administra-
14 tor as Chairman; the Secretaries of Agriculture; Commerce;
15 Defense; Health, Education, and Welfare; Interior; Labor;
16 and Treasury; the Administrators of the General Services
17 Administration; Housing and Home Finance Agency; and 18 Small Business Administration; and the Director of the 19 Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization.

20 The Chairman may from time to time invite the partici-
21 pation of officials of other agencies of the executive branch
22 interested in the functions herein authorized. Each member
23 of the Board may designate an officer of his agency to act
24 for him as a member of the Board with respect to any matter
25 there considered.

1 (b) The Administrator shall appoint a National Public
2 Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment which shall
3 consist of twenty-five members and shall be composed of 4 representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and the 5 public in general. From the members appointed to such
6 Committee the Administrator shall designate a Chairman.
7 Such Committee, or any duly established subcommittee
8 thereof, shall from time to time make recommendations to 9 the Administrator relative to the carrying out of his duties
10 under this Act. Such Committee shall hold not less than 11 two meetings during each calendar year.

12 (c) The Administrator is authorized from time to time
13 to call together and confer with representatives of the vari-
14 ous parties in interest from any industry, including agricul-
15 ture, which has been a primary source of high levels of 16 unemployment or underemployment in the several areas
17 designated by the Administrator as redevelopment areas.
18 The Administrator may also call upon representatives of
19 interested governmental departments and agencies, together
20 with representatives of transportation and other industries, to 21 participate in any conference convened under authority of
22 this subsection whenever he determines that such participa-
23 tion would contribute to a solution of the problems creating
24 such unemployment or underemployment. The representa-
25 tives at any such conference shall consider with and may

1 recommend to the Administrator plans and programs to
2 further the objectives of this Act with special reference to
3 the industry with respect to which the conference was
4 convened.

5 REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

6 SEC. 5. (a) The Administrator shall designate as "re-
7 development areas" those areas within the United States in 8 which he determines that there has existed substantial and
9 persistent unemployment for an extended period of time.
10 There shall be included among the areas so designated any
11 area—

12 (1) where the rate of unemployment, excluding un-
13 employment due primarily to temporary or seasonal 14 factors, is currently 6 per centum or more and has 15 averaged at least 6 per centum for the qualifying time
16 periods specified in subparagraph (2) below; and

17 (2) where the annual average rate of unemploy-
18 ment has been at least—

19 (A) 50 per centum above the national average
20 for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

21 (B) 75 per centum above the national average
22 for two of the preceding three calendar years, or

23 (C) 100 per centum above the national aver-
24 age for one of the preceding two years.

25 Any area in which a substantial part of the employ-

1 ment is or most recently was in an industry adversely
2 affected by the reduction of trade barriers under the Trade
3 Agreements Extension Act of 1951, as amended, with
4 respect to which the President has reported to the Adminis-
5 trator under subsection (f) of this section, and meeting the
6 standards of unemployment set forth in this section shall
7 be entitled on application to a priority of consideration by
8 the Administrator for designation as a redevelopment area.

9 (b) The Administrator shall also designate as "re-
10 development areas" those areas (including Indian reserva-
11 tions) within the United States which do not meet the 12 requirements set forth in subsection (a) but which he
13 determines are among the highest in numbers and percent-
14 ages of low-income families, and in which there exists a
15 condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or 16 underemployment. In making the designations under this
17 subsection, the Administrator shall consider, among other
18 relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families
19 in the various rural areas of the United States, the proportion
20 that such low-income families are to the total farm families of 21 each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of 22 the families in each such area to the general levels of income
23 in the United States, the current and prospective employ-
24 ment opportunities in each such area, the availability of 25 manpower in each such area for supplemental employment,

1 the extent of migration out of the area, and the proportion
2 of the population of each such area which has been receiving
3 public assistance from the Federal Government and/or from
4 the State or States in which such area is located or from
5 any municipality therein.

6 (c) In making the determinations provided for in this
7 section, the Administrator shall be guided, but not conclu-
8 sively governed, by pertinent studies made, and information
9 and data collected or compiled, by (1) departments, agen-
10 cies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, (2)
11 State and local governments, (3) universities and land-grant
12 colleges, and (4) private organizations.

13 (d) Upon the request of the Administrator, the Secre-
14 tary of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary
15 of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Interior are respec-
16 tively authorized to conduct such special studies, obtain such
17 information, and compile and furnish to the Administrator
18 such data as the Administrator may deem necessary or 19 proper to enable him to make the determinations provided
20 for in this section. The Administrator shall reimburse, out
21 of any funds appropriated to carry out the purposes of this 22 Act, the foregoing officers for any expenditures incurred by 23 them under this section.

24 (e) As used in this Act, the term "redevelopment area"
25 refers to any area within the United States which has been

1 designated by the Administrator as a redevelopment area
2 and may include one or more States, one or more counties,
3 or one or more municipalities, or a part of a county or
4 municipality.

5 (f) In any case in which the President is required (1)
6 under the provisions of subsection 4 (a) of the Trade Agree-
7 ments Extension Act of 1951 to transmit a message to the
8 Congress identifying an article with respect to which a trade
9 agreement has caused or threatened to cause serious injury to
10 a domestic industry, or (2) under the provisions of subsec-
11 tion 7 (c) of such Act to submit a report to the Committee on 12 Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the 13 Committee on Finance of the Senate stating why he has not 14 made such adjustments in the rates of duties, imposed such 15 quotas, or made such other modifications, as are found and
16 reported by the United States Tariff Commission to be neces-
17 sary to prevent or remedy serious injury to a domestic 18 industry, he shall notify the Administrator and shall send 19 him a copy of such message or report.

20 LOANS AND PARTICIPATIONS

21 SEC. 6. (a) The Administrator is authorized to pur-
22 chase evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (including 23 immediate participations therein) to aid in financing any 24 project within a redevelopment area for the purchase or 25 development of land and facilities (including, in exceptional

1 cases, machinery and equipment) for industrial or commer-
2 cial usage, for the construction of new buildings, for rehabili-
3 tation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, or for the altera-
4 tion, conversion, or enlargement of any existing buildings for
5 industrial or commercial use. Such financial assistance shall
6 not be extended for working capital, or to assist establish-
7 ments relocating from one area to another when such assist-
8 ance will result in substantial detriment to the area of original
9 location by increasing unemployment.

10 (b) Financial assistance under this section shall be on 11 such terms and conditions as the Administrator determines
12 subject, however, to the following restrictions and limita-
13 tions:

14 (1) The total amount of loans and loan participations
15 (including purchased evidences of indebtedness) outstanding
16 at any one time under this section (A) with respect to 17 projects in redevelopment areas designated under section
18 5 (a) shall not exceed $100,000,000 (but not to exceed 19 $30,000,000 prior to July 1, 1962), and (B) with respect
20 to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section
21 5 (b) shall not exceed $100,000,000 (but not to exceed 22 $30,000,000 prior to July 1, 1962) ;

23 (2) Except as provided in subsection (c), such assist-
24 ance shall be extended only to applicants, both private and

1 public (including Indian tribes), which have been approved
2 for such assistance by an agency or instrumentality of the
3 State or political subdivision thereof in which the project to
4 be financed is located, and which agency or instrumentality
5 is directly concerned with problems of economic develop-
6 ment in such State or subdivision;

7 (3) The project for which financial assistance is sought
8 is reasonably calculated to provide more than a temporary
9 alleviation of unemployment or underemployment within the 10 redevelopment area wherein it is, or will be, located;

11 (4) No such assistance shall be extended hereunder
12 unless the financial assistance applied for is not otherwise
13 available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on
14 reasonable terms;

15 (5) No loans shall be made unless it is determined that
16 an immediate participation is not available;

17 (6) No evidences of indebtedness shall be purchased
18 and no loans shall be made unless it is determined that there
19 is a reasonable assurance of repayment;

20 (7) Subject to section 12 (5) of this Act, no loan,
21 including renewals or extension thereof, may be made
22 hereunder for a period exceeding twenty-five years and no
23 evidences of indebtedness maturing more than twenty-five hereafter

1 years from date of purchase may be purchased hereunder:
2 Provided, That the foregoing restrictions on maturities
3 shall not apply to securities or obligations received by the
4 Administrator as a claimant in bankruptcy or equitable re-
5 organization or as a creditor in other proceedings attendant
6 upon insolvency of the obligor, or if extension or renewal
7 for additional periods, not to exceed, however, a total of ten
8 years, will aid in the orderly liquidation of such loan or of 9 such evidence of indebtedness;

10 (8) Such loans shall bear interest at a rate equal to the 11 rate of interest paid by the Administrator on funds obtained
12 from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in section 9
13 of this Act, plus one-half of 1 per centum per annum: Pro-
14 vided, That an amount equal to one-fourth of 1 per centum
15 per annum of the outstanding principal amount of any loan
16 made under this section shall be allocated from the pay-
17 ments received by the Administrator in the form of interest
18 on such loan to a sinking fund to cover losses on loans under
19 this section;

20 (9) Such assistance shall not exceed 65 per centum of 21 the aggregate cost to the applicant (excluding all other Fed-
22 eral aid in connection with the undertaking) of acquiring or 23 developing land and facilities (including, in exceptional cases,

1 machinery and equipment), and of constructing, altering,
2 converting, rehabilitating, or enlarging the building or build-
3 ings of the particular project and shall, among others, be on
4 the following conditions:

5 (A) That other funds are available in an amount which,
6 together with the assistance provided hereunder, shall be
7 sufficient to pay such aggregate cost;

8 (B) That not less than 10 per centum of such aggregate
9 cost be supplied by the State or any agency, instrumentality,
10 or political subdivision thereof, or by a community or area
11 organization which is nongovernmental in character, as
12 equity capital or as a loan;

13 (C) That in extending financial assistance under this
14 section with respect to a redevelopment area, the Adminis-
15 trator shall require that not less than 5 per centum of the 16 aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made
17 shall be supplied by nongovernmental sources;

18 (D) That any Federal financial assistance extended
19 under this section in connection with a particular project
20 shall be repayable only after other loans made in connection
21 with such project and in accordance with this section have
22 been repaid in full. If any Federal financial assistance
23 extended under this section is secured, its security shall be 24 subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing other
25 loans made in connection with the same project.

1 (10) No such assistance shall be extended unless there
2 shall be submitted to and approved by the Administrator an
3 overall program for the economic development of the area
4 and a finding by the State, or any agency, instrumentality,
5 or local political subdivision thereof, that the project for
6 which financial assistance is sought is consistent with such
7 program: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall authorize 8 financial assistance for any project prohibited by laws of 9 the State or local political subdivision in which the project
10 would be located.

11 (c) If there is no agency or instrumentality in any
12 State, or political subdivision thereof, qualified to approve
13 applicants for assistance under this section as provided in 14 paragraph (2) of subsection (b), the Administrator shall,
15 upon determining that any area in such State is a redevelopment
16 ment area, appoint a local redevelopment committee (here-
17 inafter referred to as a "local committee") to be composed
18 of not less than seven residents of such area who, as nearly 19 as possible, are representative of labor, commercial, indus-
20 trial, and agricultural groups, and of the residents generally
21 of such area. In appointing any such local committee, the 22 Administrator may include therein members of any existing 23 local redevelopment committees. Financial assistance under
24 this section in connection with projects located in a rede-
25 velopment area, for which a local committee has been ap-

1 pointed under this section, shall be extended only to appli-
2 cants, both private and public (including Indian tribes),
3 which have been approved by such local committee.

4 (d) Of the funds authorized to be raised under section 9
5 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited
6 in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of 7 making loans under this section with respect to projects in
8 redevelopment areas designated under section 5 (a), and not
9 more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving
10 fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans
11 under this section with respect to projects in redevelopment
12 areas designated under section 5 (b).

13 LOANS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

14 SEC. 7. (a) Upon the application of any State, or polit-
15 ical subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public
16 organization or association representing any redevelopment
17 area or part thereof, the Administrator is authorized to make 18 loans to assist in financing the purchase or development of 19 land for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabili-
20 tation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facili-
21 ties within any redevelopment area, if he finds that—

22 (1) the project for which financial assistance is
23 sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation
24 of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelop-
25 ment area wherein such project is, or will be, located,

1 and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area
2 for the successful establishment or expansion of indus-
3 trial or commercial plants or facilities;

4 (2) the funds requested for such project are not
5 otherwise available on reasonable terms;

6 (3) the amount of the loan plus the amount of
7 other available funds for such projects are adequate to
8 insure the completion thereof;

9 (4) there is a reasonable expectation of repayment;
10 and

11 (5) such area has an approved economic develop-
12 ment program as provided in section 6 (b) (10) and 13 the project for which financial assistance is sought is 14 consistent with such program.

15 (b) No loan under this section shall be for an amount
16 in excess of 65 per centum of the aggregate cost of the proj-
17 ect for which such loan is made. Subject to section 12 (5), 18 the maturity date of any such loan shall be not later than 19 forty years after the date such loan is made. Any such loan
20 shall bear interest at a rate equal to the rate of interest paid
21 by the Administrator on funds obtained from the Secretary
22 of the Treasury as provided in section 9 of this Act, plus
23 one-quarter of 1 per centum per annum.

24 (c) In making any loan under this section, the Ad-
25 ministrator shall require that not less than 10 per centum of

1 the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made
2 shall be supplied by the State (including any political sub-
3 division thereof) within which such project is to be located
4 as equity capital, or as a loan. In determining the amount
5 of participation required under this subsection with respect
6 to any particular project, the Administrator shall give con-
7 sideration to the financial condition of the State or local
8 government, and to the per capita income of the residents
9 of the redevelopment area, within which such project is to
10 be located.

11 (d) Any loan made under this section in connection
12 with a particular project shall be repayable only after other
13 loans made in connection with such project and in accord-
14 ance with this section have been repaid in full. If any loan
15 made under this section is secured, its security shall be
16 subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing other
17 loans made in connection with the same project.

18 (e) No financial assistance shall be extended under this
19 section with respect to any public facility which would com-
20 pete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering
21 a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regula-
22 tion by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory
23 body determines that in the area to be served by the public
24 facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended
25 there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into

1 consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the
2 existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing
3 facilities or through an expansion which it is prepared to 4 undertake.

5 (f) Of the funds authorized to be raised under section
6 9 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited
7 in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of
8 making loans under this section: Provided, That not more
9 than $30,000,000 shall be deposited in such fund prior to
10 July 1, 1962.

11 GRANTS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

12 SEC. 8. (a) The Administrator may conduct studies of 13 needs in the various redevelopment areas throughout the 14 United States for, and the probable cost of, land acquisition
15 or development for public facility usage, and the construction,
16 rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of use-
17 ful public facilities within such areas, and may receive pro-
18 posals from any State, or political subdivision thereof, In-
19 dian tribe, or private or public organization or association
20 representing any redevelopment area, or part thereof, relat-
21 ing to land acquisition or development for public facility
22 usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expan-
23 sion, or improvement of public facilities within any such area.
24 Any such proposal shall contain plans showing the project

1 proposed to be undertaken, the cost thereof, and the con-
2 tributions proposed to be made to such cost by the entity
3 making the proposal. The Administrator, in consultation
4 with such entity, is authorized to modify all or any part of
5 such proposal.

6 (b) The Administrator, pursuant to a proposal received
7 by him under this section, may make grants to any State, or
8 political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public
9 organization or association representing any redevelopment
10 area, or part thereof, for land acquisition or development for 11 public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation,
12 alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities
13 within a redevelopment area, if he finds that—

14 (1) the project for which financial assistance is
15 sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation
16 of unemployment or underemployment in the redevel-
17 opment area wherein such project is, or will be, located,
18 and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area
19 for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial
20 or commercial plants or facilities;

21 (2) the entity requesting the grant proposes to
22 contribute to the cost of the project for which such grant
23 is requested in proportion to its ability so to contribute;
24 and

(3) the project for which a grant is requested will fulfill a pressing need of the area, or part thereof, in which it is, or will be, located, and there is little probability that such project can be undertaken without the assistance of a grant under this section.

The amount of any grant under this section for any such project shall not exceed the difference between the funds which can be practicably obtained from other sources (including a loan under section 7 of this Act) for such project, and the amount which is necessary to insure the completion thereof.

(c) The Administrator shall by regulation provide for the supervision of carrying out of projects with respect to which grants are made under this section so as to insure that Federal funds are not wasted or dissipated.

(d) No financial assistance shall be extended under this section with respect to any public facility which would compete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory body determines that in the area to be served by the public facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into consideration reasonably foreseeable future

1 needs) which the existing public utility is not able to meet
2 through its existing facilities or through an expansion which
3 it is prepared to undertake.

4 (e) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated
5 not to exceed $75,000,000 for the purpose of making grants
6 under this section: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000,-
7 000 shall be appropriated for such purpose prior to July 1,
8 1962.

FUNDS FOR LOANS

10 SEC. 9. To obtain funds for loans under this Act, the 11 Administrator may, with the approval of the President, issue
12 and have outstanding at any one time notes and obligations
13 for purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury in an amount
14 not to exceed $300,000,000: Provided, That the amount
15 of such notes and obligations which are outstanding prior to 16 July 1, 1962, shall not exceed $90,000,000. Such notes
17 or other obligations shall be in such forms and denomina-
18 tions, have such maturities, and be subject to such terms and 19 conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator with 20 the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall bear
21 interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treas-
22 ury, but such rate shall not be greater than the current 23 average yields on outstanding marketable obligations of 24 the United States of comparable maturities as of the last
25 day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or

1 other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is au-
2 thorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obli-
3 gations issued under this section and for such purpose is
4 authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds
5 from the sale of any securities issued under the Second
6 Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which 7 securities may be issued under such Act are extended to
8 include any purchase of such notes and other obligations.
9 The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of 10 the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this 11 section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the 12 Secretary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations
13 shall be treated in every respect as public debt transactions
14 of the United States.

15 INFORMATION

16 SEC. 10. The Administrator shall aid redevelopment
17 areas by furnishing to interested individuals, communities,
18 industries, and enterprises within such areas any assistance,
19 technical information, market research, or other forms of 20 assistance, information, or advice which are obtainable from 21 the various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of
22 the Federal Government and which would be useful in allevi-
23 ating conditions of excessive unemployment or underemploy-
24 ment within such areas. The Administrator shall furnish the 25 procurement divisions of the various departments, agencies,

1 and other instrumentalities of the Federal Government with
2 a list containing the names and addresses of business firms
3 which are located in redevelopment areas and which are
4 desirous of obtaining Government contracts for the furnish-
5 ing of supplies or services, and designating the supplies and
6 services such firms are engaged in providing.

7 TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

8 SEC. 11. In carrying out his duties under this Act, the 9 Administrator is authorized to provide technical assistance to 10 areas which he has designated as redevelopment areas under 11 this Act. Such assistance shall include studies evaluating 12 the needs of, and developing potentialities for, economic 13 growth of such areas. Such assistance may be provided by 14 the Administrator through members of his staff or through 15 the employment of private individuals, partnerships, firms,
16 corporations, or suitable institutions, under contracts en-
17 tered into for such purpose. Appropriations are hereby 18 authorized for the purposes of this section in an amount not 19 to exceed $4,500,000 annually.

20 POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR

21 SEC. 12. In performing his duties under this Act, the 22 Administrator is authorized to—

23 (1) adopt, alter, and use a seal, which shall be ju-24 dicially noticed; and subject to the civil service and 25 classification laws, select, employ, appoint, and fix the

1 compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, and
2 agents as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions
3 of this Act, and define their authority and duties, pro-
4 vide bonds for them in such amounts as the Adminis-
5 trator shall determine, and pay the costs of qualification
6 of certain of them as notaries public;

7 (2) hold such hearings, sit and act at such times
8 and places, and take such testimony, as he may deem 9 advisable;

10 (3) request directly from any executive depart-
11 ment, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, inde-
12 pendent establishment, or instrumentality information,
13 suggestions, estimates, and statistics needed to carry out
14 the purposes of this Act; and each department, bureau,
15 agency, board, commission, office, establishment, or in-
16 strumentality is authorized to furnish such information,
17 suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Ad-
18 ministrator;

19 (4) under regulations prescribed by him, assign
20 or sell at public or private sale, or otherwise dispose of 21 for cash or credit, in his discretion and upon such terms
22 and conditions and for such consideration as he shall
23 determine to be reasonable, any evidence of debt, con-
24 tract, claim, personal property, or security assigned to
25 or held by him in connection with the payment of loans

1 made under this Act, and collect or compromise all
2 obligations assigned to or held by him in connection
3 with the payment of such loans until such time as such
4 obligations may be referred to the Attorney General
5 for suit or collection;

6 (5) further extend the maturity of or renew any 7 loan made under this Act, beyond the periods stated in 8 such loan or in this Act, for additional periods not to 9 exceed ten years, if such extension or renewal will aid
10 in the orderly liquidation of such loan;

11 (6) deal with, complete, renovate, improve, mod-
12 ernize, insure, rent, or sell for cash or credit, upon such 13 terms and conditions and for such consideration as he 14 shall determine to be reasonable, any real or personal
15 property conveyed to, or otherwise acquired by, him
16 in connection with the payment of loans made under 17 this Act;

18 (7) pursue to final collection, by way of compro-
19 mise or other administrative action, prior to reference
20 to the Attorney General, all claims against third parties
21 assigned to him in connection with loans made under 22 this Act. [This shall include authority to obtain de-
23 ficiency judgments or otherwise in the case of mort-
24 gages assigned to the Administrator. Section 3709
25 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (41 U.S.C. 5),

1 shall not apply to any contract of hazard insurance or
2 to any purchase or contract for services or supplies on
3 account of property obtained by the Administrator as a
4 result of loans made under this Act if the premium there-
5 for or the amount thereof does not exceed $1,000. The 6 power to convey and to execute, in the name of the 7 Administrator, deeds of conveyance, deeds of release,
8 assignments and satisfactions of mortgages, and any
9 other written instrument relating to real or personal
10 property or any interest therein acquired by the Admin-
11 istrator pursuant to the provisions of this Act may be
12 exercised by the Administrator or by any officer or agent
13 appointed by him for that purpose without the execution
14 of any express delegation of power or power of attorney ;

15 (8) acquire, in any lawful manner, any property
16 (real, personal, or mixed, tangible or intangible) , when-
17 ever deemed necessary or appropriate to the conduct of 18 the activities authorized in sections 6 and 7 of this Act ;

19 (9) in addition to any powers, functions, privileges,
20 and immunities otherwise vested in him, take any and 21 all actions, including the procurement of the services of
22 attorneys by contract, determined by him to be neces-
23 sary or desirable in making, servicing, compromising,
24 modifying, liquidating, or otherwise administratively
25 dealing with or realizing on loans made under this Act ;

1 (10) to such an extent as he finds necessary to
2 carry out the provisions of this Act, procure the tem-
3 porary (not in excess of six months) service of experts
4 or consultants or organizations thereof, including steno-
5 graphic reporting services, by contract or appointment,
6 and in such cases such service shall be without regard to
7 the civil service and classification laws, and, except in
8 the case of stenographic reporting services by organiza-
9 tions, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised
10 Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5); any individual so employed
11 may be compensated at a rate not in excess of $75 per 12 diem, and, while such individual is away from his home
13 or regular place of business, he may be allowed trans-
14 portation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of 15 subsistence and other expenses; and

16 (11) establish such rules, regulations, and proce-
17 dures as he may deem appropriate in carrying out the 18 provisions of this Act.

19 TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

20 SEC. 13. Whenever the Administrator shall determine
21 that employment conditions within any area previously desig-
22 nated by him as a redevelopment area have changed to such
23 an extent that such area is no longer eligible for such desig-
24 nation under section 5 of this Act, no further assistance shall 25 be granted under this Act with respect to such area and,

1 for the purposes of this Act, such area shall not be considered
 2 a redevelopment area: Provided, That nothing contained
 3 herein shall (1) prevent any such area from again being
 4 designated a redevelopment area under section 5 of this Act
 5 if the Administrator determines it to be eligible under such
 6 section, or (2) affect the validity of any contracts or under-
 7 takings with respect to such area which were entered into
 8 pursuant to this Act prior to a determination by the Admin-
 9 istrator that such area no longer qualifies as a redevelop-
 10 ment area. The Administrator shall keep the departments
 11 and agencies of the Federal Government, and interested
 12 State or local agencies, advised at all times of any changes
 13 made hereunder with respect to the designation of any area.

14 URBAN RENEWAL

15 SEC. 14. Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as 16 amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the 17 following new section:

18 "REDEVELOPMENT AREAS UNDER THE AREA

19 REDEVELOPMENT ACT

20 "SEC. 113. (a) When the Area Redevelopment Admin-
 21 istrator certifies to the Administrator (1) that any county,
 22 city, or other municipality (in this section referred to as a
 23 'municipality') is situated in an area designated under sec-
 24 tion 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act as a redevelopment
 25 area, and (2) that there is a reasonable probability that with

1 assistance provided under such Act and other undertakings
2 the area will be able to achieve more than temporary im-
3 provement in its economic development, the Administrator
4 is authorized to provide financial assistance to a local public
5 agency in any such municipality under this title and the pro-
6 visions of this section.

7 “(b) The Administrator may provide such financial
8 assistance under this section without regard to the require-
9 ments or limitations of section 110(c) that the project area
10 be clearly predominantly residential in character or that it
11 be redeveloped for predominantly residential uses; but no
12 such assistance shall be provided in any area if such Admin-
13 istrator determines that it will assist in relocating business
14 operations from one area to another when such assistance
15 will result in substantial detriment to the area of original
16 location by increasing unemployment.

17 “(c) Financial assistance under this section may be
18 provided for any project involving a project area including
19 primarily industrial or commercial structures suitable for 20 rehabilitation under the urban renewal plan for the area.

21 “(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title,
22 a contract for financial assistance under this section may 23 include provisions permitting the disposition of any land in 24 the project area designated under the urban renewal plan
25 for industrial or commercial uses to any public agency or

1 nonprofit corporation for subsequent disposition as promptly
2 as practicable by such public agency or corporation for the
3 redevelopment of the land in accordance with the urban re-
4 newal plan: Provided, That any disposition of such land
5 under this section shall be made at not less than its fair
6 value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan:
7 And provided further, That the purchasers from or lessees
8 of such public agency or corporation, and their assignees,
9 shall be required to assume the obligations imposed under
10 section 105 (b).

11 “(e) Following the execution of any contract for finan-
12 cial assistance under this section with respect to any project,
13 the Administrator may exercise the authority vested in him
14 under this section for the completion of such projects, not-
15 withstanding any determination made after the execution of 16 such contract that the area in which the project is located
17 may no longer be a redevelopment area under the Area

19 URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

20 SEC. 15. Paragraph (3) of section 701 (a) of the Hous-
21 ing Act of 1954 is amended by inserting after “counties
22 which” the following: “(A) are situated in areas desig-
23 nated by the Area Redevelopment Administrator under sec-
24 tion 5 (a) of the Area Redevelopment Act as redevelopment
25 areas or (B)”.

1 VOCATIONAL TRAINING

2 SEC. 16. (a) The Secretary of Labor, in consultation
3 with the Administrator, shall determine the vocational train-
4 ing or retraining needs of unemployed individuals residing 5 in, or who were last employed in, redevelopment areas and 6 shall cooperate with the Secretary of Health, Education,
7 and Welfare and with existing State and local agencies and 8 officials in charge of existing programs relating to vocational 9 training and retraining for the purpose of assuring that the 10 facilities and services of such agencies are made fully avail-
11 able to such individuals.

THE AREA REDEVELOPMENT BILL

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference the area redevelopment bill; and I am very happy to have been joined by 43 other Senators as cosponsors.

I shall try to follow the injunction of my colleagues, so as to confine my remarks to 3 minutes.

Mr. President, this is the fourth Congress in which I have introduced an area redevelopment bill. The Senate has approved such a bill on three occasions. I hope the 87th Congress will consider the bill favorably and with a sense of urgency.

The need for this bill has increased during the 5 years since the Senate first approved the distressed area bill. Rising unemployment and inadequate economic growth have accentuated the problems of unemployment throughout the Nation. The number of distressed areas has increased. There are nearly 100 such areas of substantial and persistent unemployment. In these areas, there are at least 15 million people and over 600,000 unemployed. Unemployment throughout the Nation now exceeds 6 percent, but unemployment in the distressed areas is nearly twice as high, and in about a score of communities it exceeds depression proportions of 15 percent or more.

There are also hundreds of counties in predominantly rural areas where incomes are extremely low and unemployment is extremely high. These counties have an additional population of from 4 to 7 million.

The express purpose of the bill is to establish an effective program for reducing substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in the distressed areas of the country and to help maintain a continuing high level of economy throughout the United States.

This economically unhealthy situation creates hardship to many individuals and their families and impairs the national welfare by wasting human resources. This bill will assist communities, industries, enterprises, and individuals in distressed areas to achieve lasting local improvements by the development of new employment opportunities.

It is now generally accepted that the Federal Government has a responsibility to help assure maximum employment. This principle is now a part of the law of the land, through the enactment of the Employment Act of 1946. The persistence of high unemployment and underemployment in many areas should be fought by the Federal Government, not only because it causes great human suffering in these areas, but also because these conditions are a threat to the general welfare of the Nation. The bill which we offer recognizes this responsibility to the areas of chronic unemployment and underemployment and provides for a program which will help the people in these areas expand their economic activities. The bill proposes a program which will stimulate these areas to help themselves.

I am encouraged by the growing acceptance of the principles underlying the bill.

President-elect Kennedy, who was a great champion of the bill when he served in the Senate, has given the bill a high priority in his legislative program. In receiving the task force report last Sunday, the President-elect endorsed the principles of this bill, and stated:

It would be a mistake to consider the problems of chronic unemployment and underemployment solely in the context of the areas directly affected. The entire Nation suffers when there is prolonged hardship in any locality. This problem is especially critical today, for 1 out of every 10 persons in the United States lives in an area that now feels the impact of chronic unemployment or underemployment.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the text of the bill, a digest of the bill, the latest U.S. Department of Labor list of substantial and persistent labor surplus areas, and an editorial from the Washington Star of January 3, 1961.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill, digest, list, and editorial will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas, introduced by Mr. DOUGLAS (for himself and other Senators), was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Area Redevelopment Act".

DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The Congress declares that the maintenance of the national economy at a high level is vital to the best interests of the United States, but that some of our communities are suffering substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment; that such unemployment and underemployment cause hardship to many individuals and their families and detract from the national welfare by wasting vital human resources; that to overcome this problem the Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, should help areas of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment to take effective steps in planning and financing their economic redevelopment; that Federal assistance to communities, industries, enterprises, and individuals in areas needing redevelopment should enable such areas to achieve lasting improvement and enhance the domestic prosperity by the establishment of stable and diversified local economies; and that under the provisions of this Act new employment opportunities should be created by developing and expanding new and existing facilities and resources without substantially reducing employment in other areas of the United States.

AREA DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 3. In order to carry out the purposes of this Act, there is hereby established, within the executive branch of the Government, an Area Redevelopment Administration. Such Administration shall be under the direction and control of an Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be compensated at the same rate as that prescribed by law for an assistant secretary of an executive department.

ADVISORY BOARD

SEC. 4. (a) To advise the Administrator in the performance of functions authorized by this Act, there is authorized to be created an Area Redevelopment Advisory Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), which shall consist of the following members, all ex officio: the Administrator as Chairman; the Secretaries of Agriculture; Commerce; Defense; Health, Education, and Welfare; Interior; Labor; and Treasury; the Administrators of the General Services Administration; Housing and Home Finance Agency; and Small Business Administration; and the Director of the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization.

The Chairman may from time to time invite the participation of officials of other agencies of the executive branch interested in the functions herein authorized. Each member of the Board may designate an officer of his agency to act for him as a member of the Board with respect to any matter there considered.

(b) The Administrator shall appoint a National Public Advisory Committee on Area

Redevelopment which shall consist of twenty-five members and shall be composed of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and the public in general. From the members appointed to such Committee the Administrator shall designate a Chairman. Such Committee, or any duly established subcommittee thereof, shall from time to time make recommendations to the Administrator relative to the carrying out of his duties under this Act. Such Committee shall hold not less than two meetings during each calendar year.

(c) The Administrator is authorized from time to time to call together and confer with representatives of the various parties in interest from any industry, including agriculture, which has been a primary source of high levels of unemployment or underemployment in the several areas designated by the Administrator as redevelopment areas. The Administrator may also call upon representatives of interested governmental departments and agencies, together with representatives of transportation and other industries, to participate in any conference convened under authority of this subsection whenever he determines that such participation would contribute to a solution of the problems creating such unemployment or underemployment. The representatives at any such conference shall consider with and may recommend to the Administrator plans and programs to further the objectives of this Act with special reference to the industry with respect to which the conference was convened.

REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

SEC. 5. (a) The Administrator shall designate as "redevelopment areas" those areas within the United States in which he determines that there has existed substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended period of time. There shall be included among the areas so designated any area—

(1) where the rate of unemployment, excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal factors, is currently 6 per centum or more and has averaged at least 6 per centum for the qualifying time periods specified in subparagraph (2) below; and

(2) where the annual average rate of unemployment has been at least—

(A) 50 per centum above the national average for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

(B) 75 per centum above the national average for two of the preceding three calendar years, or

(C) 100 per centum above the national average for one of the preceding two years.

Any area in which a substantial part of the employment is or most recently was in an industry adversely affected by the reduction of trade barriers under the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951, as amended, with respect to which the President has reported to the Administrator under subsection (f) of this section, and meeting the standards of unemployment set forth in this section shall be entitled on application to a priority of consideration by the Administrator for designation as a redevelopment area.

(b) The Administrator shall also designate as "redevelopment areas" those areas (including Indian reservations) within the United States which do not meet the requirements set forth in subsection (a) but which he determines are among the highest in numbers and percentages of low-income families, and in which there exists a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment. In making the designations under this subsection, the Administrator shall consider, among other relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families in the various rural areas of the United States, the proportion that such low-income families are to the total farm families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of the families in each such area to the general levels of income in the United States, the current and prospective employment opportunities in each such area, the availability of manpower in each such area for supplemental employment, the extent of migration out of the area, and the proportion of the population of each such area which has been receiving public assistance from the Federal Government and/or from the State or States in which such area is located or from any municipality therein.

(c) In making the determinations provided for in this section, the Administrator shall be guided, but not conclusively governed, by pertinent studies made, and information and data collected or compiled, by (1) departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, (2) State and local governments, (3) universities and land-grant colleges, and (4) private organizations.

(d) Upon the request of the Administrator, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Interior are respectively authorized to conduct such special studies, obtain such information, and compile and furnish to the Administrator such data as the Administrator may deem necessary or proper to enable him to make the determinations provided for in this section. The Administrator shall reimburse, out of any funds appropriated to carry out the purposes of this Act, the foregoing officers for any expenditures incurred by them under this section.

(e) As used in this Act, the term "redevelopment area" refers to any area within the United States which has been designated by the Administrator as a redevelopment area and may include one or more States, one or more counties, or one or more municipalities, or a part of a county or municipality.

(f) In any case in which the President is required (1) under the provisions of subsection 4(a) of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951 to transmit a message to the Congress identifying an article with respect to which a trade agreement has caused or threatened to cause serious injury to a domestic industry, or (2) under the provisions of subsection 7(c) of such Act to submit a report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate stating why he has not made such adjustments in the rates of duties, imposed such quotas, or made such other modifications, as are found and reported by the United States Tariff Commission to be necessary to prevent or remedy serious injury to a domestic industry, he shall notify the Administrator and shall send him a copy of such message or report.

SEC. 6. (a) The Administrator is authorized to purchase evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (including immediate participations therein) to aid in financing any project within a redevelopment area for the purchase or development of land and facilities (including, in exceptional cases, machinery and equipment) for industrial or commercial usage, for the construction of new buildings, for rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, or for the alteration, conversion, or enlargement of any existing buildings for industrial or commercial use. Such financial assistance shall not be extended for working capital, or to assist establishments relocating from one area to another when such assistance will result in substantial detriment to the area of original location by increasing unemployment.

(b) Financial assistance under this section shall be on such terms and conditions as the Administrator determines, subject, however, to the following restrictions and limitations:

(1) The total amount of loans and loan participations (including purchased evidences of indebtedness) outstanding at any one time under this section (A) with respect to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(a) shall not exceed $100,000,000 (but not to exceed $30,000,000 prior to July 1, 1962), and (B) with respect to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(b) shall not exceed $100,000,000 (but not to exceed $30,000,000 prior to July 1, 1962);

(2) Except as provided in subsection (c), such assistance shall be extended only to applicants, both private and public (including Indian tribes), which have been approved for such assistance by an agency or instrumentality of the State or political subdivision thereof in which the project to be financed is located, and which agency or instrumentality is directly concerned with problems of economic development in such State or subdivision;

(3) The project for which financial assistance is sought is reasonably calculated to provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment within the redevelopment area wherein it is, or will be, located;

(4) No such assistance shall be extended hereunder unless the financial assistance applied for is not otherwise available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on reasonable terms;

(5) No loans shall be made unless it is determined that an immediate participation is not available;

(6) No evidences of indebtedness shall be purchased and no loans shall be made unless it is determined that there is a reasonable assurance of repayment;

(7) Subject to section 12(5) of this Act, no loan, including renewals or extension thereof, may be made hereunder for a period exceeding twenty-five years and no evidences of indebtedness maturing more than twenty-five years from date of purchase may be purchased hereunder: Provided, That the foregoing restrictions on maturities shall not apply to securities or obligations received by the Administrator as a claimant in bankruptcy or equitable reorganization or as a creditor in other proceedings attendant upon insolvency of the obligor, or if extension or renewal for additional periods, not to exceed, however, a total of ten years, will aid in the orderly liquidation of such loan or of such evidence of indebtedness;

(8) Such loans shall bear interest at a rate equal to the rate of interest paid by the Administrator on funds obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in section 9 of this Act, plus one-half of 1 per centum per annum: Provided, That an amount equal to one-fourth of 1 per centum per annum of the outstanding principal amount of any loan made under this section shall be allocated from the payments received by the Administrator in the form of interest on such loan to a sinking fund to cover losses on loans under this section;

(9) Such assistance shall not exceed 65 per centum of the aggregate cost to the applicant (excluding all other Federal aid in connection with the undertaking) of acquiring or developing land and facilities (including, in exceptional cases, machinery and equipment), and of constructing, altering, converting, rehabilitating, or enlarging the building or buildings of the particular project and shall, among others, be on the following conditions:

(A) That other funds are available in an amount which, together with the assistance provided hereunder, shall be sufficient to pay such aggregate cost;

(B) That not less than 10 per centum of such aggregate cost be supplied by the State or any agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision thereof, or by a community or area organization which is nongovernmental in character, as equity capital or as a loan;

(C) That in extending financial assistance under this section with respect to a redevelopment area, the Administrator shall require that not less than 5 per centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made shall be supplied by non-governmental sources;

(D) That any Federal financial assistance extended under this section in connection with a particular project shall be repayable only after other loans made in connection with such project and in accordance with this section have been repaid in full. If any Federal financial assistance extended under this section is secured, its security shall be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing other loans made in connection with the same project.

(10) No such assistance shall be extended unless there shall be submitted to and approved by the Administrator an overall program for the economic development of the area and a finding by the State, or any agency, instrumentality, or local political subdivision thereof, that the project for which financial assistance is sought is consistent with such program: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall authorize financial assistance for any project prohibited by laws of the State or local political subdivision in which the project would be located.

(c) If there is no agency or instrumentality in any State, or political subdivision thereof, qualified to approve applicants for assistance under this section as provided in paragraph (2) of subsection (b), the Administrator shall, upon determining that any area in such State is a redevelopment area, appoint a local redevelopment committee (hereinafter referred to as a "local committee") to be composed of not less than seven residents of such area who, as nearly as possible, are representative of labor, commercial, industrial, and agricultural groups, and of the residents generally of such area. In appointing any such local committee, the Administrator may include therein members of any existing local redevelopment committees. Financial assistance under this section in connection with projects located in a redevelopment area, for which a local committee has been appointed under this section, shall be extended only to applicants, both private and public (including Indian tribes), which have been approved by such local committee.

(d) Of the funds authorized to be raised under section 9 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans under this section with respect to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(a), and not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans under this section with respect to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(b).

LOANS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

SEC. 7. (a) Upon the application of any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public organization or association representing any redevelopment area or part thereof, the Administrator is authorized to make loans to assist in financing the purchase or development of land for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within any redevelopment area, if he finds that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelopment area wherein such project is, or will be, located, and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities;

(2) the funds requested for such project are not otherwise available on reasonable terms;

(3) the amount of the loan plus the amount of other available funds for such projects are adequate to insure the completion thereof;

(4) there is a reasonable expectation of repayment; and

(5) such area has an approved economic development program as provided in section 6(b)(10) and the project for which financial assistance is sought is consistent with such program.

(b) No loan under this section shall be for an amount in excess of 65 per centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made. Subject to section 12(5), the maturity date of any such loan shall be not later than forty years after the date such loan is made. Any such loan shall bear interest at a rate equal to the rate of interest paid by the Administrator on funds obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in section 9 of this Act, plus one-quarter of 1 per centum per annum.

(c) In making any loan under this section, the Administrator shall require that not less than 10 per centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made shall be supplied by the State (including any political subdivision thereof) within which such project is to be located as equity capital, or as a loan. In determining the amount of participation required under this subsection with respect to any particular project, the Administrator shall give consideration to the financial condition of the State or local government, and to the per capita income of the residents of the redevelopment area, within which such project is to be located.

(d) Any loan made under this section in connection with a particular project shall be repayable only after other loans made in connection with such project and in accordance with this section have been repaid in full. If any loan made under this section is secured, its security shall be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing other loans made in connection with the same project.

(e) No financial assistance shall be extended under this section with respect to any public facility which would compete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory body determines that in the area to be served by the public facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing facilities or through an expansion which it is prepared to undertake.

(f) Of the funds authorized to be raised under section 9 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans under this section: Provided, That not more than $30,000,000 shall be deposited in such fund prior to July 1, 1962.

GRANTS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

SEC. 8. (a) The Administrator may conduct studies of needs in the various redevelopment areas throughout the United States for, and the probable cost of, land acquisition or development for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of useful public facilities within such areas, and may receive proposals from any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public organization or association representing any redevelopment area, or part thereof, relating to land acquisition or development for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within any such area. Any such proposal shall contain plans showing the project proposed to be undertaken, the cost thereof, and the contributions proposed to be made to such cost by the entity making the proposal. The Administrator, in consultation with such entity, is authorized to modify all or any part of such proposal.

(b) The Administrator, pursuant to a proposal received by him under this section, may make grants to any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public organization or association representing any redevelopment area, or part thereof, for land acquisition or development for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within a redevelopment area, if he finds that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelopment area wherein such project is, or will be, located, and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities;

(2) the entity requesting the grant proposes to contribute to the cost of the project for which such grant is requested in proportion to its ability so to contribute; and

(3) the project for which a grant is requested will fulfill a pressing need of the area, or part thereof, in which it is, or will be, located, and there is little probability that such project can be undertaken without the assistance of a grant under this section.

The amount of any grant under this section for any such project shall not exceed the difference between the funds which can be practicably obtained from other sources (including a loan under section 7 of this Act) for such project, and the amount which is necessary to insure the completion thereof.

(c) The Administrator shall by regulation provide for the supervision of carrying out of projects with respect to which grants are made under this section so as to insure that Federal funds are not wasted or dissipated.

(d) No financial assistance shall be extended under this section with respect to any public facility which would compete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory body determines that in the area to be served by the public facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing facilities or through an expansion which it is prepared to undertake.

(e) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $75,000,000 for the purpose of making grants under this section: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000,000 shall be appropriated for such purpose prior to July 1, 1962.

FUNDS FOR LOANS

SEC. 9. To obtain funds for loans under this Act, the Administrator may, with the approval of the President, issue and have outstanding at any one time notes and obligations for purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury in an amount not to exceed $300,000,000: Provided, That the amount of such notes and obligations which are outstanding prior to July 1, 1962, shall not exceed $90,000,000. Such notes or other obligations shall be in such forms and denominations, have such maturities, and be subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but such rate shall not be greater than the current average yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obligations issued under this section and for such purpose is authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such Act are extended to include any purchase of such notes and other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations shall be treated in every respect as public debt transactions of the United States.

INFORMATION

SEC. 10. The Administrator shall aid redevelopment areas by furnishing to interested individuals, communities, industries, and enterprises within such areas any assistance, technical information, market research, or other forms of assistance, information, or advice which are obtainable from the various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government and which would be useful in alleviating conditions of excessive unemployment or underemployment within such areas. The Administrator shall furnish the procurement divisions of the various departments, agencies, and other instrumentalities of the Federal Government with a list containing the names and addresses of business firms which are located in redevelopment areas and which are desirous of obtaining Government contracts for the furnishing of supplies or services, and designating the supplies and services such firms are engaged in providing.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 11. In carrying out his duties under this Act, the Administrator is authorized to provide technical assistance to areas which he has designated as redevelopment areas under this Act. Such assistance shall include studies evaluating the needs of, and developing potentialities for, economic growth of such areas. Such assistance may be provided by the Administrator through members of his staff or through the employment of private individuals, partnerships, firms, corporations, or suitable institutions, under contracts entered into for such purpose. Appropriations are hereby authorized for the purposes of this section in an amount not to exceed $4,500,000 annually.

POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR

SEC. 12. In performing his duties under this Act, the Administrator is authorized to—

(1) adopt, alter, and use a seal, which shall be judicially noticed; and subject to the civil service and classification laws, select, employ, appoint, and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, and define their authority and duties, provide bonds for them in such amounts as the Administrator shall determine, and pay the costs of qualification of certain of them as notaries public;

(2) hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, and take such testimony, as he may deem advisable;

(3) request directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or

instrumentality information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics needed to carry out the purposes of this Act; and each department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment, or instrumentality is authorized to furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Administrator;

(4) under regulations prescribed by him, assign or sell at public or private sale, or otherwise dispose of for cash or credit, in his discretion and upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as he shall determine to be reasonable, any evidence of debt, contract, claim, personal property, or security assigned to or held by him in connection with the payment of loans made under this Act, and collect or compromise all obligations assigned to or held by him in connection with the payment of such loans until such time as such obligations may be referred to the Attorney General for suit or collection;

(5) further extend the maturity of or renew any loan made under this Act, beyond the periods stated in such loan or in this Act, for additional periods not to exceed ten years, if such extension or renewal will aid in the orderly liquidation of such loan;

(6) deal with, complete, renovate, improve, modernize, insure, rent, or sell for cash or credit, upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as he shall determine to be reasonable any real or personal property conveyed to, or otherwise acquired by, him in connection with the payment of loans made under this Act;

(7) pursue to final collection, by way of compromise or other administrative action, prior to reference to the Attorney General, all claims against third parties assigned to him in connection with loans made under this Act. This shall include authority to obtain deficiency judgments or otherwise in the case of mortgages assigned to the Administrator. Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (41 U.S.C. 5), shall not apply to any contract of hazard insurance or to any purchase or contract for services or supplies on account of property obtained by the Administrator as a result of loans made under this Act if the premium therefor or the amount thereof does not exceed $1,000. The power to convey and to execute, in the name of the Administrator, deeds of conveyance, deeds of release, assignments and satisfactions of mortgages, and any other written instrument relating to real or personal property or any interest therein acquired by the Administrator pursuant to the provisions of this Act may be exercised by the Administrator or by any officer or agent appointed by him for that purpose without the execution of any express delegation of power or power of attorney;

(8) acquire, in any lawful manner, any property (real, personal, or mixed, tangible or intangible), whenever deemed necessary or appropriate to the conduct of the activities authorized in sections 6 and 7 of this Act;

(9) in addition to any powers, functions, privileges, and immunities otherwise vested in him, take any and all actions, including the procurement of the services of attorneys by contract, determined by him to be necessary or desirable in making, servicing, comprising, modifying, liquidating, or otherwise administratively dealing with or realizing on loans made under this Act;

(10) to such an extent as he finds necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, procure the temporary (not in excess of six months) service of experts or consultants or organizations thereof, including stenographic reporting services, by contract or appointment, and in such cases such service shall be without regard to the civil service and classifications laws, and, except in the case of stenographic reporting services by organizations, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5); any individual so employed may be compensated at a rate not in excess of $75 per diem, and, while such individual is away from his home or regular place of business, he may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses; and

(11) establish such rules, regulations, and procedures as he may deem appropriate in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

SEC. 13. Whenever the Administrator shall determine that employment conditions within any area previously designated by him as a redevelopment area have changed to such an extent that such area is no longer eligible for such designation under section 5 of this Act, no further assistance shall be granted under this Act with respect to such area and, for the purposes of this Act, such area shall not be considered a redevelopment area: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall (1) prevent any such area from again being designated a redevelopment area under section 5 of this Act if the Administrator determines it to be eligible under such section, or (2) affect the validity of any contracts or undertakings with respect to such area which were entered into pursuant to this Act prior to a determination by the Administrator that such area no longer qualifies as a redevelopment area. The Administrator shall keep the departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and interested State or local agencies, advised at all times of any changes made hereunder with respect to the designation of any area.

URBAN RENEWAL

SEC. 14. Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

REDEVELOPMENT AREAS UNDER THE AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

"SEC. 113. (a) When the Area Redevelopment Administrator certifies to the Administrator (1) that any county, city, or other municipality (in this section referred to as a 'municipality') is situated in an area designated under section 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act as a redevelopment area, and (2) that there is a reasonable probability that with assistance provided under such Act and other undertakings the area will be able to achieve more than temporary improvement in its economic development, the Administrator is authorized to provide financial assistance to a local public agency in any such municipality under this title and the provisions of this section.

"(b) The Administrator may provide such financial assistance under this section without regard to the requirements or limitations of section 110(c) that the project area be clearly predominantly residential in character or that it be redeveloped for predominantly residential uses; but no such assistance shall be provided in any area if such Administrator determines that it will assist in relocating business operations from one area to another when such assistance will result in substantial detriment to the area of original location by increasing unemployment.

"(c) Financial assistance under this section may be provided for any project involving a project area including primarily industrial or commercial structures suitable for rehabilitation under the urban renewal plan for the area.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a contract for financial assistance under this section may include provisions permitting the disposition of any land in the project area designated under the urban renewal plan for industrial or commercial uses to any public agency or nonprofit corporation for subsequent disposition as promptly as practicable by such public agency or corporation for the redevelopment of the land in accordance with the urban renewal plan: Provided, That any disposition of such land under this section shall be made at not less than its fair value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan: And provided further, That the purchasers from or lessees of such public agency or corporation, and their assignees, shall be required to assume the obligations imposed under section 105(b).

"(e) Following the execution of any contract for financial assistance under this section with respect to any project, the Administrator may exercise the authority vested in him under this section for the completion of such project, notwithstanding any determination made after the execution of such contract that the area in which the project is located may no longer be a redevelopment area under the Area Redevelopment Act."

URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

SEC. 15. Paragraph (3) of section 701(a) of the Housing Act of 1954 is amended by inserting after "counties which" the following: "(A) are situated in areas designated by the Area Redevelopment Administrator under section 5(a) of the Area Redevelopment Act as redevelopment areas or (B)".

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

SEC. 16. (a) The Secretary of Labor, in consultation with the Administrator, shall determine the vocational training or retraining needs of unemployed individuals residing in, or who were last employed in, redevelopment areas and shall cooperate with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and with existing State and local agencies and officials in charge of existing programs relating to vocational training and retraining for the purpose of assuring that the facilities and services of such agencies are made fully available to such individuals.

(b) Whenever the Secretary of Labor finds that additional facilities or services are needed in the area to meet the vocational training or retraining needs of such individuals, he shall so advise the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, through the Commissioner of Education, shall provide assistance, including financial assistance when necessary, to the appropriate State vocational educational agency in the provision of such additional facilities or services. If the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare finds that the State vocational educational agency is unable to provide the facilities and services needed, he may, after consultation with such agency, provide for the same by agreement or contract with public or private educational institutions: Provided, That any vocational training or retraining provided under this section shall be designed to enable unemployed individuals to qualify for new employment in the redevelopment area in which they reside or were last employed.

(c) The Secretary of Labor shall arrange to provide any necessary technical assistance for setting up apprenticeships, and to promote journeyman and other job training in the area.

RETRAINING SUBSISTENCE PAYMENTS

SEC. 17. (a) The Secretary of Labor in consultation with the Administrator shall, on behalf of the United States, enter into agreements with States in which redevelopment areas are located, under which the Secretary of Labor shall make payments to such States for the purpose of enabling such States, as agents of the United States, to make weekly retraining payments to unemployed individuals residing within such redevelopment areas who are not entitled to unemployment compensation (either because their unemployment compensation benefits have been exhausted or because they were not insured for such compensation) and who have been certified by the Secretary of Labor to be undergoing vocational training or retraining under section 16 of this Act. Such payments shall be made only during the period the individual is receiving vocational training or retraining under section 16 of this Act, but not in any event to exceed sixteen weeks, and the amounts of such payments shall be equal to the amount of the average weekly unemployment compensation payment payable in the State making such payments.

(b) The Secretary of Labor and the Administrator shall jointly prescribe such rules and regulations as they may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Such report shall show, among other things, (1) the number and size of Government contracts for the furnishing of supplies and services placed with business firms located in redevelopment areas, and (2) the amount and duration of employment resulting from such contracts. Upon the request of the Administrator, the various departments and agencies of the Government engaged in the procurement of supplies and services shall furnish to the Administrator such information as may be necessary for the purposes of this section.

APPLICATION OF ACT

SEC. 26. As used in this Act, the term "United States" includes the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

The digest, list, and editorial presented by Mr. DOUGLAS are as follows:

DIGEST OF S. 1, AREA REDEVELOPMENT BILL

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This section would provide that the act may be cited as the "Area Redevelopment Act."

SECTION 2. DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

This section would declare it to be the purpose of the bill to provide Federal help for areas needing economic redevelopment so that they can expand their economic activities and alleviate the substantial unemployment and underemployment that prevail within such areas. This would be accomplished by assisting communities, industries, enterprises, and individuals to create new employment opportunities by developing and expanding new and existing facilities and resources, without substantially reducing employment in other areas of the United States.

SECTION 3. AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

This section would establish an Area Redevelopment Administration as an independent agency within the executive branch of the Government. The Administration would be headed by an Administrator appointed by the President and subject to confirmation by the Senate. The Administrator would receive a salary of $20,000 a year.

SECTION 4. ADVISORY BOARD

Subsection (a) would create an Area Redevelopment Advisory Board to advise the Administrator in the performance of his functions under the bill. The Board would be composed of the Administrator, as Chairman, and 11 other department and agency heads whose functions are related to (or could assist in) the improvement of economic conditions in redevelopment areas. Any member of the Board could designate an officer of his agency to act for him as a member of the Board. The Chairman could invite other interested officials in the executive branch to participate in the functions of the Board.

(b) would require the Administrator to appoint a 25-member National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment, to be composed of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and the general public, one of whom would be designated as Chairman by the Administrator. This Committee would be required to meet twice a year and make recommendations to the Administrator from time to time, to assist him in carrying out his duties under the bill.

(c) would authorize the Administrator to call together, confer with, and receive recommended plans and programs from, representatives of any industry which has been a primary source of high levels of unemployment in the areas designated by the Administrator as redevelopment areas. The Administrator would also be authorized to call upon representatives of interested governmental agencies, together with representatives of transportation and other industries, to participate in any conference called under this subsection.

SECTION 5. REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

The bill recognizes two types of redevelopment areas which will be eligible to receive Federal assistance under this bill.

Under subsection (a) an area may be designated a redevelopment area in any one of the following ways: (1) the Administrator may, at his discretion, determine that a given area has been subject to substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended period of time and designate the area an industrial redevelopment area; or (2) the Administrator must designate an industrial area as an industrial redevelopment area—

(1) where the rate of unemployment, excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal factors, is currently 6 percent or more and has averaged at least 6 percent for the qualifying time periods specified in subparagraph (2) below; and

(2) where the annual average rate of unemployment has been at least (a) 50 percent above the national average for 3 of the preceding 4 calendar years, or (b) 75 percent above the national average for 2 of the preceding 3 calendar years, or (c) 100 percent above the national average for 1 of the preceding 2 years.

Areas adversely affected by trade agreements concerning which the President has notified the Administrator under section 5(f) are given priority in consideration of designation as industrial redevelopment areas.

(b) sets forth the criteria for other redevelopment areas (including Indian reservations). The Administrator is directed to designate as redevelopment area which he determines are among the highest in numbers and percentages of low-income families, and in which there exists a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment. In making these designations the Administrator is required to consider, among other relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families in the various rural areas in the United States, the proportion such low-income families are to the total farm families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of families in each such area to the general levels of income in the United States, the current and prospective employment opportunities in each such area, the availability of manpower in each such area for supplemental employment and the proportion of the population receiving public assistance.

(c) provides that in making determinations concerning redevelopment areas the Administrator is to be guided, but not conclusively governed, by studies made and the available information compiled by the various Federal agencies, State and local governments, universities and private organizations.

Under (d) the Administrator may also request from the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of the Interior special studies and such information and data as he deems necessary to enable him to make the determinations provided for in this section. The Administrator is required to reimburse these agencies for expenditures which they incur in connection with filling his requests.

(e) defines the term "redevelopment area" to mean any area within the United States which has been designated by the Administrator as a redevelopment area. This provision limits the benefits of the act to the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

(f) requires the President to notify the Administrator when he reports to the Congress under the peril point procedure or when he reports to the Ways and Means and Finance Committees under the escape clause procedure of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951.

SECTION 6. LOANS AND PARTICIPATIONS

Under subsection (a) the Administrator is authorized to make loans (including participations), to assist in the purchase or development of land and facilities (including in exceptional cases machinery and equipment) for industrial use, or for the construction, rehabilitation, or alteration of industrial plants. This assistance shall not be extended for working capital or to assist establishments relocating from one area to another when such assistance will result in substantial detriment to the area of original location by increasing unemployment.

Subsection (b) imposes the following restrictions:

(1) The total amount of loans and participations outstanding at any one time in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(a) must not exceed $100 million, but not to exceed $30 million prior to July 1, 1962. Similar provisions are made for redevelopment areas designated under 5(b).

(2) The assistance may only be extended to applicants which have been approved for the purpose by an agency of the State or its political subdivision concerned with problems of economic development in the State or subdivision.

(3) The project will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment.

(4) The assistance may only be extended if such financial assistance is not otherwise available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on reasonable terms.

(5) An immediate participation is to be preferred to a loan.

(6) There must be reasonable assurance of repayment.

(7) The length of the loan may not exceed 25 years, plus an additional 10 years in the course of liquidating the loan.

(8) The interest must be one-half of 1 percent above the amount paid to the Secretary of the Treasury. One-quarter of 1 percent must be placed in a sinking fund to cover losses on loans.

(9) The assistance must not exceed 65 percent of the cost to the applicant, excluding other Federal aid, and the following conditions must be observed:

(A) Enough funds must be available to complete the project;

(B) At least 10 percent of the cost must be supplied by the State or a subdivision, community or area organization, as equity capital, or as a loan;

(C) In the case of a project in a redevelopment area designated under 5(a) not less than 5 percent of the cost must be supplied by nongovernmental sources;

(D) The Federal financial assistance must be repayable after other loans made in connection with the project and in accordance with this section have been repaid in full.

(10) An overall program for the economic development of the area must have been approved by the Administrator and a finding must be made by the State or a subdivision that the project is consistent with the program.

(c) provides that if there is no agency or instrumentality in a State or subdivision qualified to approve applicants under this section, the Administrator may appoint a local redevelopment committee consisting of seven or more residents of the area representing labor, commercial, industrial and agricultural groups and the residents of the area generally.

(d) creates a revolving fund of $100 million for projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(a) and another revolving fund of $100 million for projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(b).

SECTION 7. LOANS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

(a) Loans for public facilities may be made upon the application of a State or a political subdivision thereof, or an Indian tribe, or a private or public organization or association representing a redevelopment area. The loan may be made for the purpose of financing the purchase or development of land for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within the redevelopment area.

(1) The project must provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment, and must tend to improve the opportunities in the area for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities.

(2) The loan may not be granted if funds are available from other sources on reasonable terms.

(3) The amount of the loan plus other available funds must be sufficient for completion of the project.

(4) There must be a reasonable expectation of repayment.

(5) The area has an approved economic development program.

The loan is limited to 65 percent of the aggregate cost of the project, and it must mature within 40 years. The interest rate is to be one-quarter of 1 percent above the rate of interest paid by the Administrator to the Secretary of the Treasury.

(c) The Administrator must require that at least 10 percent of the cost of the project shall be supplied by the State (or any political subdivision thereof) as equity capital, or as a loan.

(d) The Federal loan is to be subordinate to other loans made in connection with the project and in accordance with this section.

(e) Prohibits financial assistance to a public facility which would compete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory body determines that in the area to be served by the public facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing facilities or through an expansion which it is prepared to undertake.

(f) A revolving fund of $100 million is set up, from funds borrowed from the Treasury. But not more than $30 million shall be deposited in the fund prior to July 1, 1962.

SECTION 8. GRANTS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

Subsection (a) authorizes the Administrator to make studies of the needs for public facilities in the various redevelopment areas and to make grants for the acquisition or development of land for public facility usage in redevelopment areas, and for the construction, rehabilitation, or improvement of public facilities in such areas.

(b) A grant may be made only pursuant to a proposal (showing the proposed project, its cost, and the proposed local contributions) received from the State or local government, Indian tribe, or from a public or private organization representing the redevelopment area.

Before the Administrator approves a grant he must find that (1) the proposed project will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the area, and will tend to promote industrial or commercial development, (2) the entity requesting the grant will contribute to the cost of the project in proportion to its ability, and (3) the project is urgently needed in the area and could not be undertaken without such a grant. No such grant could exceed the difference between the total cost of the project and the amount available for it from other sources (including loans under sec. 7 of the bill).

(c) Directs the Administrator to issue regulations to insure that Federal funds made available for public facility projects under this section are not wasted or dissipated.

(d) imposes a restriction on grants for public utilities like the restrictions imposed on loans under subsection 7(e) described above.

(e) would authorize an appropriation not exceeding $75 million for public facility grants under this section, of which $10 million shall be appropriated prior to July 1, 1962.

SECTION 9. FUNDS FOR LOANS

This section would authorize the Administrator to obtain funds for making loans under sections 6 and 7 of the bill by borrowing from the Treasury in amounts not exceeding $300 million outstanding at any one time. The amount of such notes and obligations shall not exceed $90 million prior to July 1, 1962. The interest rate on the notes and obligations representing this borrowing would be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury at a rate not greater than the current average yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations. The amounts thus obtained from the Treasury would be used to establish the revolving funds provided for in sections 6 and 7 of the bill.

SECTION 10. INFORMATION

The Administrator is authorized to extend to firms located in redevelopment areas technical information, market research data, and other forms of assistance obtainable from the various Federal agencies which might be useful to the areas in expanding employment.

In addition, the Administrator is directed to furnish Federal procurement agencies addresses of businesses located in redevelopment areas desirous of obtaining Government contracts. The lists shall specify the supplies and services in which the designated firms are engaged.

SECTION 11. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

This section authorizes the Administrator to offer technical assistance to redevelopment areas. Such technical assistance might consist of data concerning the resources and the economic potential of the areas and other information that may help the economic growth of these areas. The assistance may be provided directly through members of the staff of the Area Redevelopment Administration or through contracts with private individuals, partnerships, firms, corporations, or institutions. An amount not to exceed $4.5 million is appropriated under this section.

SECTION 12. POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR

This section provides the Administrator with the administrative powers needed to carry out the area redevelopment program under the bill. The Administrator is authorized by this section to engage in such business transactions, and to take such action to acquire, dispose of, and otherwise deal with both real and personal property and to enforce any rights, claims, and obligations, as may be necessary or appropriate in connection with the performance of his duties under the bill; and to establish such rules and regulations as may be appropriate in carrying out the provisions of the bill.

SECTION 13. TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

Under this section the Administrator is required to terminate the eligibility for area redevelopment assistance when he finds the economic conditions within the area have improved to the extent that the area is no longer eligible for designation under section 5.

An area may be redesignated as a redevelopment area, if the economic conditions within the area deteriorate to qualify again for redevelopment assistance. No action in terminating the eligibility of an area to receive aid under this bill will affect the validity of any contracts entered into prior to the termination of eligibility.

SECTION 14. URBAN RENEWAL

This is an amendment to title I of the Housing Act of 1949 and will be designated as section 113 of that act.

Subsection (a) provides financial assistance to local public agencies in any otherwise eligible municipality where the Area Redevelopment Administrator certifies to the Administrator (HHFA) that—

(1) the municipality is situated in an area designated as a redevelopment area, and

(2) there is a probability that such assistance will contribute to more than temporary improvement in economic development.

Subsection (b) waives the "predominantly residential" requirement of section 110(c) of title I of the Housing Act of 1949, but prohibits assistance to areas in which the Administrator determines that relocation of business operations from one area to another would result in increasing unemployment in the area of original location.

(b) amends section 110(c) of title I of the Housing Act of 1949 to include as an additional type of exemption industrial or commercial redevelopment areas as defined in section 112(a). This would require that Federal capital grants for all nonresidential projects, including the new exemption, be limited to 10 percent of total capital grant authorizations.

(c) permits financial assistance to an area containing primarily industrial or commercial structures suitable for rehabilitation under the urban renewal plan.

(d) authorizes disposition of land under this section to any public agency or nonprofit corporation for subsequent disposition provided that—

(1) such disposition shall be made to the public agency or nonprofit corporation at not less than fair market value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan;

(2) subsequent purchasers shall be required to assume the obligations imposed under section 105(b) of title I of the Housing Act of 1949. (Sec. 105(b) requires developer to proceed with development or redevelopment promptly and in accordance with an approved plan.)

(e) permits the Administrator to continue financial assistance to complete a project even though the area in which the project is located may no longer be a redevelopment area.

SECTION 15. URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

This section amends section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954 so as to make planning grants available to communities in redevelopment areas with a population in excess of 25,000.

SECTION 16. VOCATIONAL TRAINING

This section provides that the Secretary of Labor shall determine the training or retraining needs of the labor force in a redevelopment area.

(b) If the Secretary of Labor finds that additional training or retraining facilities are needed in a redevelopment area, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is required to assist the State vocational agency in requiring the needed vocational facilities or services. The Secretary of HEW may also enter into contracts, after due consultation with the State vocational agency, with public or private educational institutions to provide the needed facilities or services. The additional training or retraining provided under this subsection must be designed to enable the unemployed to qualify for new employment opportunities in the redevelopment area.

(c) The Secretary of Labor is required to provide technical assistance for setting up apprenticeship training facilities.

SECTION 17. RETRAINING SUBSISTENCE PAYMENTS

(a) The Secretary of Labor shall enter into agreements with States where redevelopment areas are located providing for weekly subsistence payments to unemployed persons undergoing retraining, who are not eligible to receive unemployment compensation. The subsistence payments made to any individual are limited to 16 weeks and shall be equal to the average weekly unemployment compensation benefits paid in the State.

(b) The Secretary of Labor and the Administrator shall prescribe the rules and regulations needed to carry out the provisions of subsection (a).

(c) An annual appropriation not to exceed $10 million is authorized for retraining subsistence payments.

SECTION 18. PENALTIES

Subsection (a) makes it a crime to knowingly make a false statement or willfully overvalue a security for the purpose of obtaining a loan or of influencing any action of the Administrator or to obtain money, property, or anything of value under the act.

Subsection (b) makes it a crime for any employee or agent of the Administrator to embezzle or misapply any money or securities, or make any false entries, or to issue or assign notes or other documents with intent to defraud, or to participate or share in any loan or contract made by the Administrator with intent to defraud, or to give out any unauthorized information about the actions or plans of the Administrator, or to invest or speculate in the securities of a company receiving assistance from the Administrator.

Violation of the above is punishable by a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

SECTION 19. EMPLOYMENT OF EXPEDITERS AND ADMINISTRATIVE EMPLOYEES

This section provides that a loan may not be made to a business enterprise unless the names of the attorneys and agents expediting the application and the fees paid to them are certified to the Administrator and unless an agreement is executed requiring the firm to refrain from employing or offering to employ or retain the professional services of an employee of the Administrator who exercised discretionary power at the time the assistance was granted or during the preceding year.

SECTION 20. RECORD OF APPLICATIONS

The Administrator is required to keep a public record of the approved applications, with the name or names of the applicants and the amount, duration and purposes of the loan, and the security given.

SECTION 21. PREVAILING RATE OF WAGE AND 40-HOUR WEEK

This section requires the Administrator to insure that all laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on projects undertaken by public applicants assisted under the act (1) be paid wages at rates no less than those prevailing on the same type of work on similar construction in the immediate locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor under the Davis-Bacon Act and (2) receive time and one-half for hours worked during a week in excess of 40.

SECTION 22. ANNUAL REPORT

This section would require the Administrator to submit a detailed and comprehensive annual report to the Congress, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1962. The report shall show, among other things, (1) the number and size of Government contracts placed with business firms located in redevelopment areas; and (2) the amount and duration of employment resulting from such contracts. The various procurement agencies, upon the request of the Administrator, are directed to furnish the Administrator such information as may be necessary to enable him to carry out his duties under this section.

SECTION 23. APPROPRIATIONS

This section provides authorization for appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of the act.

SECTION 24. USE OF OTHER FACILITIES

This section requires the Administrator to use available services and the advice of other Government agencies on a reimbursable basis, to the extent practicable and with their consent. It also requires Government agencies to exercise their powers, duties, and functions so as to assist in carrying out the objectives of the act.

SECTION 25. RECORDS AND AUDITS

This section requires borrowers under sections 6 and 7 to keep records of their activities and to allow the Administrator and the Comptroller General access to their records.

SECTION 26. APPLICATION OF THE ACT

The terms of this act are applicable to the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

Areas officially classified as "areas of substantial labor surplus" by the Bureau of Employment Security, which meet the additional criteria for designation as areas with "substantial and persistent" unemployment as summarized below:

SUMMARY OF CRITERIA FOR DESIGNATING "AREAS OF SUBSTANTIAL AND PERSISTENT LABOR SURPLUS"

1. Unemployment is now 6 percent or more of the labor force, discounting seasonal or temporary factors.

2. The annual average unemployment rate¹ in the area has been:

(a) At least 50 percent above the national average for 3 of the preceding 4 calendar years; or

(b) At least 75 percent above the national average for 2 of the preceding 3 calendar years; or

(c) At least 100 percent above the national average for 1 of the preceding 2 calendar years.

National average unemployment rates

Year:	Rate
1956-----	4.2
1957-----	4.3
1958-----	6.8
1959-----	5.5

Data on annual average unemployment rates for individual areas are based on information compiled from area labor market reports prepared by State employment security agencies in connection with the Bureau of Employment Security's regular program for the classification of areas according to the relative adequacy of labor supply. Reports containing such unemployment and labor force data are generally available on a bimonthly basis for the major areas, and semiannually for smaller areas. Preliminary data were utilized in some instances in determining the annual average unemployment rates.

OF HIGHEST PRIORITY

The need for some sort of governmental assistance to areas that are suffering deep and prolonged economic distress is one that is above and beyond partisan politics. It is, on the whole, a two-part need—calling for something in the nature of emergency relief for many individuals and for longer term efforts to rehabilitate many areas. The special labor-management-governmental study group headed by Senator DOUGLAS, of Illinois, has recognized these essentials of the problem and its recommendations to President-elect Kennedy contain constructive and worthwhile proposals. Mr. Kennedy, in turn, has promised the most important domestic priority to the matter, with the likelihood that congressional action in this field will be one of the first implementations of his campaign pledges.

Perhaps the simplest of the Douglas committee proposals, and one that presumably could be activated most promptly, is that of making additional surplus foodstuffs available for distribution in centers where long unemployment has left families with little or no means of self-support. Many such commodities are available, and the cost of their distribution would be insignificant in relation to the need. The committee also is on sound ground, while referring to unemployment insurance as a first line of defense against the hardships of joblessness, in proposing that there should be temporary Federal supplementation of the insurance funds in certain States, with a later effort to work out a "general improvement" in this portion of the social security system.

As a long-term proposition, it is evident that a massive revitalization of certain areas is essential if they are to escape a permanent state of depression. West Virginia, with its overwhelming dependence upon the suffering soft-coal industry, is a prime example but not the only one. As the Douglas committee points out, the problem of attracting new industries or reviving existing ones in such regions will require the thoughtful cooperation of all levels of government, from local to Federal, as well as imaginative private initiative.

Quite logically, no price tag has been placed on this overall attack on a problem of importance to the entire Nation. It is, in any case, a job that must be done and which should be tackled without hesitation. On both humanitarian and economic grounds, the need is urgent and the returns can be great.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CLARK subsequently said: Mr. President, shortly after last fall's election, President-elect Kennedy appointed a task force to deal with problems of areas of chronic unemployment. The task force consisted of 22 members and 6 consultants. The task force submitted its report to President-elect Kennedy. The committee met at Charleston, W. Va. and in Washington, D.C. In addition, the task force had available 7 subcommittee reports and nearly 50 reports from local committees throughout the nation appointed by President-elect Kennedy to survey their needs and to recommend programs for new jobs and new growth. The report, which was filed on December 29, was a unanimous report. I ask unanimous consent that the comments of President-elect Kennedy on receiving the report may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It would be a mistake to consider the problems of chronic unemployment and underemployment solely in the context of the areas directly affected. The entire Nation suffers when there is prolonged hardship in any locality. This problem is especially critical today, for 1 out of every 10 persons in the United States lives in an area that now feels the impact of chronic unemployment or underemployment.

I know I express the appreciation of the entire Nation for the services of the distinguished group of citizens who have participated in this project. It was not easy; all of them had to devote themselves completely to this task on a crash basis.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the index and the text of the report may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the index and report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KENNEDY TASK FORCE ON AREA REDEVELOPMENT, WASHINGTON, D.C., DECEMBER 27, 1960

(Introduction)

The Task Force on Area Redevelopment was appointed by President-elect John F. Kennedy to formulate a program of action to assist people in economically distressed areas.

These areas include (a) nearly 100 labor markets classified by the U.S. Department of Labor as areas of "substantial and persistent labor surplus," and (b) three to four hundred of the lowest-income rural-small urban areas plagued by underemployment.

A distressed area is typically a pocket of chronic unemployment which persists even during relatively prosperous times in the rest of the Nation. It is especially hard hit in times of recession. Currently, when the unemployment rate nationally is over 6 percent, the distressed area rate is over 10 percent, and in some instances as high as 20 percent. General economic recovery can be expected to reduce the unemployment rate in distressed areas somewhat, but not enough to enable them to enjoy a fair share of the Nation's prosperity.

Changes in consumer demand, depletion of resources, changes in defense procurement or in location of defense facilities, decentralization of production, lack of industrial diversification, and technological change are the most important causes of depressed economic conditions in the labor surplus areas.

The use of gas and oil rather than coal for home heating and railroad power is an example of changed consumer demand. This shift in consumer preference, accompanied by mechanization of mining operations, resulted in serious unemployment in large areas of Indiana, Illinois, the region of the Upper Great Lakes, Pennsylvania, Kentucky,

West Virginia, and many other communities along the Appalachian Range. Decreased consumer demand for wool textiles as a result of the development of synthetic fibers, as well as changes in plant location, have similarly left the textile towns of New England in a depressed condition.

The social impact of chronic unemployment is staggering. In September, 3.2 million persons obtained a distribution of Government surplus, amounting to a retail value of about only $9.36 per month per family of 4 persons. The number relying on surplus foods increases sharply in winter months. Along with the school lunch program, these surplus foods constitute the last line of resistance against malnutrition for hundreds of thousands of our fellow Americans. In West Virginia alone, in October, 281,000 people, out of a total population of 1.8 million, depended upon surplus food in order to sustain life.

There is wide bipartisan agreement that the distressed area problem cannot be resolved by private initiative alone. Government can lend a helping hand—local and State government as well as the Federal Government. It is also generally recognized that no one solution—no one plan or legislative enactment—can do the whole job for all distressed areas.

In the recommendations that follow, a diversity of programs is suggested. Some are urgent and demand immediate action, such as the relief of personal hardship, and the passage of an area redevelopment bill. Others refer to the priorities which should be assigned to the areas of chronic unemployment within existing or contemplated programs. Still others are recommendations which may be accepted or rejected, expanded or contracted, as experience is gained. Some are immediate and short term. Others are long range programs which cannot be carried out in a single year. Altogether, they serve as an arsenal from which specific weapons to combat the particular problems of a region or area which may be selected.

PART I. RELIEF OF PERSONAL HARDSHIP

1. Food

At present, flour, lard, dried eggs, dried milk, meal, and rice are on the surplus food distribution list. To improve the diet of needy persons in distressed areas, we recommend executive action to make additional surplus commodities available (such as butter, oatmeal, and peanut butter); to improve the distribution of surplus commodities with funds, personnel, storage space, and trucks; to assure that surplus commodities are made available regardless of State residence requirements; and to improve the management of the school lunch program so that it reaches every school in a distressed area.

We further recommend both executive and legislative action to permit the use of available funds to acquire foods temporarily not in surplus but necessary to provide a minimum balanced diet to those eligible for food grants; and both executive and legislative action to develop a food stamp plan, initially on a pilot basis, in the areas of greatest need.

2. Unemployment compensation

The current high national rate of unemployment has intensified the difficulties in the distressed areas. Unemployment insurance benefits have become the most significant first line of defense to eligible jobless wage earners. Our unemployment insurance legislation is in need of general improvement in the amount, duration, and financing of benefits. Pending such improvement, however, early action is necessary to meet the problems created by the exhaustion of unemployment insurance benefit rights for hundreds of thousands of wage earners.

To meet that problem, we recommend a temporary emergency unemployment insurance program along the general lines of the Temporary Unemployment Compensation Act of 1958. We urge, however, that the Federal funds advanced to the States should be in the form of grants rather than loans.

In addition, a Federal reinsurance program should be given high priority in the next Congress in order to protect States with a high proportion of distressed areas. Further increases in the taxes to finance unemployment compensation in those States will hinder efforts to attract new industry and will also discourage the growth of existing industry.

3. General assistance

The Federal system of grants-in-aid for public assistance does not provide any aid for the able-bodied, needy citizens and their families who have exhausted their unemployment compensation benefits. State programs for general assistance vary widely and most systems are inadequate to meet the needs. In 17 States, local funds are the only sources available to pay relief benefits to the employable needy, and the areas where the need is greatest often have the least economic resources from which to raise such funds.

We therefore recommend legislation to provide grants-in-aid to the States to help them finance adequate general assistance programs or, alternatively, an extension of the Federal aid-to-dependent-children program so that it will include children in need because their parents are unemployed.

4. Emergency public work projects

The question of whether a nationwide program of emergency public works projects should be undertaken as an antirecession measure is under consideration by another presidential task force. If such a program is authorized we believe that an appropriate portion of the available funds should be set aside for the distressed areas, and that among the authorized public works projects should be those for such purposes as local and regional access roads. These will be particularly helpful to distressed areas in overcoming their disadvantages in location and transportation. Distressed communities might also be relieved of some or all of any matching requirements, depending upon the extent of their resources. Also there should be projects which will enable these areas to develop their forest, water, and other resources.

If no national emergency public work programs are undertaken, then we recommend an emergency program of small public work projects limited to the distressed areas. The chronic low income in most of these areas has forced a chronic neglect of needed public works. Yet, without such improved public facilities, the private economy of these areas will probably never be successfully revived.

In the early 1930's, when we were struggling to overcome a national depression, we engaged in a great debate as to the relative desirability of public work projects as against direct relief. The decision was for public work, and for many reasons. The monuments of that decision—schools, improved forest and recreational areas, dams, roads, bridges—are now a part of our national wealth.

While we were then dealing with a national depression, an analogous situation exists when we are dealing—as we are now—with localized depressions. And for all of the reasons which contributed to a national decision for national public works to take people off the relief rolls and combat a national depression, we believe that a national decision should now be made for localized public works to take people off the relief rolls and combat localized depression.

Although eligibility standards for such aid must be drawn with great care, we believe that for the most distressed communities in the country there is no other adequate or self-respecting way to relieve long-standing hardship and begin the process of recovery.

PART II. DEVELOPMENT OF LONG-TERM JOB OPPORTUNITIES

The proposals for improved programs for the distribution of surplus food, unemployment compensation, public assistance, and emergency public work projects—while imperative to alleviate immediate hardship—are not the ultimate answers to the problem of the distressed areas.

From the standpoint of long-term public policy, the need is for permanent jobs.

Jobs sustain the morale of individuals and communities. Jobs add to individual and national wealth. When a job is provided for a man on relief, a taxpayer is substituted for a recipient of public assistance expenditures.

And jobs, not relief, are what the people of the distressed areas want.

This task force assumes that prompt and energetic measures will be taken by the new administration to create conditions under which the Nation will return to an adequate rate of economic growth. We further assume that recommendations for countering the current recession and stimulating expansion of the national economy are beyond the scope of our assignment. But nothing, from the standpoint of our own mission, is more important. Unless the national economy begins to grow at a rate fast enough to reduce substantially the current excessive national rate of unemployment, any special measures to benefit the distressed areas will be little more than palliatives.

The measures to insure adequate growth are varied. Some of them will operate quickly to provide job opportunities in the distressed areas; others will do so only over a longer period. But a many sided program should be enacted now to channel national growth, in greater degree than in the past, into areas of high and persistent unemployment and underemployment. Even in a period of more rapid economic growth, supplementary measures will still be necessary to develop and rehabilitate these areas. Only then will these areas be able to share fully in the rising volume of national production, and, in turn, contribute to national growth.

1. Area redevelopment legislation

The most immediate need is for legislation which will encourage new industry to locate, and existing industry to expand, in industrial areas of chronic unemployment, and in underdeveloped rural and small urban areas of underemployment which require a better balance of industry and agriculture.

Bills specifically designed for this purpose passed the Congress in 1958 and in 1960. They were thoroughly considered in extensive hearings by congressional committees, and there is wide agreement as to the general approach. In view of the need for quick action, it is recommended that an area redevelopment bill be enacted promptly by the Congress, and sent to the President for his signature.

The area redevelopment bill should propose a coordinated effort by the Federal, State, and local governments and private enterprise to redevelop the economies of areas with chronic unemployment and underemployment.

Such a bill should contain four main features:

(a) Technical Assistance

Careful programing is essential to successful efforts for economic redevelopment. Technical assistance must be provided to local bodies to enable communities and areas to plan intelligently their long-term economic development, explore fully the most constructive lines for their expansion, and create new locational advantages within their communities to attract private and public enterprise. Financial provisions should be contained within the legislation to enable the Administrator to assist these communities in programing their development course.

(b) Loans for Private Projects

The construction of industrial and commercial buildings, including tourist facilities, at attractive financial terms is frequently essential to the economic redevelopment of distressed areas and the creation of jobs. The evidence is conclusive that conventional lending facilities in distressed areas cannot provide fully for the long-term credit needed for such construction. The area redevelopment bill, therefore, should provide for loans that will attract business firms to these areas. Because the Federal Government should not subsidize these loans, the interest rate should therefore be fixed somewhat higher than the Federal Government pays on loans of comparable maturities. The bill should require that at least 35 percent of the capital investment come from non-Federal sources.

The purpose of financing these new projects is to assist in the creation of new enterprises rather than in the relocation of established firms.

(c) Loans and Grants for Public Facilities

Modernized public facilities are often prerequisites to the establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities. Some communities are unable to support the needed public facilities because of limited financial resources resulting from the deterioration of the tax base or chronic low income.

A loan program is needed to realize these facilities in such communities. In extreme cases it will be necessary to provide grants to enable communities to provide the facilities, such as access roads, industrial water, industrial parks, and public utilities where lacking, to make them attractive for industrial or commercial facilities. In most cases it is anticipated that grants will be related to the ability of the community and the State to contribute to such ventures.

(d) Training, Retraining, and Subsistence

It is also essential for a successful redevelopment program that the Federal Government, in cooperation with State, local, and private organizations expand the facilities and opportunities for training and retraining the labor force in the distressed areas in the new skills required in industry and commerce.

To make it financially possible for workers to undertake the training and retraining, those who are not entitled to or have exhausted their unemployment insurance should be paid subsistence payments during the period of training and retraining.

(e) Secondary Market for Industrial Mortgages

Many communities which have suffered heavy unemployment over a long period have invested large sums, including funds raised by popular subscription through community development organizations, in long-term industrial mortgages. But these communities, some of which pioneered in self-help operations, now find their available risk capital tied up in these mortgages, and are running out of financial resources. In order to free their funds for new investment in enterprises which will create the required new jobs, the Area Redevelopment Administrator should study the feasibility of allowing financial institutions in distressed areas, especially community development groups, to rediscount their industrial mortgages with some agency of the Federal Government. This could follow the general pattern established for the purchase of real estate mortgages by the Federal National Mortgage Association.

(f) Loan Insurance

The Administrator should also study the desirability of establishing a program of loan insurance to supplement the direct loan program contemplated in the area redevelopment program.

2. Federal procurement

We are deeply concerned that only about 1 percent of the value of all military prime contract awards is assigned to areas of substantial labor surplus as a result of any action by the military departments to assist these areas.

(a) We recommend that there be established at the requirements planning levels of defense and defense-related agencies positions to be filled by highly qualified technicians, employed by a different agency of the Federal Government, with responsibility to recommend ways and means to most effectively utilize production and manpower capabilities in areas of substantial labor surplus, including small businesses, in these areas.

We recommend that the President direct procurement agencies to require prime contractors to submit in their proposed bids detailed information regarding the maximum use of manpower and facilities located in substantial and persistent labor surplus areas. The procurement agencies should then require successful bidders to carry out such plans.

(b) It should be the policy of the Federal Government to encourage firms in distressed areas to participate fully in Government procurement. We recommend that the President direct Federal procurement agencies to make maximum use of competitive bids and set-asides. We also recommend that procurement agencies energetically implement the provisions of Defense Manpower Order No. 4 by assuring that firms in distressed areas participate to the maximum extent in Government procurement activities.

(c) If a general Government policy is adopted looking toward the additional dispersal of plants for defense production and defense-related installations, we believe that labor surplus areas should be given preferred consideration in the choosing of these new sites. The same principle should apply with respect to the dispersal, relocation, or new location of nondefense agencies and facilities of the Federal Government.

(d) In view of evidence submitted to the Task Force that some distressed areas have been deprived of some of their markets when other more expensive fuels have been offered to Government-owned installations, we recommend that an Executive order be issued which will require all Government-owned installations which are now in existence, or which may be constructed, should use that fuel which is most economical on the basis of an accurate, realistic, and impartial cost survey.

3. The development of human resources

The long-continued low income levels in some of the Nation's distressed and underdeveloped regions have also resulted in a relative underdevelopment of human talent. Local financial resources have not been sufficient to provide educational opportunities which are equal to those of other areas, and a large proportion of the more highly educated individuals have left their home communities for the more prosperous sections of the country. This migration has in turn handicapped these areas in their efforts to attain a healthy role of economic growth.

To reverse this trend requires outside help.

(a) Raising of Educational Standards

The educational lag in these regions cannot be overcome without Federal aid. It is the assumption of this task force that Federal aid on a nationwide basis will be instituted during the coming year. We recommend that such a program should embody an equalization formula to assure additional assistance to the poorer areas. Once such a program is enacted, we recommend that the President instruct the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to determine what further legislation may be needed to enable these areas to provide educational opportunities equal to those offered citizens who live elsewhere, and to deal in the immediate future with the special education and training problems which currently limit the opportunities of young people in these areas.

(b) Training, Retraining, and Placement

Studies have shown that even in areas of high unemployment and even in the midst of recessions there are jobs for those with the right skills. Moreover, the possession of a skill which is in demand can enable an unemployed person to leave the area to find employment elsewhere.

Pending new legislative authority, a supplemental appropriation should be sought under the Vocational Act of 1946 earmarked for this specific purpose in order to permit a beginning to be made in the fiscal year 1961.

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor should investigate the feasibility of providing funds to defray the cost of transportation to jobless workers while undergoing training.

Entering upon a retraining program should moreover not disqualify for unemployment compensation a person who is otherwise eligible.

In addition, the Secretary of Labor should make a special study to see how the functions of the employment service may be improved, so that available workers can be more effectively matched with available jobs.

(c) Services to Persons With Special Employment Problems

A person looking for work may have a special disadvantage if he is too old or too young, if he is unskilled or has the wrong skill, if he has a physical handicap, or if he is colored. While the problems of "hard to place" persons are national in scope, they are always more severe in areas of heavy unemployment.

The Employment Service has a smaller staff today than 13 years ago (10,460 compared to 12,124). We recommend placing additional specially trained vocational counselors in key employment offices in redevelopment areas to serve workers who have special employment problems. We also recommend sending task forces of experts in counseling, guidance, and job development into a community whenever a major unemployment crisis such as a mine or plant shut down either occurs or threatens to occur.

To ease the burden of unemployment on the older workers, we recommend the amendment of the Social Security Act to permit retirement of male workers at age 62 with correspondingly reduced annuities.

We further recommend that the President establish a Committee on Special Problems of the Labor Force, and assign its responsibility for a program of educational and community planning and action to break down arbitrary barriers to the employment of all the groups of disadvantaged workers.

(d) Manpower Studies

We believe that responsibility should be clearly placed upon an existing or new unit in the Executive Office of the President to provide the leadership for and the coordination of the activities of the Federal Government in the entire area of manpower and the development of human resources.

4. The development of physical resources and use of other special inducements

Many of the Nation's distressed communities are located in underdeveloped regions with a rich natural resource potential. Yet, because of disadvantages of transportation, location, and topography, often amounting to inaccessibility, these resources have not been developed as rapidly as those of other areas. Lack of development has resulted in relatively low income, which, in turn, has resulted in a deficiency of capital. To reverse this downward spiral requires outside capital. In some cases the resource, such as a forest, has been depleted and is no longer an adequate source of employment in the production of timber, water development, and outdoor recreational facilities.

As resources are rehabilitated income and capital will be generated locally, providing the base for needed economic growth.

The emergency public work programs, the area redevelopment legislation, and other programs and actions proposed in this report should be administered with a view to their maximum contribution to the long-term development of the natural resources of the distressed areas. In addition, Federal assistance on a long-term basis is needed in several specific resource categories:

(a) Highways

The curtailment of the Federal-aid highway program throughout the Nation by imposition of contract controls has had a particularly injurious effect on States containing distressed areas, because these are the States which, because of relatively low income, have lagged in highway construction. We recommend that the President take executive action to terminate the restrictions which have prevented the States from making use of the full amount of Federal-aid highway funds legally available to them.

We recommend further that the President urge the several States, wherever feasible within the framework of prescribed criteria, to give priority to highway improvement projects located in or near economically distressed areas.

Special emphasis should be given to bringing chronically distressed areas into the mainstream of economic life through feeder road construction where isolation of large numbers of people prevents modern economic development.

The criteria for highway routing and capacity should take into account how economic growth can be stimulated, particularly in areas which have lagged in growth.

(b) Forests

As part of the program for emergency public works, a supplemental appropriation should be made to the Forest Service for the current fiscal year to permit timber-stand improvement, reforestation, trail and road construction, watershed improvement, erosion control, and development of recreation facilities in national forests in or adjacent to distressed areas.

For a longer range program, we recommend that the President direct the Secretary of Agriculture to present to the Congress during 1961 a plan for forest development in distressed areas, to include restoration of productivity and income-producing capability of the small private forest lands and strip-mined forest areas.

In addition to accelerating the conservation work on the national forests at once, their long-range plans should be adjusted and accelerated in a way that will give emphasis to the work needed in distressed areas over the next several years. There should also be fully utilized the authority to create new national forests where this solution is indicated.

(c) Parks

Similarly, a supplemental appropriation should be made to the National Park Service for Mission 66 projects in areas of economic distress with special emphasis upon facilities which will encourage the tourist industry.

To help promote the tourist industry in distressed areas, special authorization and appropriation should be provided to assist States to develop recreational facilities, such as roadside parks and campsites. The program would be administered by the National Park Service in cooperation with the States.

(d) Agricultural Conservation

As part of the emergency program, a supplemental appropriation should be made for the current fiscal year to the Soil Conservation Service for a land conservation work program to be administered through local soil conservation districts. The work to be stressed would include reforestation on farms and strip mine spoil areas, stream bank stabilization and erosion control, and small water control structures.

As a long-term measure, funds in the agricultural conservation program should be earmarked for permanent conservation practices providing maximum local employment in distressed areas, such as forestry on private land held by low-income landlords, with up to 100 percent of the cost to be borne by the Federal Government. Manpower would be obtained from local unemployed personnel, and the work to be stressed should be timber stand improvement and erosion control.

(e) Fuels and Minerals

(1) Coal and fossil fuels research

The coal and fossil fuel rich areas need basic and applied research to provide new uses to maintain existing uses and to promote stability of employment.

We recommend an additional appropriation for the new Office of Coal Research and the intensification of cooperative studies with State and private groups.

(2) Minerals

In some areas higher quality minerals have been exhausted while elsewhere they are being neglected because methods have not been developed economically to extract and process certain low quality ores, or sufficient economic uses have not yet been discovered for other minerals.

We propose, therefore, that the minerals research program of the Bureau of Mines be expanded.

(3) National fuels policy

We recommend development of a national fuels policy. The lack of a national fuels policy is an underlying reason for some of the existing conditions of distress in the coal producing regions and in some independent oil producing communities. A national fuels policy would help alleviate prevalent distress, would help improve the economic health of these industries, and would be beneficial to the Nation's security.

(f) Other Public Works

A supplemental appropriation should be made to initiate construction of authorized projects for clear streams, navigation and flood control, pollution abatement, sealing of abandoned mines, public buildings, and other public works projects in or near areas of economic distress.

The agencies should be instructed to initiate or accelerate planning on new projects which provide opportunities for economic development in distressed areas, and to submit for Presidential approval projects on which planning is complete and which are ready for authorization.

The U.S. Army Engineers should be urged to take a new look in labor surplus areas at water resource projects previously classed as inactive so as to determine the possibility of their being placed again in the active category, and proper consideration should be given to all factors, including even flow and employment benefits in the selection of projects for authorization.

(g) Youth Conservation Corps

We recommend enactment of a bill to create a Youth Conservation Corps as provided by S. 812, passed by the Senate in 1959. Such a corps would provide manpower to expedite some of the kinds of projects of the type discussed earlier for National and State forests and parks while drawing enrollees locally to the greatest extent feasible and giving priority to locally experienced men as supervisors.

(h) Consideration of Special Tax Amortization

As additional encouragement to private industry to locate branch plants in chronic and persistent labor surplus areas and to expand existing enterprises in these areas, consideration should be given to the question of whether special tax amortization providing for accelerated writeoffs of plant and equipment would help to encourage industries to locate or expand production facilities in such areas.

5. Special regional development problems

We believe that in some regions of the country, where economic problems are particularly deep-seated and severe, the resource development activities described above need to be coordinated into broad regional developmental programs.

A region where such an approach is appropriate may be defined as one which, although it may contain islands of prosperity, suffers retarded economic growth in the region as a whole, has a level of income well below those of surrounding regions, and experiences a general underutilization of its labor force.

One such region is easy to identify—the Appalachian area which extends from New York to Alabama and contains portions of 11 States. The economy of the region suffers from the decline of the coal industry, disadvantages of topography, transportation, and highway deficiencies, and isolation from major population centers.

Other regions with special problems include the textile region of New England and upper New York; the region of declining timber and iron ore production of the upper Great Lakes States; certain underdeveloped rural and small-town areas of the South, Southwest, and Far West; and the coal region of southern Illinois and Indiana.

We urge a program of regional development commissions to attack the special problems of each region and to propose means for formulating and carrying out comprehensive development programs.

As an immediate step, we recommend that the President appoint such a commission for at least one of these major areas. Both because of its size and the severity of its problems, we believe that such a commission might well be set up first for the Appalachian region. This in turn could serve as a possible pilot project for similar efforts in other regions.

6. The prevention of distressed areas

Our recommendations thus far have related to the alleviation of distress and economic revival within areas now classified as distressed.

Of perhaps equal importance, though infinitely more difficult, is the development of an early warning system to detect the beginning of trends which lead to localized depressions and the development of measures for the correction of such trends before the problem becomes acute.

It is now apparent that the automation of particular industries, such as the steel industry, may result in a new group of distressed areas.

We therefore recommend that the President give consideration, through whatever agency he deems appropriate, to the problem of structural changes in the economy which produce unemployment, with particular emphasis on automation and with the job of devising such an early warning system together with remedial measures.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I consider my cosponsorship of the area redevelopment bill, introduced today by the learned and devoted senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], to be both a privilege for which I am grateful and a responsibility I owe to my constituency.

Beyond these personal and parochial considerations, I believe it is incumbent upon me as a U.S. Senator to support and to work diligently for the enactment of the measure as introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] because I construe it to be legislation in the national interest.

Earlier this week, President-elect John F. Kennedy released the report of a task force he had appointed to deal with problems of areas of chronic unemployment. Upon receiving the report, the President-elect is quoted as having stated in a press release:

It would be a mistake to consider the problems of chronic unemployment and underemployment solely in the context of the areas directly affected. The entire Nation suffers when there is prolonged hardship in any locality. This problem is especially critical today, for 1 out of every 10 persons in the United States lives in an area that now feels the impact of chronic unemployment or underemployment.

I communicated to the President-elect my concurrence with his statement, and I reminded him that I have spoken frequently in the Senate concerning my view that there is erosion of the total economy growing out of inattention to conditions of chronic labor surplus and areas of unemployment and underemployment.

It is my purpose not only to refer approvingly at this time to the area redevelopment bill introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], with my cosponsorship and that of a substantial number of our colleagues, but also, I reiterate the portion of my message to the President-elect in which I stated:

I am privileged to support fully the most helpful report and sound recommendations of the Kennedy task force on area redevelopment. There is widespread appreciation by West Virginians for the constructive method of approach you sponsored in efforts to seek solutions for the problems of our State. Likewise, I have the feeling that there is similar national acceptance of and gratification with the broader representative pattern you so properly established in the courageous and necessary search for means to alleviate human suffering and joblessness in all chronic labor surplus areas and over the Nation as a whole.

After the task force recommendations have been evaluated by you, and when the new administration's program in this vital area of national concern has been formulated, be assured that it will be my desire and intent to work cooperatively and diligently with you and your staff, and with others who will be in places of authority in the Government under your wise, vigorous, and forthright leadership. We must bring this program to fruition.

As one who served in consultative capacity with the Kennedy task force dealing with problems of areas of chronic unemployment, I join you in paying deserved tribute to the distinguished chairman (the senior Senator from Illinois) and members of that outstanding group for their patriotic and unselfish services. The excellent product of their labors will serve as guidelines for progress on the new frontier.

In this connection, I commend the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] and wish to associate myself with his comments concerning the same Task Force when, earlier today, he inserted the text of its report in the RECORD.

A vital portion of that report deals with the subject of area redevelopment legislation in the development of long-term job opportunities. I agree with the task force finding that:

Proposals for improved programs for the distribution of surplus food, unemployment compensation, public assistance, and emergency public work projects—while imperative to alleviate immediate hardship—are not the ultimate answers to the problem of the distressed areas. From the standpoint of long-term public policy, the need is for permanent jobs. And jobs, not relief, are what the people of the distressed areas want. Unless the national economy begins to grow at a rate fast enough to reduce substantially the current excessive national rate of unemployment, any special measures to benefit the distressed areas will be little more than palliatives.

Even in a period of more rapid economic growth, supplementary measures will still be necessary to develop and rehabilitate these areas. Only then will these areas be able to share fully in the rising volume of national production, and, in turn, contribute to national growth.

The most immediate need is for legislation which will encourage new industry to locate, and existing industry to expand, in industrial areas of chronic unemployment, and in underdeveloped rural and small urban areas of underemployment which require a better balance of industry and agriculture. In view of the need for quick action, it is recommended that an area redevelopment bill be enacted promptly by the Congress, and sent to the President for his signature.

Mr. President, the measure introduced today by the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], is an adequate bill—a very necessary item of legislation—and I cosponsor it enthusiastically and will support it vigorously.

Mr. President, I am grateful that the bill which has been presented by my able colleague from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] and other Senators will receive early and favorable consideration by the Members of this body. It is important that we realize the fact that thrice the Senate of the United States has passed legislation to aid the distressed areas of the Nation, the deep pockets of poverty and unemployment and labor surplus throughout the country.

On two occasions Congress passed area redevelopment legislation. In the first instance the legislation received a pocket veto in 1958, and in the second instance there was a veto by the President in 1960. The Senate did not override.

The essence of the earlier legislation, included in the current bill, should be passed early this session, and then the measure will go to the White House. We already have a positive assurance, a pledge made during a vigorous campaign by our President-elect that he, as Chief Executive, if he were chosen by the electorate of this country, would sign such a bill.

There is an urgency about the situation, and, as already indicated, these remarks should be printed at an appropriate place in the RECORD, which I believe will be in connection with remarks made by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] earlier today.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I am very much in favor of distressed areas legislation directed particularly toward those areas of chronic unemployment which have suffered, which have not shared the general prosperity enjoyed by much of the rest of the country over a number of years.

I have supported depressed areas legislation when I was a Member of the other body and in this body. I believe the first bill I introduced in the 86th Congress was on that subject.

I have today introduced S. 6, my first bill in the 87th Congress. It is a bill substantially similar to the bill known last session as the Scott-Van Zandt bill. The Scott-Van Zandt bill provided for expenditures of $200 million. S. 6 would provide for $214 million.

I have spoken to the Senate previously with regard to the proposals contained in my bill, and I have also submitted an analysis of the bill, which I commend to all Senators. In my judgment, the bill is one which deserves serious consideration. I should like to have it considered in the course of the debate on the subject.

The bill had the support of the Vice President during speeches he made in the past year. It will be introduced in the other body, in my opinion, by certain Members of the House.

I commend the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] for their great interest in this matter. I hope that from among the several proposals submitted we may be able to get a workable, effective bill which will meet the views of the other body and which can be signed by the next President. I sincerely hope the bill will be pointed directly toward the objective of depressed areas assistance—the retraining of personnel to provide them with new skills; assistance to industry to move in without endangering existing industry in another part of the country; and help to the communities which, because of changing economic conditions, through no fault of their own, have not kept pace with the general forward economic growth and prosperity of the United States.

I thank the distinguished Senator from West Virginia for yielding to me.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I respond by simply stating that the Senator from Pennsylvania has had a very genuine concern for the passage of proposed legislation in this field. We have disagreed as to some of the particulars, but it is important for me to remember today, as I do, that in the 86th Congress and prior to that Congress there was a very vigorous effort on the part of the Senator from Pennsylvania to meet this problem and to be realistic in the solving of a very tragic situation in certain areas, sections, and States within the Republic. I congratulate the Senator.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the able Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, while the two distinguished Senators who have spoken are present in the Chamber I should like to express an opinion, which I think is not only an opinion entertained by the Senator from Florida but also an opinion entertained by many other Senators.

I do not think there is anyone in the Senate who does not wish to be duly sympathetic with grave problems of continued unemployment, poverty, ill health, and other things which go with depressed areas, with all the deterioration of morale. The trouble has been that the bills we have had under consideration have not dealt directly with those problems in such a way as to give relief where it was needed, and to stay away from the problem of setting up a tremendous organization to go into other areas where there was nothing like such distress.

The Senator from Florida knows what he is talking about, because, as was admitted on the floor of the Senate by our distinguished friend, the Senator from Illinois, the last bill included four counties of the State of Florida as distressed areas.

I pointed them out on the map. In no sense of the word were they distressed or depressed. They were among our highly prosperous counties; namely, Leon County, in which our capital city of Tallahassee is located; Escambia County, where the great naval air station is located; Gadsden County, where wrapper leaf tobacco is raised, and where agriculture is probably more prosperous on the average than in any other county in our State; and Alachua County, where the great University of Florida is located, in addition to numerous other important institutions.

It is not necessary to put out a sop to the Senators from Florida or, I am confident, to Senators from any other State to vote for legislation which realistically deals with this problem. The Senator from Florida has been in a part of the coal area in West Virginia and has been in the anthracite area of Pennsylvania; and he knows perfectly well that there is great distress and tremendous depression in those areas. Certainly he would like to do something to help that situation.

The Senator from Florida handled in subcommittee, in full committee, on the floor of the Senate, and in conference the measure under which food was made available and under which such foods as flour, grits, and meal were processed and packaged in such form that they could reach the recipients.

It is quite possible that that measure did not go far enough, and certainly the Senator from Florida would want to see it go as far as it was designed to go—that is, to give a reasonable measure of satisfying food to the people who are affected—and he would like to go further in the various ways that have been suggested on the floor. But he hopes with all his heart that these two Senators who have introduced bills and others who are so vitally interested in this program will not again bring to the floor of the Senate legislation which includes areas which have no problem with these depressed and distressed areas, many of whose forlorn people are forced to leave the areas in which they have long resided. It is to that point the Senator from Florida wished to address himself at this time. I am sure that every Senator and Representative would like to show by his vote, sympathy and helpfulness in a practical and reasonable way. I hope that the proposal which reaches the floor of the Senate will be one which does not simply try to give something to every State, no matter how prosperous it might be. I hope I may be able to cooperate in the fullest measure with my two friends, the distinguished Senators who are now on the floor. I hope to be in a position to support the proposed legislation. If it is in the form in which it was at the last session, I shall not be able to do so.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I wish to clarify something referred to by the senior Senator from Florida. I am sure the distinguished Senator will be interested in the fact that the criteria contained in my bill are the same criteria which were contained in the bill which I introduced in the last session and in the administration compromise bill known as S. 3569. I am very pleased that the new Douglas bill has adopted the same unemployment criteria as were contained in my previous bill and as are contained in the present bill. These could be referred to as tighter criteria, a more careful delimitation of the target areas involved. The main difference between the Douglas bill and the Scott bill, although there are other differences, in my mind is the difference in the amounts of money appropriated for certain specific propositions contemplated in those two bills. The tighter criteria are embodied in the bill, and were embodied in S. 722, but were not in the original Douglas bill.

ASSISTANCE TO SMALL BUSINESS BY ALLOWING CERTAIN DEDUC- TIONS FOR INCOME TAX PUR- POSES

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I introduce a bill providing for a tax adjustment for small and medium-size businesses. The bill is identical to S. 59 of the last Congress, in which I was joined by 15 of my esteemed colleagues as sponsors, including 8 members of the Senate Committee on Small Business.

Today I am particularly pleased that all 17 members of the Small Business Committee are joining in sponsoring this important bill. The full list of cosponsors reads as follows: Senators LONG of Louisiana, HUMPHREY, SMATHERS, MORSE, BIBLE, RANDOLPH, ENGLE, BARTLETT, WILLIAMS of New Jersey, MOSS, SALTONSTALL, SCHOEPPLE, JAVITS, COOPER, SCOTT, PROUTY, BYRD of West Virginia, CARROLL, DODD, GRUENING, KEFAUVER, NEUBERGER, and YARBOROUGH.

The need for enactment of this tax adjustment to enable smaller concerns to finance growth and expansion is clear and pressing. We are all too well aware of the deficiencies of our capital markets in the long-term debt and equity capital areas in meeting the financial needs of small business. Tax adjustment provided in this measure would provide a remedy for this gap in our financial structure by utilizing the reinvestment of earnings of principal to enable small firms to obtain the required funds to finance their growth and thus maximize their contribution to our economic well-being. The bill would accomplish this objective by authorizing as a deduction from taxable net income an amount equal to the aggregate addition to capital represented by reinvestment in depreciable assets, inventory, and accounts receivable except that the maximum deduction would be 20 percent of net income or $30,000, whichever is the lesser.

Too much stress cannot be placed upon the underlying principle on which the provisions of the bill are based. Utilization of the reinvestment-of-earnings principle recognizes the undisputed fact that historically new business and smaller concerns have had to place maximum reliance upon retained earnings to secure and retain a foothold in our economy. Generally placed at the bottom of the credit worthiness scale by lenders and investors because of their newness or size, small businesses have had to rely on retained earnings to provide the funds to increase assets and finance expansion. The tax credit provided by the bill would be available only to the extent that additional aggregate investments in modernization and inventories were made.

Mr. President, the convening of this Congress in the midst of the challenges of the 1960's hardly requires a restatement of the importance of small business to our country or a reevaluation of the role played by small business in the success of our dynamic capitalism. No greater tribute has been given to our reliance upon the reinvigorating benefits of their contributions than that paid by that great American, Woodrow Wilson, when he said:

No country can afford to have its prosperity originated by a small controlling class. The treasury of America does not lie in the brains of the small body of men now in control of the great enterprises. It depends upon the inventions of unknown men, upon the ambitions of unknown men. Every country is renewed out of the ranks of the unknown, not out of the ranks of the already famous and powerful in control.

Our dependence for continued economic resurgence upon the vitality of the small and unknown is no less today. The spawning ground for constant renewal of our economic capacity for growth remains the 4 millions of small businesses serving every segment of the American economy. The broad based participation in our economic life by small business underscores the importance of this segment of the business community to the efficient functioning of our national economy. And it likewise underscores a constant recognition that a favorable climate must exist for these concerns, as well as new entrepreneurs, to grow and expand lest we slip unknowingly into a posture where inventive creativity is restricted and incentive becomes the victim of effective paralysis.

The overwhelming need of small business for access to capital in order to grow and expand in a competitive economy has been extensively documented in recent years. Case history after case history was presented to the Senate Small Business Committee during its nationwide hearings in the fall of 1957. Without exception, witness after witness graphically portrayed the inability of their small business concerns to obtain long-term funds for the capital markets on either a debt or equity basis. And where longer term loans might ordinarily have been available, the prospects of repayments were dependent upon the ability to retain earnings which the tax structure just did not permit. Although worthwhile amendments were made to the Internal Revenue Code in 1958, it is recognized that they did not go far enough. Our present income tax structure places a disproportionately heavy burden on small concerns. In addition, the difficulties in obtaining needed capital have acted as a drag on the growth of many smaller concerns. Relief based upon the reinvestment of earnings principle is needed by these concerns and is absolutely vital to their survival and growth. Otherwise, we will see more and more small firms declining, first to marginal operations and then finally to oblivion.

Some may claim that the more than 14,000 business failures in 1959 or the more than 15,000 in 1960 should be expected in an economy as competitive as ours. They might likewise claim that the losses sustained by these businesses of almost three-fourths of a billion dollars in 1959 and more than $1.5 billion in 1960 were a small price to pay, easily bearable by an economy with a $500 billion gross national product. However, no matter what measure one selects to weigh the importance of these business deaths to our total economic activity, we cannot escape the fact that in recent years the rate of business failures, as well as the dollar losses, have both soared. It is worth pointing out that such an acceleration in business failures or dollars lost did not prevail during the period from 1921 to 1933.

I have long been concerned with the increasing wave of mergers sweeping the business community in recent years. As a result of this activity, hundreds of true independent companies each year

Rather, shaping of policies actually has rested almost completely between occupants of the White House and the Congresses of their times.

Most recent demonstration of this truth in the U.S. was in the Congress of the last 2 years where a self-named Democratic committee on party policy, led by Paul M. Butler, the national chairman, won scarcely a smell of support among the huge Democratic congressional majority.

And even more significant was the lead up to repeal of national prohibition in the presidential campaign of 1932.

That year, platforms of both the Democratic and Republican Parties, as drafted originally, declared foursquare for continuance in force of the 18th amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which for 13 years had prohibited manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States.

REPEAL VOTES

At nomination time in 1932, President Hoover led for his party in sustaining that provision, and so did Franklin D. Roosevelt, the Democratic presidential nominee, whose main opponent had been Alfred E. Smith, overwhelmingly defeated at the polls 4 years earlier largely because of his wet stand.

The Democratic Convention in 1932, however, spurned Mr. Roosevelt's advice by voting for outright repeal. And the lameduck Congress, elected in 1930, voted to repeal the 18th amendment, 63 to 23 in the Senate, February 16, and 289 to 121 in the House, February 20, 1933.

By the time Roosevelt took office March 4, there was nothing left for him to do in that matter, and on December 5, 1933, the repealer became effective by ratification of legislatures in 36 of the 48 States.

SCORES DICTATION

Listen further to Senator Dodd:

"A presidential candidate," he said, "ought to announce his own platform, describing his general approach, as of the moment, to basic issues. I think each candidate for Congress or the Senate ought to do the same. But any attempt of a party convention to dictate to a President or a Congress concerning constitutional responsibilities cannot be countenanced."

A case in point just now has been provided in Great Britain.

Following a devastating defeat at the polls, a national conference of the Labor Party adopted narrowly a demand that Great Britain go it alone in national defense, especially excluding basing of U.S. atomic weapons on British soil.

This move not only was in defiance of the party leader, Hugh Gaitskell, but subsequently the minority of popularly elected Laborites sitting in the British Parliament voted 166 to 81 to retain Gaitskell as party leader.

Gaitskell had said before that vote that the test was not himself as a personality but the policies he stood for.

WHAT PRICE PLATFORMS?

A dim view of modern-day party platforms is taken by Senator Dodd, of Connecticut. His concern is based on the increasing tendency to take them seriously, considering the haphazard manner in which they are drafted.

There is much to be said for the Senator's point of view in this matter. As he says, the day has ended when party platforms were "ambiguous and friendly documents which tried to please everyone, excited little interest in the land, and passed from the scene quietly and unmourned after each convention."

During the last convention, much weight was placed on the platforms which figured, particularly in the case of the Republicans, in the eventual choice of a candidate. Vice President Nixon had to deal with rivals in connection with platform stands.

Senator Dodd understandably is disturbed by the fact that nonelected members of a party platform committee come up with a program foisted on a President. It is entirely possible that under the stress and strain of trying to gain the nomination, a President-to-be commits himself to policies which he does not actually believe in. To go back on them later is a betrayal of trust to the party; to stick with them betrays the voter.

In all honesty, what possibility is there that a candidate actually agrees entirely with the detailed, sweeping views of the party platform? Not much. Senator Dodd believes a candidate ought to announce his own platform and basic approach to issues.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Nov. 27, 1960]

SAWDUST PLATFORMS

Senator THOMAS J. DODD of Connecticut, has provided his party's President-elect with a convenient excuse for disregarding most of the spread-eagle pledges of the Democratic platform. Senator Dodd spoke in seeming candor to the New England society in New York when he said that platforms were only dangerous when people begin to take them seriously as a binding set of promises to be redeemed.

"The worst betrayal of trust that any President or Congress could commit," said the Democratic Senator, "would be to accept whole hog the convention platform of a victorious party and to subordinate the 4-year deliberative process of the President and the Congress to the 4-day drafting process of nonelected members of a party platform committee."

For, said Senator Dodd, while the members of the platform committee sit out in front listening to pleas about what should be put in the platform, a small group of experts in the back room, consisting mainly of staff members who are not even convention delegates, is actually writing the platform. The platform committee, half asleep, adopts this document without serious deliberation, and it is whooped through the convention without being read.

"I would never entertain the suggestion," said Senator Dodd, "that I or any other Senator was obligated to support any section of it merely because it was adopted by our party convention. The concept that a convention platform is binding upon elected representatives in the Congress is absolutely inimical to our system of government. Theirs, and theirs alone, is the final responsibility for legislating."

"I believe that party platforms, except for a general statement of goals and attitudes, ought to be done away with. They are anomalies that have no legitimate status under our Constitution. So long as they are not taken seriously, they are a source of cynicism about the integrity of our political process. And so soon as they are taken seriously, they will start to undermine our republican form of government."

Thus, said the Senator, the talk of a mandate to carry out some specific, far-reaching program of action is nonsense. If, as defined, a mandate is an authoritative command, it implies that the discretion of the elected representatives has been superseded by the will of the people, supposedly registered in the election. It presupposes that the candidates of a party are uniformly bound to a set of proposals outlined in a party platform, that the party platforms offer a distinct choice to the people, that the people carefully study the opposed platforms, and that on election day they vote for the platform rather than for the man.

This analysis is, to a degree, true, except that the platform of Mr. Dodd's party was carefully contrived as vote bait, containing promises of all sorts and of a sweeping order to every possible group of voters who could be gulled by the vision of pie in the sky.

But the platform as it emerged from Los Angeles is also a severe handicap to Senator John F. Kennedy. It is the most radical ever offered by any major party. Of its nature, much of the platform can never be delivered, not only because of the divisions within the Democratic Party, but because conservatives of both parties in Congress cannot be induced to honor pledges which would invite inflation and national insolvency.

Mr. Kennedy's muddy mandate is another factor. He is headed for the White House on a mere handful of votes. Half of the people want neither him nor what he offers. Senator Dodd has presented an escape hatch from the embarrassment of trying to make good. If Mr. Kennedy is a prudent man, he will avail himself of the opportunity to start backpedaling from the new frontier.

WASHINGTON CLOSEUP

(By Carey Cronan)

Senator THOMAS J. DODD, who called recently for the resignation or forced ouster of the U.S. attorney and U.S. marshal and the collector of the port of Bridgeport, looks forward to a sort of political honeymoon in the early weeks of the coming congressional session.

Senator Dodd believes that Democrats from both sides of the Mason-Dixon line will work together to enact the Kennedy legislative program and he scoffs at any effective alliance between Republicans and southern conservatives already predicted by Representative CHARLES A. HALLECK, GOP House leader.

With a Democrat in the White House, the Senator feels that the threat of the veto will be gone and he believes that one of the first major bills will provide for medical care for the aged tied in with the social security system. He looks forward to what he calls "good legislation" dealing with defense, aid to education, tax revision and also a new minimum wage law in line with the campaign waged by President-elect John F. Kennedy.

The Senator forecasts a parallel with the early days of the Roosevelt New Deal when the famed "hundred days" changed the legislative face of the Nation and turned the Government to many Democratic reforms.

PLATFORMS NOT COMMITMENTS

A few nights ago in New York, addressing the New England Society at the Plaza Hotel, Senator Dodd declared that the platforms adopted by political conventions should not be binding upon successful candidates.

He pointed out in speaking of platforms that "they have no legitimate status under our Constitution. So long as they are not taken seriously they are a source of cynicism about the integrity of our political system and as soon as they are taken seriously they will start to undermine our representative form of government. A presidential candidate ought to announce his own platform, describing his general approach, as of the moment, to basic issues. I think each candidate for Congress or the Senate ought to do the same. But any attempt by a party convention to dictate to a President or to Congress concerning constitutional responsibilities cannot be countenanced."

BOTH GROUPS ERRED

The Senator said that "Conservatives have traditionally erred when they have resisted attempts to make the system truly representative. Liberals have erred when they have in the name of the people, sought to impair the independence of elected representatives. The conservatives were wrong when they resisted such measures as the extension of the voting franchise, the direct election of senators, and the State primary system, measures intended to make our system truly representative by abolishing the frauds and manipulations which resulted in minority rule."

Senator Dodd added that "the liberals were wrong when they promoted such schemes as the initiative, the referendum and the recall, which substituted plebiscites for the action of legislatures and which sought to intimidate elected officials with the threat of dismissal for opposing the popular sentiment at any given moment. And I think the liberal innovators are wrong today when they try to whittle away the deliberative process, when they attack the committee system of the Congress, when they condemn its rules as antiquated, when they talk speciously of mandates, when they propose binding party platforms, and binding party caucuses that are to take primacy over the independent judgement of the elected official."

PERSONALITY WINS

Discussing campaigns, the Senator maintained that "a politician instinctively knows that it is the public estimate of his personal qualities rather than his political dogma that will win or lose the election. . . . He will never really know the answers. All he can know for certain is that he has been lawfully chosen by the people to act as their representative for 6 years and at the end of those 6 years he will have to submit himself to them once more. How foolish then, how pompous, for him to alight in Washington 2 months later, claiming that he has a mandate to carry out this or that program. As he casts hundreds of votes, his philosophy becomes clearer to those few who care to study it. The man who is always in the midst of heated controversy may leave an impression of either courage or rashness but he is unlikely to leave a clear understanding of his total philosophy."

CONFORMITY NOT PRIMARY

"If pitching is 75 percent of a baseball game, as Connie Mack once said, party conformity is only 25 percent of the political game," declared the Senator, "political affiliation gives him a certain insight, a certain approach to the hundreds of issues of the time but it does not give him the concrete practical answers. Those he must seek out for himself based on individual examination. Party ideology and private self-interest hold no magic answers. Therefore, in conscience, in theory and in practical fact, the elected representative can assume his duties free from any commitments except those which he has freely made himself. The people have the right to hire and fire but they do not have the right to give on-the-job direction. They should let their man know what they think and why, but they should not try to intimidate him and he should not submit to intimidation. This is the essence of the representative system. I think the American people prefer it this way. It is only the extremists, the vested interests, the doctrinaires, the organizers of blocs who would undermine representative government and make their elected representatives so many rubber stamps."

Speaking of party platforms, the Senator said, "The worst betrayal of trust that any President or Congress could commit would be to accept whole hog the convention platform of a victorious party and to subordinate the 4-year deliberative process of the President and the Congress to the 4-day drafting process of nonelected members of a party platform committee."

[From the Evening Record and Courier-Tribune, Nov. 28, 1960]

PLATFORM NO STRAITJACKET

"The worst betrayal of trust that any President or Congress could commit would be to accept whole hog the convention platform of a victorious party and to subordinate the 4-year deliberative process of the President and the Congress to the 4-day drafting process of nonelected members of a party platform committee."

Many elected officials may believe this, but few would say it so outspokenly, as did Senator THOMAS J. DODD, Connecticut Democrat, at a dinner meeting of the New England society in New York recently.

Dodd would abolish party platforms except for a statement of goals and attitudes. He would have the Presidential candidate announce his own platform, describing his general approach to basic issues; and each candidate for Congress or the Senate do the same. He would not countenance any attempt of a party convention to dictate to a President or a Congress concerning their Constitutional responsibilities.

Of course, Dodd is right. Under our system, we elect a President and a Congress to govern, not a party. Ours is not the parliamentary system of Europe, where the elected members of parliament choose their party leader to head up both the legislative and executive branches in the person of the Premier, the Prime Minister or the Chancellor. Parties were not even thought of when our Constitution was adopted, and they are not mentioned once in that basic document.

The electorate pick a man to make legislative decisions on the basis of his character and his specialized knowledge, just as you pick a lawyer or a doctor to make your legal or medical decisions on the same basis, Dodd maintains. You aim at a general result, if the result is good, you keep him on; if it is bad, you will drop him.

In these days of instantaneous communication, the man has become as Dodd says, the main consideration, not the party platform. It should make for independent thinking and personal responsibility in government, which is all to the good.

[From the Pittsburgh Courier, Dec. 10, 1960]

THE GREAT PLATFORM FRAUD

We are all indebted to Senator Dodd, of Connecticut, for reminding us in a speech in New York last week that national party platforms are quite meaningless so far as any binding commitments on elected officials are concerned.

These platforms, he insisted, are a sham and a fraud callously designed to "sell" candidates to the electorate. Said he:

"The worst betrayal of trust that any President or Congress could commit would be to accept whole hog the convention platform of the victorious party, and to subordinate the 4-year deliberative process of the President and Congress to the 4-day drafting process of nonelected members of a party platform committee."

We have frequently pointed out that platform promises about civil rights, fair play, nondiscrimination, voting equality, and all the rest of it, have no practical value and are, in truth, worthless save for propaganda purposes; and the bickering over which platform is the best reveals depressing naivete.

And yet, we presume, when the inevitable disillusionment sets in, those interests who appeared before the platform committees and pleaded for sundry strong planks to be included will be demanding that these empty promises be carried out.

DEPRESSED AREAS

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I joined in cosponsoring a depressed areas bill introduced by the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. This is consistent with the position that I have taken for several years, ever since 1954, when there was a moderate recession. I then urged assistance for depressed areas. In 1957 or 1958 I joined in a bill which was introduced at that time in support of such legislation. In 1959 the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] asked me to be one of five chief cosponsors of the depressed areas bill, which I supported, and I supported it with all my strength and heart, to the extent of voting to override the President's veto.

Recently the senior Senator from Illinois was kind enough to ask me, as he said, to be the principal Republican cosponsor of the bill. I am glad to be such cosponsor. I know that other bills will be introduced. I have had the opportunity to study those bills, including a bill which was introduced on behalf of the administration known as the Scott bill. I studied the three bills. From my own knowledge of the situation in the depressed areas in my own State, which I am sure reflects conditions in other States, I believe this bill is most adequate and will be most effective. I will speak upon it later. I am happy to join in this introduction. I hope it will soon come before the Senate, that it will be passed by both the Senate and the House, and become law.

Mr. RUSSELL. My President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXPORT PRICE COMPETITION

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, it is highly desirable to have a truly flexible trade policy which will not be linked to impossibly high trade barriers that could lock out the exports of nations which currently import increasing amounts of U.S. goods. The strength of our export position is frequently misunderstood because of confusion with other factors affecting our international balance of payments. The New York trade publication Purchasing Week seeks to set the export picture straight in an analysis published in its issue of October 31, which points out that the greatest threat to our foreign markets comes from productivity gains by foreign producers and not as commonly supposed, from wages paid American workers; and from failure to meet competitive credit terms.

I ask unanimous consent that this study, entitled "Export Pace Shows U.S. Prices Aren't Prohibitive," be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, our country, our allies, and all other free peoples are presently confronted with an unprecedented challenge from the Communist world. I submit that unless and until we correct the demoralization which these cases illustrate, we shall find it impossible to provide effective leadership to the free world.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an article entitled "How Electrical Firms Shared Business," written by Mr. Bernard D. Nossiter; and also an editorial entitled "Business Ethics." I especially commend these to the attention of my colleagues. I have never before heard of as shocking a case of violation of our antitrust laws and of the undermining of the very principle of free competitive enterprise.

These cases have very wide ramifications. Presently there is in my State a case in which the bids for turbines in dams built by our Government are in controversy; a foreign company has bid against domestic companies. In the past and presently we have a policy of protecting to a certain extent, under the so-called buy-American principle, our domestic manufacturers; and one of the principal beneficiaries of these laws has been the largest company involved in this conspiracy.

I submit that while these matters are of great importance here at home, they also have very great implications in our foreign relations; and I hope my colleagues will take the time to read this article and the editorial.

There being no objection, the article and the editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Jan. 4, 1961]

BUSINESS ETHICS I

There is a story in London arising from the Bulganin-Khrushchev visit of 1956. In a moment of informality, the Russian visitors confessed to their hosts a dread of the wearisome accumulation of domestic industrial problems which faced them on their return home. At this point, Mr. Macmillan is alleged to have said: "Ah, we have an easier system here. We leave those matters to a thing we call business."

In a similar fashion we do the same. We leave to a "thing we call business" a multifarious collection of problems relating to industrial activity. Some enthusiastic sloganizer has titled this arrangement "Free Enterprise." And lately it is fashionable to speak of the "private sector."

More accurately, we live in a mixed economy with tariffs, subsidies, tax privileges, credit arrangements, and direct and indirect governmental regulation. In total this is neither socialism nor capitalism, but a composite adjustment of a practical people to the realities of day-to-day affairs.

There are after all more important things than the question of one's daily bread, especially in a fortunate land. And the good sense of the American people has generally led us, perhaps without knowing it, to subordinate purely material matters to the general freedom and welfare of the community. So we do not live for bread alone. Our lives and being are not only demeaned but also lied about in a description of them as "free enterprise." And our lives sensibly refuse to be divided by statistical professors into private and public sectors. We live in private houses which we can afford because of governmental control of the mortgage market and we send our children to public schools over which we exert greater local control than we do over mortgage rates.

But to say that free enterprise is an oversimplification is not to deny that there is much commonsense in the freedom that private enterprise enjoys in America. This provides a sensible division of managerial labor. Quite beyond that practical consideration, it permits more total freedom in everyday life than would be possible under government ownership or direct regulation.

Which brings us to our point. The freedom of American business enterprise is not something decreed in either the Old or the New Testament. It exists only because it has worked and it will cease to exist when it ceases to work.

Today the conduct of private business can be of as much public concern as the conduct of any public agency. That behemoth of public agencies, the Pentagon, spends more than $41 billion a year. But that huge sum is equaled by the net sales of the nine largest private companies.

It is properly shocking when a public official fails to meet his responsibilities—either through his own misconduct or his failure to control his subordinates. In these times, when the private sector is more than three times larger than all governmental expenditure, it is equally shocking when private corporate officials fail to control their large enterprises.

Tomorrow we plan to make some more specific comments.

PRICE FIXING CASE—HOW ELECTRICAL FIRMS SHARED BUSINESS

(By Bernard D. Nossiter)

The Nation's heavy electrical equipment manufacturers pleaded guilty last month to a classic case of price fixing. As described by the Government, they followed a relatively simple pattern to set prices, rig bids and divide up markets.

In some ways, the most remarkable feature of their conspiracy is its size. In all, 19 concerns and 44 of their officials pleaded guilty to one or more of seven indictments. Their agreements were of varying length but spanned the period from 1951 through 1960. They covered sales estimated at $8 billion—$7 billion to private utilities and other corporations and $1 billion to the Federal, State and local governments.

According to the indictment and the statements of Government lawyers at Philadelphia Federal Court hearings on the pleas, the conspiracies usually took this form:

Company executives would meet frequently in hotel rooms. There they would decide how big a share each firm would get of the market under discussion. They would review the orders that were in sight, determine who would get them and how much they would charge. The bigger business—sales to private corporations—would generally be decided by high executives. The smaller Government orders were often left to lower level officials. They would sometimes come to the hotel rooms with "ledger" lists—a box score showing how much business each firm had been getting. That way, new orders could be allocated so that each firm got its agreed upon share.

Attorneys for the manufacturers told Federal Judge J. Cullen Ganey that the conspiracies violated company policy.

For example, General Electric Co.'s lawyer, Gerhard A. Gesell, said:

"This corporation has had a considered, deliberate policy designed to prevent the very type of occurrence with which we are suddenly confronted here.

"This policy was issued in 1954. It states:

"No employee shall enter into any understanding, agreement, plan or scheme, expressed or implied, formal or informal, with any competitor, in regard to prices, terms, or conditions of sale, production, distribution, territories, or customers, nor exchange, or discuss with a competitor prices, terms or conditions of sale, or any other competitive information, nor engage in any other conduct which, in the opinion of the company's counsel, violates any of the antitrust laws."

Gesell went on:

"This policy * * * repeatedly was brought home in management conferences * * *. Before this case came along, men were disciplined for violation of the policy. Men were discharged. Since this has come along, other men have been disciplined."

Gesell also said that the company's guilty pleas were made with a desire to terminate what would otherwise be most protracted and expensive litigation.

Similarly, former Attorney General Herbert J. Brownell, lawyer for Westinghouse Electric Corp., said:

"Westinghouse has sought for years in every way possible to avoid involvement in cases of this type. Unlawful acts, if any, by its employees charged with pricing responsibility have not only been unauthorized but contrary to specific instructions that the antitrust laws must be obeyed."

Brownell added: "Westinghouse wishes to make it clear that in its pleas of guilty and nolo contendere that it does not thereby admit the allegations."

Sometimes the conspirators worked out their plans in writing. Here is how Assistant Attorney General Robert A. Bicks, head of the Antitrust Division, described the operation for the sale of circuit breakers:

"In the early years there was a practice known as the inner-company memo. Once each week with quite regular precision the top executives responsible for the carrying out of this conspiracy would communicate with each other via memo which each executive initiated. * * * At its early stages in 1951 and 1952 there were four companies in this conspiracy, GE, Westinghouse, Allis-Chalmers (Manufacturing Co.), and Federal Pacific (Electric Co.). ITE (Circuit Breaker Co.) did not come in until later.

"The initiator of the communication would change month to month, company by company; by communication known as the inner-company memo would deal generally with jobs that were coming up during that week, the price each would bid, and any comments that were to be offered on the general price level."

These memos, said Bicks, dealt with the sales to private corporations. The sealed-bid business of governments was handled at working level meetings.

Bicks continued: "At a working level meeting where a particularly big job was up for discussion the percentages would be reviewed in light of what was known as the ledger list which had on it recent sealed-bid jobs given to the other defendants. In light of that ledger list it was decided which of the companies, to keep the percentages constant would get the job. Now if that company was prepared to say the price at which it was going to bid then the other companies could discuss among themselves what they would bid, add on for accessories, to make sure or to give the company that had the job, whose turn it was to get the job, the best shot at it. If the company whose job the particularly rigged job was supposed to be did not know the price there would be later communication, either by phone to homes with just the first names used, or by letter to homes with just the first names of the senders, with no return address, and this wonderful code which appears for the first time in this case. The numbers were 1, General Electric; 2, Westinghouse; 3, Allis-Chalmers; and 7, Federal Pacific. What happened to 4 or 5 and 6 until I-T-E came in remains a mystery. When I-T-E came in, in 1958, it got 6."

The company officials met in hotels all across the country. Among the places listed by the Government were New York City, Philadelphia, Atlantic City, Hot Springs (Va.), Hershey (Pa.), Cleveland and Seattle.

As the biggest company, GE generally got the largest share of the carved-up markets. The Justice Department said that the agreement on circuit breakers to Government agencies originally gave GE 45 percent, Westinghouse 35 percent, Allis-Chalmers 10 percent, and Federal Pacific 10 percent; for power transformers, it went GE 30 percent, Westinghouse 30 percent, Allis-Chalmers 15 percent, Moloney Electric Co. 10 percent, McGraw-Edison Co. 8 percent, and Wagner Electric Corp. 5 percent.

Sometimes, a company aid would avoid a face-to-face meeting with a group of competitors but accomplish his end anyway.

Baddia Rashid, chief of the Antitrust Division's trial section, told the court of an August 1956, meeting at Camp Keystone, near North Bay, Ontario. He said: "The defendants held the meeting at a particular cabin in this island resort. Mr. Oswald (W. F. Oswald, general manager, general purpose control department, switchgear and control division, GE, who pleaded guilty) who was representing General Electric during this period was not attending meetings with the rest of the companies.

However, Mr. Oswald got himself a cabin in very close proximity to the cabin being occupied by the other defendant representatives. An individual at the conspiratorial meeting was sent periodically during the course of the meeting to Mr. Oswald's cabin to consult with Mr. Oswald as to his position on the various matters that were being discussed. It was a representative of one of the smaller companies that was delegated to be, in effect, the relay man between the two cabins.

"Mr. Oswald agreed to the price increase and so notified the relay man who communicated this fact back to the remainder of the individuals at the first cabin.

"He remained outside the meeting of August 1956, in Canada in another cabin, but he sent the messages in to the other group urging them to put in effect a price increase of 10 percent. In this situation Mr. Oswald was the initiator and the leading figure on that 10-percent price increase."

The electrical firms used a variety of methods to determine who would get an order. In one case, the companies took turns in alphabetical order. In another, described in the turbine-generator indictment, the decision was made by lot.

But the most sophisticated technique apparently was the phase-of-the-moon formula for determining automatically what each company would bid on power switchgear assemblies for private corporations.

The indictment described its operation this way:

"At these periodic meetings a scheme or formula for quoting nearly identical prices to electric utility companies, private industrial corporations and contractors was used by defendant corporations designated by their representatives as a 'phase of the moon' or 'light of the moon' formula. Through cyclic rotating positioning inherent in the formula one defendant corporation would quote the low price, others would quote intermediate prices and another would quote the high price; these positions would be periodically rotated among defendant corporations."

THE AREA REDEVELOPMENT BILL

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, it is my privilege to be a cosponsor of the area redevelopment bill with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. I have joined with him before in supporting similar legislation, and I share his joy in finding sympathy and encouragement for this legislation from the President-elect.

The latest report from the Labor Department indicates that more than one-third of the major labor market areas are suffering from serious unemployment, and that, in addition to these 51 major centers of unemployment, there are 123 smaller areas with serious unemployment troubles. In my own State of Minnesota, serious unemployment continues in the northeast area, and in Duluth, in particular.

Mr. President, we have had a very serious time in this area of my State. Iron mining is down considerably; unemployment continues to mount; and up to date we have found no real solution. It is our view, in Minnesota, that the area redevelopment legislation offers us at least a hope for some alleviation of the unemployment and economic distress.

I think the need for this area redevelopment legislation has been established beyond the shadow of a doubt during the past 4 years.

In the 84th Congress, the Senate passed an area redevelopment bill to help economically distressed areas; but the other body failed to act on it.

In the 85th Congress, both Houses approved area redevelopment legislation; but the President's veto killed our hopes.

In the 86th Congress, we again were successful in passing area redevelopment legislation through both Houses of Congress. But again the President's veto killed our efforts to get this legislation onto the statute books.

We are indeed fortunate that the recommendations of the special study group headed by Senator DOUGLAS, for the President-elect, are being translated into legislative action so quickly; and I pledge my full support for early action in this House on this thoroughly discussed and thoroughly studied legislation.

No one need fear that this is a blank check for hasty or reckless action. This is primarily a loan program which will be self-supporting in the long run.

Under this proposal, there will be a ceiling of $400 million on the total Federal commitment; and the commitment for the first fiscal year of the new administration is limited to $100 million.

I may add that I think this is a very modest amount; I only hope it will prove to be enough. I have serious doubts that it will; but at least it is a beginning.

The Federal Government can make loans to communities in depressed areas, to aid construction of public or private facilities which will help to attract new industry; and the bill also provides for vocational training and retraining subsistence payments.

Mr. President, I wish to note that it is my intention to offer again the Youth Conservation Corps bill, which I believe is supplemental to the area redevelopment bill, or at least is a companion measure. There is a rising number of unemployed young men between the ages of 17 and 20. This is going to be a very serious problem in some areas of the country. The Youth Conservation Corps bill will afford an opportunity for many thousand young men for gainful employment in the great national parks, national forests, State parks, and State forests, in the field of conservation.

I shall again introduce the bill, which previously passed the Senate; and I hope that, again, favorable action will be taken on the bill by both Houses of Congress, and that the bill will then be signed by the President.

It will bring new life and new hope to the depressed communities which have too long been denied their fair share in America's prosperity.

Mr. President, area redevelopment legislation is long overdue and urgently needed. This legislation should receive the same high priority in Congress that it has in the program of the President-elect.

I want to compliment the President-elect for his leadership in this matter in keeping the commitment he made to the people of the United States in his campaign.

MORE DANGEROUS THAN A FILIBUSTER

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the body of the RECORD a very able and instructive article appearing on the editorial page of today's Washington Evening Star, by Mr. Gould Lincoln, entitled "More Dangerous Than a Filibuster."

The article very clearly depicts something I have endeavored in time past to present to the Senate, the danger of adopting a gag rule in the Senate of the United States. It looks very wonderful to have a gag rule when one has a majority of the votes, a majority of one, and has made his speech. Then it is wonderful to have a gag rule or a previous question device that brings an issue to a vote and does not give anyone else a chance to express his views; but you may be sure, Mr. President, these chickens will come home to roost, and if we ever do destroy the Senate's constitutional function, and prescribe a rule that will, in effect, deny a representative of a sovereign State the right to full expression on the floor of the Senate by imposing one of these drastic gag rules, we will not only have denied the right of a sovereign State, but we will have sounded the death knell of true liberalism in this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MORE DANGEROUS THAN A FILIBUSTER

(By Gould Lincoln)

The Senate today is locked in another struggle over the proposition that a majority—even of one—should be entitled to cut off debate and force a bill, a resolution, an important issue to a vote, no matter how ill-considered and no matter if it violates rights of a minority. For generations—indeed, since the beginning of the Government of this country—the Senate has remained a unique body, with debate unlimited. This, it is true, was modified by the adoption of the so-called cloture rule immediately after President Woodrow Wilson began his sec-

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JANUARY 5 (legislative day, JANUARY 4), 1961

Mr. SCOTT (for himself and Mr. KEATING) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

A BILL

To establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically depressed areas.

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2 tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3 That this Act be cited as the "Area Redevelopment Act".

4 DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

5 SEC. 2. The Congress declares that the maintenance
6 of the national economy at a high level is vital to the best
7 interests of the United States, but that some of our com-
8 munities are suffering substantial and persistent unemploy-
9 ment which causes hardship to many individuals and their 10 families and detracts from the national welfare by wasting

1 vital human resources; that to overcome this problem the
2 Federal Government in cooperation with the States, should 3 help areas of substantial and persistent unemployment to 4 take effective steps in planning and financing their economic 5 development; that Federal assistance should enable com-
6 munities to achieve lasting improvement and enhance the 7 domestic prosperity by the establishment of stable and di-
8 versified local economies; and that new employment oppor-
9 tunities should be created rather than merely transferred 10 from one community to another.

11 AREA ECONOMIC REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

12 SEC. 3. To assist areas in the United States designated 13 hereinafter as redevelopment areas, the Secretary of Com-
14 merce is authorized to take such action as may be necessary
15 to carry out the provisions of this Act. To assist the Sec-
16 retary of Commerce (hereinafter referred to as the "Sec-
17 retary"), there is hereby established within the Department
18 of Commerce an Area Economic Redevelopment Adminis-
19 tration which shall be headed by an Administrator who shall 20 be appointed by the Secretary and who shall receive com-
21 pensation at a rate equal to that received by Assistant Sec-
22 retaries of Commerce. The Administrator shall perform
23 such duties in the execution of this Act as the Secretary may 24 assign.

2 SEC. 4. (a) To advise the Secretary in the performance
3 of functions authorized by this Act, there is authorized to 4 be created an Area Economic Redevelopment Advisory
5 Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board", which shall
6 consist of the following members, all ex officio: The Secre-
7 tary, as Chairman; the Secretaries of Agriculture; Health,
8 Education, and Welfare; Labor; and Treasury; the Admin-
9 istrators of the Housing and Home Finance Agency and of 10 the Small Business Administration. The Chairman may from 11 time to time invite the participation of officials of other agen-
12 cies of the executive branch interested in the functions
13 herein authorized. Each member of the Board may desig-
14 nate an officer of his agency to act for him as a member of 15 the Board with respect to any matter there considered.

16 (b) The Secretary shall appoint a National Public
17 Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment which shall 18 consist of twenty-five members and which shall be composed 19 of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and 20 the public in general. From the members appointed to such 21 Committee the Secretary shall designate a Chairman. Such 22 Committee, or any duly established subcommittee thereof,
23 shall from time to time make recommendations to the 24 Secretary relative to the carrying out of his duties under this

1 Act. Such Committee shall hold not less than two meetings
2 during each calendar year.

3 (c) The Secretary is authorized from time to time to 4 call together and confer with representatives of the various 5 parties in interest from any industry in which employment
6 has dropped substantially over an extended period of years
7 and which in consequence has been a primary source of 8 high levels of unemployment in several areas designated
9 by the Secretary as redevelopment areas. Conferences con-
10 vened under authority of this subsection shall consider with 11 and recommend to the Secretary plans and programs with 12 special reference to any such industry to carry out the pur-
13 poses of this Act.

14 REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

15 SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary shall designate as "indus-16 trial redevelopment areas" those industrial areas within the 17 United States in which he determines that there has existed
18 substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended
19 period of time. There shall be included among the areas so
20 designated any industrial area—

21 (1) where the rate of unemployment, excluding 22 unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal 23 factors, is currently 6 per centum or more and has
24 averaged at least 6 per centum for the qualifying time
25 periods specified in (2) below; and

(2) where the annual average rate of unemployment has been at least—

(A) 50 per centum above the national average for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

(B) 75 per centum above the national average for two of the preceding three calendar years, or

(b) The Secretary shall also designate as “rural re-development areas” those rural areas within the United States in which he determines that there exist the largest number and percentage of low-income families, and a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment. In making the designations under this subsection, the Secretary shall consider, among other relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families in the various rural areas of the United States, the proportion that such low-income families are to the total farm families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of the families in each such area to the general levels of income in the United States, the current and prospective employment opportunities in each such area, and the availability of manpower in each such area for supplemental employment.

(c) In making the determinations provided for in this section, the Secretary shall be guided, but not conclusively

1 governed, by pertinent studies made, and information and 2 data collected or compiled, by (1) departments, agencies,
3 and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, (2) State
4 and local governments, (3) universities and land-grant
5 colleges, and (4) private organizations.

6 (d) Upon the request of the Secretary, the Secretary
7 of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Director of 8 the Bureau of the Census are respectively authorized to 9 conduct such special studies, obtain such information and 10 compile and furnish to the Secretary such data as the 11 Secretary may deem necessary or proper to enable him to 12 make the determinations provided for in this section. The 13 Secretary shall reimburse, out of any funds appropriated to 14 carry out the purposes of this Act, the foregoing officers for 15 any expenditures incurred by them under this section.

16 (e) As used in this Act, the term "redevelopment 17 area" refers to any area within the United States which has 18 been designated by the Secretary as an industrial redevel-
19 opment area or a rural redevelopment area, and may include
20 one or more counties, or one or more municipalities, or a 21 part of a county or municipality.

22 LOANS AND PARTICIPATIONS

23 SEC. 6. (a) The Secretary is authorized to purchase
24 evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (including

1 immediate participations therein) to aid in financing any
2 project for the purchase or development of land and facil-
3 ities for industrial usage, for the construction of new factory
4 buildings, for rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied fac-
5 tory buildings, or for the alteration, conversion, or enlarge-
6 ment of any existing buildings for industrial use. Such 7 financial assistance shall not be extended for working capital,
8 for purchases of machinery or equipment, or to assist estab-
9 lishments relocating from one area to another when such 10 assistance will result in substantial detriment to the area of 11 original location by increasing unemployment.

12 (b) Financial assistance under this section shall be
13 on such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines,
14 subject, however, to the following restrictions and limita-
15 tions:

16 (1) The total amount of loans and loan participa-
17 tions (including purchased evidences of indebtedness)
18 outstanding at any one time under this section (A)
19 with respect to projects in industrial redevelopment
20 areas shall not exceed $100,000,000, and (B) with 21 respect to projects in rural redevelopment areas shall 22 not exceed $50,000,000;

23 (2) Such assistance shall be extended only to ap-
24 plicants, both private and public, approved by the State

1 (or any agency or instrumentality thereof concerned
2 with problems of economic development) in which the 3 project to be financed shall be located;

4 (3) No such assistance shall be extended hereunder
5 unless the financial assistance applied for is not other-
6 wise available from private lenders or other Federal
7 agencies on reasonable terms;

8 (4) No loan shall be made unless it is determined
9 that an immediate participation is not available;

10 (5) No evidences of indebtedness shall be purchased
11 and no loans shall be made unless it is determined that
12 there is a reasonable assurance of repayment;

13 (6) Subject to section 11 (5) of this Act, no loan,
14 including renewals or extension thereof may be made
15 hereunder for a period exceeding thirty years and no
16 evidences of indebtedness maturing more than thirty
17 years from date of purchase may be purchased here-
18 under: Provided, That the foregoing restrictions on 19 maturities shall not apply to securities or obligations
20 received by the Secretary as a claimant in bankruptcy
21 or equitable reorganization or as a creditor in other
22 proceedings attendant upon insolvency of the obligor, 23 or if extension or renewal for additional periods, not to 24 exceed, however, a total of ten years, will aid in the

1 orderly liquidation of such loan or of such evidence of 2 indebtedness;

3 (7) Such assistance shall not exceed 50 per centum
4 of the aggregate cost to the applicant (excluding all
5 other Federal aid in connection with the undertaking)
6 of acquiring or developing land and facilities, and of 7 constructing, altering, converting, rehabilitating, or en-
8 larging the building or buildings of the particular project
9 and shall, among others, be on the following conditions:

10 (A) That other funds are available in an 11 amount which, together with the assistance provided
12 hereunder, shall be sufficient to pay such aggregate
13 cost;

14 (B) That not less than 10 per centum of such 15 aggregate cost be supplied by the State or any
16 agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision
17 thereof, or by a community or area organization, as 18 equity capital or as a loan repayable only after the 19 financial assistance hereunder has been repaid in full 20 according to the terms thereof and, if such loan is 21 secured, its security shall be subordinate and in-22 ferior to the lien or liens securing the financial 23 assistance hereunder; and

1 (C) That in making any loan under this section
2 with respect to an industrial redevelopment area, the 3 Secretary shall require that not less than 5 per 4 centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which
5 such loan is made shall be supplied by nongovern-
6 mental sources.

7 (8) No such assistance shall be extended unless
8 there shall be submitted and approved by the Secre-
9 tary an overall program for the economic development of 10 the area and a finding by the State, or any agency,
11 instrumentality, or local political subdivision thereof,
12 that the project for which financial assistance is sought
13 is consistent with such program: Provided, That noth-
14 ing in this Act shall authorize financial assistance for 15 any project prohibited by laws of the State or local 16 political subdivision in which the project would be 17 located.

18 (c) Of the funds authorized to be appropriated under 19 section 8 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be 20 deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the pur-21 pose of making loans under this section with respect to 22 projects in industrial redevelopment areas, and not more than 23 $50,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving fund which 24 shall be used for the purpose of making loans under this sec-
25 tion with respect to projects in rural redevelopment areas.

LOANS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

SEC. 7. (a) Upon the application of any State, or political subdivision thereof, or private or public organization or association representing any redevelopment area or part thereof, the Secretary is authorized to make loans to assist in financing the purchase or development of land for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within any redevelopment area, if he finds that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelopment area wherein such project is, or will be, located, and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities;

(2) the funds requested for such project are not otherwise available on reasonable terms;

(3) the amount of the loan plus the amount of other available funds for such projects are adequate to insure the completion thereof; and

14 for the purposes of this Act, such area shall not be considered
15 a redevelopment area: Provided, That nothing contained
16 herein shall (1) prevent any such area from again being 17 designated a redevelopment area under section 5 of this 18 Act if the Secretary determines it to be eligible under such 19 section, or (2) affect the validity of any contracts or under-
20 takings with respect to such area which were entered into 21 pursuant to this Act prior to a determination by the Secre-

1 area, negotiate with firms in redevelopment areas with 2 a view to ascertaining whether any such firm will furnish 3 the services or supplies with respect to which bids were

9 (4) assure that firms in redevelopment areas which 10 are on appropriate bidders' lists will be given the oppor-

12 for which they are qualified and on which small business

14 the number of firms on a bidders' list is exclusive, there

“(b) The Housing and Home Finance Administrator may provide such financial assistance under this section without regard to the requirements or limitations of section 110 (c) that the project area be clearly predominantly residential in character or that it be redeveloped for predomi-

1 nantly residential uses; but no such assistance shall be pro-
2 vided in any area if such Administrator determines that it
3 will assist in relocating business operations from one area to 4 another when such assistance will result in substantial detri-

6 ment.

7 “(c) Financial assistance under this section may be pro-
8 vided for any project involving a project area including pri-
9 marily industrial or commercial structure suitable for reha-

14 project area designated under the urban renewal plan for 15 industrial or commercial uses to any public agency or non-

23 public agency or corporation, and their assignees, shall be 24 required to assume the obligations imposed under section

1 “(e) Following the execution of any contract for finan-
2 cial assistance under this section with respect to any project,
3 the Housing and Home Finance Administrator may exercise
4 the authority vested in him under this section for the com-
5 pletion of such project, notwithstanding any determination
6 made after the execution of such contract that the area in 7 which the project is located may no longer be an industrial 8 redevelopment area under the Area Redevelopment Act.

A BILL

To establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically depressed areas.

By Mr. Scott and Mr. Keating

JANUARY 5 (legislative day, JANUARY 4), 1961
Read twice and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

may, with the concurrence of the agency having custody thereof, be transferred without consideration to the administrative jurisdiction of the Secretary for use by him in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

(b) The Secretary is authorized to pay for any acquisitions which he makes by purchase under this Act their fair market value, as determined by the Secretary, who may in his discretion base his determination on an independent appraisal obtained by him.

(c) In exercising his authority to acquire property by exchange, the Secretary may accept title to any non-Federal property located within such area and convey to the grantor of such property any federally owned property under the jurisdiction of the Secretary within such area. The properties so exchanged shall be approximately equal in fair market value, provided that the Secretary may accept cash from or pay cash to the grantor in such an exchange in order to equalize the values of the properties exchanged.

SEC. 4. (a) As soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act and following the acquisition by the Secretary of an acreage in the area described in section 2 of this Act, that is in the opinion of the Secretary efficiently administrable to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Secretary shall establish the area as a national seashore by the publication of notice thereof in the Federal Register.

(b) Such notice referred to in subsection (a) of this section shall contain a detailed description of the boundaries of the seashore which shall encompass an area as nearly as practicable identical to the area described in section 2 of this Act. The Secretary shall forthwith after the date of publication of such notice in the Federal Register (1) send a copy of such notice, together with a map showing such boundaries, by registered or certified mail to the Governor of the State of Texas and to the governing body of each of the political subdivisions involved; (2) cause a copy of such notice and map to be published in one or more newspapers which circulate in each of the localities; and (3) cause a certified copy of such notice, a copy of such map, and a copy of this Act to be recorded at the registry of deeds for the county involved.

SEC. 5. (a) Any owner or owners (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as "owner") of improved property on the date of its acquisition by the Secretary may, as a condition to such acquisition, retain the right of use and occupancy of his property for noncommercial residential purposes for a term not to exceed twenty-five years, or for a term ending at the death of such owner, the death of his spouse, or the day his last surviving child reaches the age of twenty-one, whichever is the latest. The owner shall elect the term to be reserved. In any case where such an owner retains a right of use and occupancy as herein provided, such right may during its existence be conveyed or leased, in whole, but not in part. The Secretary shall pay to the owner the fair market value of the property on the date of such acquisition less the fair market value on such date of the right retained by the owner.

cupancy in which the dwelling and such adjoining property has usually been enjoyed by its owner or occupant. The amount of such adjoining property to be so designated by the Secretary shall in no case be less than three acres in area, or all of such lesser amount as there may be, except that the Secretary may exclude from the amount of adjoining property so designated any beach or waters, together with so much of the land adjoining such beach or waters as the Secretary may deem necessary for public access thereto.

(c) When acquiring land, waters, or interests therein for the Padre Island National Seashore, the Secretary may permit a reservation by the grantor of all or any part of the minerals in such land or waters, with the right of occupation and use of so much of the surface of the land or waters as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining or removal of the minerals, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary.

SEC. 6. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the property acquired by the Secretary under this Act shall be administered by the Secretary, subject to the provisions of the Act entitled "An Act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes" approved August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535); as amended and supplemented, and in accordance with other laws of general application relating to the national park system as defined by the Act of August 8, 1953 (67 Stat. 496), except that authority otherwise available to the Secretary for the conservation and management of natural resources may be utilized to the extent he finds such authority will further the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 7. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act; except that no more than $4,000,000 shall be appropriated for the acquisition of land and waters and improvements thereon, and interests therein, and incidental costs relating thereto, in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 8. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of this Act or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, since coming to the Senate, I have vigorously supported programs for redevelopment, rehabilitation, and relief in depressed areas of our country. The first bill I introduced upon coming to the Senate in 1959 was for this purpose, and I supported earlier legislation in the House.

S. 268, which I introduced in the 86th Congress, was very similar to the area redevelopment bill finally approved by the House and the Senate. This has encouraged me to believe the same result might be forthcoming in the 87th Congress.

Mr. President, I was concerned when recent press reports indicated that the task force, appointed by President-elect Kennedy and headed by the senior Senator from Illinois, might be expected to concentrate its efforts in West Virginia.

On December 8, the senior Senator from Kentucky and five Republican members of the Pennsylvania delegation in the House, joined me in sending a telegram to the distinguished chairman of the task force, expressing the hope that other distressed areas will not be forgotten.

WASHINGTON, D.C., December 8, 1960.—The following is the text of a telegram to Senator PAUL H. DOUGLAS, chairman of a special group to consider problems of distressed areas, signed by Senators HUGH SCOTT, Republican, of Pennsylvania; JOHN SHERMAN COOPER, Republican, of Kentucky; Congressmen IVOR D. FENTON, Republican, of Pennsylvania; JAMES E. VAN ZANDT, Republican, of Pennsylvania; JOHN P. SAYLOR, Republican, of Pennsylvania; ARCH A. MOORE, Jr., Republican, of West Virginia; and Congressman-elect WILLIAM W. SCRANTON, Republican, of Pennsylvania:

"We have read with a great deal of interest of your appointment as chairman of a special group to consider problems of distressed areas. We who have worked for many years for aid to our chronic areas of unemployment in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and elsewhere, are pleased to know that President-elect Kennedy considers this problem to be urgent enough to become one of his first orders of business.

"As you know, along with others vitally interested in this type of legislation, we have felt for some time that we should not use a pork barrel approach, but rather aim such legislation to correct those longstanding areas of chronic distress such as exist in the coal regions of Pennsylvania and Kentucky. Certainly West Virginia is greatly in need of an effective program of assistance. However, there are also a number of chronically depressed areas in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Illinois, and elsewhere. The character of assistance needed in one State may differ in some respects from that needed in another.

"Please be assured of our desire to cooperate with you and your committee in any way possible in order to secure passage of workable and effective legislation to provide assistance to longstanding chronically depressed areas. May we assume that such cooperation will be welcomed in the future as in the past?"

I was glad to be reassured that the task force would develop plans to include Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and other States having depressed areas. I have worked earnestly with my colleagues from West Virginia, and know they would want Pennsylvania and Kentucky to share in any remedial programs developed.

The distinguished senior Senator from Illinois was good enough to furnish me with a draft of his proposed area redevelopment bill. While not all of the figures were filled in on the committee print, I could estimate the total cost would be in line with bills he has previously offered.

Not only on this point, but upon other and perhaps more fundamental issues, I differ with my friend from Illinois.

I recommend that area redevelopment programs be financed out of appropriated funds, and not by back-door Treasury financing.

I recommend that Commerce is the logical Department to have the major responsibility for coordinating this program. Time will be saved in staffing, and its organization is geared to deal with problems of business and industry.

I recommend a maximum Federal loan participation of 50 percent, with the State, local government, and private sources sharing the matching 50 percent.

I recommend a revolving loan fund of $200 million—$100 million for industrial loans, $50 million for rural development, and $50 million for public-facility loans. This will provide a substantial basic program to stimulate local and community efforts.

Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill, similar to the one I introduced in January 1959. Two revisions and one addition have been made in my new proposal.

First. A more workable unemployment criteria has been adopted. It is the same criteria approved by the Senate in 1959, and used in the administration's compromise bill of last August. It has the effect of concentrating industrial loans in areas of serious and long-term unemployment.

Second. Ten million dollars has been added for retraining subsistence. In the hard-hit areas of Pennsylvania, workers have been stranded due to technological changes, shifts in demand, and migrations of industry. With unemployment benefits exhausted, vocational training or retraining is beyond reach. Retraining subsistence will provide a new incentive.

Third. With an increase of from $3.5 to $4 million for technical assistance, my bill now calls for a total of $214 million.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have inserted as part of my remarks, a more complete analysis and the text of the area redevelopment bill I have introduced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill and analysis will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 6) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically depressed areas, introduced by Mr. SCOTT, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act be cited as the "Area Redevelopment Act".

DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The Congress declares that the maintenance of the national economy at a high level is vital to the best interests of the United States, but that some of our communities are suffering substantial and persistent unemployment which causes hardship to many individuals and their families and detracts from the national welfare by wasting vital human resources; that to overcome this problem the Federal Government in cooperation with the States, should help areas of substantial and persistent unemployment to take effective steps in planning and financing their economic development; that Federal assistance should enable communities to achieve lasting improvement and enhance the domestic prosperity by the establishment of stable and diversified local economies; and that new employment opportunities should be created rather than merely transferred from one community to another.

AREA ECONOMIC REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 3. To assist areas in the United States designated hereinafter as redevelopment areas, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to take such action as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

To assist the Secretary of Commerce (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary"), there is hereby established within the Department of Commerce an Area Economic Redevelopment Administration which shall be headed by an Administrator who shall be appointed by the Secretary and who shall receive compensation at a rate equal to that received by Assistant Secretaries of Commerce. The Administrator shall perform such duties in the execution of this Act as the Secretary may assign.

ADVISORY BOARD

SEC. 4. (a) To advise the Secretary in the performance of functions authorized by this Act, there is authorized to be created an Area Economic Redevelopment Advisory Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board," which shall consist of the following members, all ex officio: The Secretary, as Chairman; the Secretaries of Agriculture; Health, Education, and Welfare; Labor; and Treasury; the Administrators of the Housing and Home Finance Agency and of the Small Business Administration. The Chairman may from time to time invite the participation of officials of other agencies of the executive branch interested in the functions herein authorized. Each member of the Board may designate an officer of his agency to act for him as a member of the Board with respect to any matter there considered.

(b) The Secretary shall appoint a National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment which shall consist of twenty-five members and which shall be composed of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and the public in general. From the members appointed to such Committee the Secretary shall designate a Chairman. Such Committee, or any duly established subcommittee thereof, shall from time to time make recommendations to the Secretary relative to the carrying out of his duties under this Act. Such Committee shall hold not less than two meetings during each calendar year.

(c) The Secretary is authorized from time to time to call together and confer with representatives of the various parties in interest from any industry in which employment has dropped substantially over an extended period of years and which in consequence has been a primary source of high levels of unemployment in several areas designated by the Secretary as redevelopment areas. Conferences convened under authority of this subsection shall consider with and recommend to the Secretary plans and programs with special reference to any such industry to carry out the purposes of this Act.

REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary shall designate as "industrial redevelopment areas" those industrial areas within the United States in which he determines that there has existed substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended period of time. There shall be included among the areas so designated any industrial area—

(1) where the rate of unemployment, excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal factors, is currently 6 per centum or more and has averaged at least 6 per centum for the qualifying time periods specified in (2) below; and

(2) where the annual average rate of unemployment has been at least—

(A) 50 per centum above the national average for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

(B) 75 per centum above the national average for two of the preceding three calendar years, or

(C) 100 per centum above the national average for one of the preceding two calendar years.

(b) The Secretary shall also designate as "rural redevelopment areas" those rural areas within the United States in which he determines that there exist the largest number and percentage of low-income families, and a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment of underemployment. In making the designations under this subsection, the Secretary shall consider, among other relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families in the various rural areas of the United States, the proportion that such low-income families are to the total farm families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of the families in each such area to the general levels of income in the United States, the current and prospective employment opportunities in each such area, and the availability of manpower in each such area for supplemental employment.

(c) In making the determinations provided for in this section, the Secretary shall be guided, but not conclusively governed, by pertinent studies made, and information and data collected or compiled, by (1) departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, (2) State and local governments, (3) universities and land-grant colleges, and (4) private organizations.

(d) Upon the request of the Secretary, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Director of the Bureau of the Census are respectively authorized to conduct such special studies, obtain such information and compile and furnish to the Secretary such data as the Secretary may deem necessary or proper to enable him to make the determinations provided for in this section. The Secretary shall reimburse, out of any funds appropriated to carry out the purposes of this Act, the foregoing officers for any expenditures incurred by them under this section.

(e) As used in this Act, the term "redevelopment area" refers to any area within the United States which has been designated by the Secretary as an industrial redevelopment area or a rural redevelopment area, and may include one or more counties, or one or more municipalities, or a part of a county or municipality.

LOANS AND PARTICIPATION

SEC. 6. (a) The Secretary is authorized to purchase evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (including immediate participations therein) to aid in financing any project for the purchase or development of land and facilities for industrial usage, for the construction of new factory buildings, for rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied factory buildings, or for the alteration, conversion, or enlargement of any existing buildings for industrial use. Such financial assistance shall not be extended for working capital, for purchases of machinery or equipment, or to assist establishments relocating from one area to another when such assistance will result in substantial detriment to the area of original location by increasing unemployment.

(b) Financial assistance under this section shall be on such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines, subject, however, to the following restrictions and limitations:

(1) The total amount of loans and loan participations (including purchased evidences of indebtedness) outstanding at any one time under this section (A) with respect to projects in industrial redevelopment areas shall not exceed $100,000,000, and (B) with respect to projects in rural redevelopment areas shall not exceed $50,000,000;

(2) Such assistance shall be extended only to applicants, both private and public, approved by the State (or any agency or instrumentality thereof concerned with problems of economic development) in which the project to be financed shall be located;

(3) No such assistance shall be extended hereunder unless the financial assistance applied for is not otherwise available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on reasonable terms;

(4) No loan shall be made unless it is determined that an immediate participation is not available;

(5) No evidences of indebtedness shall be purchased and no loans shall be made unless it is determined that there is a reasonable assurance of repayment;

(6) Subject to section 11(5) of this Act, no loan, including renewals or extension thereof may be made hereunder for a period exceeding thirty years and no evidences of indebtedness maturing more than thirty years from date of purchase may be purchased hereunder: Provided, That the foregoing restrictions on maturities shall not apply to securities or obligations received by the Secretary as a claimant in bankruptcy or equitable reorganization or as a creditor in other proceedings attendant upon insolvency of the obligor, or if extension or renewal for additional periods, not to exceed, however, a total of ten years, will aid in the orderly liquidation of such loan or of such evidence of indebtedness;

(7) Such assistance shall not exceed 50 per centum of the aggregate cost to the applicant (excluding all other Federal aid in connection with the undertaking) of acquiring or developing land and facilities, and of constructing, altering, converting, rehabilitating, or enlarging the building or buildings of the particular project and shall, among others, be on the following conditions:

(A) That other funds are available in an amount which, together with the assistance provided hereunder, shall be sufficient to pay such aggregate cost;

(B) That not less than 10 per centum of such aggregate cost be supplied by the State or any agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision thereof, or by a community or area organization, as equity capital or as a loan repayable only after the financial assistance hereunder has been repaid in full according to the terms thereof and, if such loan is secured, its security shall be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing the financial assistance hereunder; and

(C) That in making any loan under this section with respect to an industrial redevelopment area, the Secretary shall require that not less than 5 per centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made shall be supplied by nongovernmental sources.

(8) No such assistance shall be extended unless there shall be submitted and approved by the Secretary an overall program for the economic development of the area and a finding by the State, or any agency, instrumentality, or local political subdivision thereof, that the project for which financial assistance is sought is consistent with such program: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall authorize financial assistance for any project prohibited by laws of the State or local political subdivision in which the project would be located.

(c) Of the funds authorized to be appropriated under section 8 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans under this section with respect to projects in industrial redevelopment areas, and not more than $50,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans under this section with respect to projects in rural redevelopment areas.

LOANS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

SEC. 7. (a) Upon the application of any State, or political subdivision thereof, or private or public organization or association representing any redevelopment area or part thereof, the Secretary is authorized to make loans to assist in financing the purchase or development of land for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within any redevelopment area, if he finds that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelopment area wherein such project is, or will be, located, and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities;

(2) the funds requested for such project are not otherwise available on reasonable terms;

(3) the amount of the loan plus the amount of other available funds for such projects are adequate to insure the completion thereof; and

(4) there is a reasonable expectation of repayment.

(b) No loan under this section shall be for an amount in excess of 50 per centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made. Subject to section 11(5), the maturity date of any such loan shall be not later than thirty years after the date such loan is made.

(c) In making any loan under this section, the Secretary shall require that not less than 10 per centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made shall be supplied by the State (including any political subdivision thereof) within which such project is to be located as equity capital, or as a loan repayable only after the financial assistance provided under this section has been repaid in full, and, if such loan is secured, its security shall be subordinate to the lien or liens securing the financial assistance provided under this section. In determining the amount of participation required under this subsection with respect to any particular project, the Secretary shall give consideration to the financial condition of the State or local government, and to the per capita income of the residents of the redevelopment area, within which such project is to be located.

(d) Of the funds authorized to be appropriated under section 8 of this Act, not more than $50,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans under this section.

APPROPRIATION FOR LOANS

SEC. 8. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $200,000,000 to provide funds for loans under this Act.

INFORMATION

SEC. 9. The Secretary shall aid redevelopment areas by furnishing to interested individuals, communities, industries, and enterprises within such areas any assistance, technical information, market research, or other forms of assistance, information, or advice which are obtainable from the various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government and which would be useful in alleviating conditions of excessive unemployment or underemployment within such areas. The Secretary shall furnish the procurement divisions of the various departments, agencies, and other instrumentalities of the Federal Government with a list containing the names and addresses of business firms which are located in redevelopment areas and which are desirous of obtaining Government contracts for the furnishing of supplies or services, and designating the supplies and services such firms are engaged in providing.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 10. In carrying out his duties under this Act, the Secretary is authorized to provide technical assistance to areas which he has designated as redevelopment areas under this Act. Such assistance shall include studies evaluating the needs of, and development potentialities for, economic growth of such areas. Such assistance may be provided by the Secretary through members of his staff or through the employment of private individuals, partnerships, firms, corporations, or suitable institutions, under contracts entered into for such purpose. Appropriations are hereby authorized for the purposes of this section in an amount not to exceed $4,000,000 annually.

POWERS OF SECRETARY

SEC. 11. In performing his duties under this Act, the Secretary is authorized to—

(1) adopt, alter, and use a seal, which shall be judicially noticed; and subject to the civil service and classification laws, select, employ, appoint, and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, and define their authority and duties, provide bonds for them in such amounts as the Secretary shall determine, and pay the costs of qualification of certain of them as notaries public;

(2) hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, and take such testimony, as he may deem advisable;

(3) request directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics needed to carry out the purposes of this Act; and each department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment, or instrumentality is authorized to furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Secretary;

(4) under regulations prescribed by him, assign or sell at public or private sale, or otherwise dispose of for cash or credit, in his discretion and upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as he shall determine to be reasonable, any evidence of debt, contract, claim, personal property, or security assigned to or held by him in connection with the payment of loans made under this Act, and collect or compromise all obligations assigned to or held by him in connection with the payment of such loans until such time as such obligations may be referred to the Attorney General for suit or collection;

(5) further extend the maturity of or renew any loan made under this Act, beyond the periods stated in such loan or in this Act, for additional periods not to exceed ten years, if such extension or renewal will aid in the orderly liquidation of such loan;

(6) deal with, complete, renovate, improve, modernize, insure, rent, or sell for cash or credit, upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as he shall determine to be reasonable, any real or personal property conveyed, to or otherwise acquired by, him in connection with the payment of loans made under this Act;

(7) pursue to final collection, by way of compromise or other administrative action, prior to reference to the Attorney General, all claims against third parties assigned to him in connection with loans made under this Act. This shall include authority to obtain deficiency judgments or otherwise as in the case of mortgages assigned to the Secretary. Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (41 U.S.C. 5), shall not apply to any contract of hazard insurance or to any purchase or contract for services or supplies on account of property obtained by the Secretary as a result of loans made under this Act if the premium therefor or the amount thereof does not exceed $1,000. The power to convey and to execute in the name of the Secretary deeds of conveyance, deed of release, assignments and satisfactions of mortgages, and any other written instrument relating to real or personal property or any interest therein acquired by the Secretary pursuant to the provisions of this Act may be exercised by the Secretary or by any officer or agent appointed by him for that purpose without the execution of any express delegation of power or power of attorney;

(8) acquire, in any lawful manner, any property (real, personal, or mixed, tangible or intangible), whenever deemed necessary or appropriate to the conduct of the activities authorized in sections 6 and 7 of this Act;

(9) in addition to any powers, functions, privileges, and immunities otherwise vested in him, take any and all actions, including the procurement of the services of attorneys by contract, determined by him to be necessary or desirable in making, servicing, compromising, modifying, liquidating, or otherwise administratively dealing with or realizing on loans made under this Act;

(10) to such an extent as he finds necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, procure the temporary (not in excess of six months) service of experts or consultants or organizations thereof, including stenographic reporting services, by contract or appointment, and in such cases such service shall be without regard to the civil service and classifications law, and, except in the case of stenographic reporting services by organizations, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5); any individual so employed may be compensated at a rate not in excess of $75 per diem, and, while such individual is away from his home or regular place of business, he may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses; and

(11) establish such rules, regulations, and procedures as he may deem appropriate in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

SEC. 12. Whenever the Secretary shall determine that employment conditions within any area previously designated by him as a redevelopment area have changed to such an extent that such area is no longer eligible for such designation under section 5 of this Act, no further assistance shall be granted under this Act with respect to such area and, for the purposes of this Act, such area shall not be considered a redevelopment area: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall (1) prevent any such area from again being designated a redevelopment area under section 5 of this Act if the Secretary determines it to be eligible under such section, or (2) affect the validity of any contracts or undertakings with respect to such area which were entered into pursuant to this Act prior to a determination by the Secretary that such area no longer qualifies as a redevelopment area. The Secretary shall keep the departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and interested State or local agencies, advised at all times of any changes made hereunder with respect to the designation of any area.

PROCUREMENT BY GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES

SEC. 13. Each department, agency, or other instrumentality of the Federal Government engaged in the procurement of any supplies or services for use by or on behalf of the United States shall—

(1) use its best efforts to award negotiated procurement contracts to contractors located within redevelopment areas to the extent procurement objectives will permit;

(2) where deemed appropriate, set aside portions of procurements for negotiation exclusively with firms located in redevelopment areas, if a substantial proportion of production on such negotiated contracts will be performed within redevelopment areas and if such firms will contract for such portions of the procurement at prices no higher than those paid on the balance of such procurements;

(3) where deemed appropriate and consistent with procurement objectives, after the expiration of the period during which bids for any procurement are permitted to be submitted and if the lowest of such bids was submitted by a firm in an area other than a redevelopment area, negotiate with firms in redevelopment areas with a view to ascertaining whether any such firm will furnish the services or supplies with respect to which bids were theretofore submitted for an amount equal to, or less than, the amount of the lowest bid theretofore submitted for the furnishing of such services or supplies, and if such firm can be found, award the contract for the furnishing of such services or supplies to such firm;

(4) assure that firms in redevelopment areas which are on appropriate bidders' lists will be given the opportunity to submit bids or proposals on all procurements for which they are qualified and on which small business joint determinations have not been made, but whenever the number of firms on a bidders' list is exclusive, there shall be included a representative number of firms from redevelopment areas;

(5) in the event of tie bids on offers on any procurement, award the contract to the firm located in a redevelopment area, other things being equal;

(6) encourage prime contractors to award subcontracts to firms in redevelopment areas; and

(7) cooperate with other departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government in achieving the objectives set out in this subsection.

URBAN RENEWAL

SEC. 14. Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"INDUSTRIAL REDEVELOPMENT AREAS UNDER THE AREA ECONOMIC REDEVELOPMENT ACT

"SEC. 113. (a) Whenever the Secretary of Commerce certifies to the Housing and Home Finance Administrator (1) that any county, city, or other municipality (in this section referred to as a 'municipality') is situated in an area designated under section 5(a) of the Area Redevelopment Act as an industrial redevelopment area, and (2) that there is a reasonable probability that with assistance provided under such Act and other undertakings the area will be able to achieve more than temporary improvement in its economic development, the Housing and Home Finance Administrator is authorized to provide financial assistance to a local public agency in any such municipality under this title and the provisions of this section.

"(b) The Housing and Home Finance Administrator may provide such financial assistance under this section without regard to the requirements or limitations of section 110(c) that the project area be clearly predominantly residential in character or that it be redeveloped for predominantly residential uses; but no such assistance shall be provided in any area if such Administrator determines that it will assist in relocating business operations from one area to another when such assistance will result in substantial detriment to the area of original location by increasing unemployment.

"(c) Financial assistance under this section may be provided for any project involving a project area including primarily industrial or commercial structure suitable for rehabilitation under the urban renewal plan for the area.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a contract for financial assistance under this section may include provisions permitting the disposition of any land in the project area designated under the urban renewal plan for industrial or commercial uses to any public agency or non-profit corporation for subsequent disposition as promptly as practicable by such public agency or corporation for the redevelopment of the land in accordance with the urban renewal plan: Provided, That any disposition of such land under this section shall be made at not less than its fair value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan: And provided further, That the purchasers from or lessees of such public agency or corporation, and their assignees, shall be required to assume the obligations imposed under section 105(b).

"(e) Following the execution of any contract for financial assistance under this section with respect to any project, the Housing and Home Finance Administrator may exercise the authority vested in him under this section for the completion of such project, notwithstanding any determination made after the execution of such contract that the area in which the project is located may no longer be an industrial redevelopment area under the Area Redevelopment Act.

"(f) Not more than 10 per centum of the funds authorized for loans under section 102 or for capital grants under section 103 shall be available to provide financial assistance under this section."

URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

SEC. 15. Paragraph (3) of section 701(a) of the Housing Act of 1954 is amended by inserting after "counties which" the following "(A) are situated in areas designated by the Secretary of Commerce under section 5(a) of the Area Redevelopment Act as industrial redevelopment areas, or (B)".

SEC. 16. (a) The Secretary of Labor, in consultation with the Secretary of Commerce, shall determine the vocational training or retraining needs of unemployed individuals residing in redevelopment areas and shall cooperate with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and with existing State and local agencies and officials in charge of existing programs relating to vocational training and retraining for the purpose of assuring that the facilities and services of such agencies are made fully available to such individuals.

(b) Whenever the Secretary of Labor finds that additional facilities or services are needed in the area to meet the vocational training or retraining needs of such individuals, he shall so advise the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, through the Commissioner of Education, shall provide assistance, including financial assistance when necessary, to the appropriate State vocational educational agency in the provision of such additional facilities or services. If the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare finds that the State vocational educational agency is unable to provide the facilities and services needed, he may, after consultation with such agency, provide for the same by agreement or contract with public or private educational institutions: Provided, That the Secretary of Labor shall arrange to provide any necessary technical assistance for setting up apprenticeship, journeyman, and other job training needed in the locality.

RETRAINING SUBSISTENCE PAYMENTS

SEC. 17. (a) The Secretary of Labor in consultation with the Secretary of Commerce shall, on behalf of the United States, enter into agreements with States in which redevelopment areas are located, under which the Secretary of Labor shall make payments to such States for the purpose of enabling such States, as agents of the United States, to make weekly retraining payments to unemployed individuals residing within such redevelopment areas who are not entitled to unemployment compensation (either because their unemployment compensation benefits have been exhausted or because they were not insured for such compensation) and who have been certified by the Secretary of Labor to be undergoing vocational training or retraining under section 16 of this Act. Such payments shall be made only during the period the individual is receiving vocational training or retraining under section 16 of this Act, but not in any event to exceed sixteen weeks, and the amounts of such payments shall be equal to the amount of the average weekly unemployment compensation payment payable in the State making such payments.

(b) The Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Commerce shall jointly prescribe such rules and regulations as they may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(c) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, not in excess of $10,000,000, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

PREVAILING RATE OF WAGE AND FORTY-HOUR WEEK

SEC. 18. The Secretary shall take such action as may be necessary to insure that all laborers and mechanics employed by contractors or subcontractors on projects undertaken by public applicants assisted under this Act (1) shall be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing on the same type of work on similar construction in the immediate locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Act of August 30, 1935 (Davis-Bacon Act), and (2) shall be employed not more than forty hours in any one week unless the employee receives wages for his employment in excess of the hours specified above at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed.

PENALTIES

SEC. 19. (a) Whoever makes any statement knowing it to be false, or whoever willfully overvalues any security, for the purpose of obtaining for himself or for any applicant any loan, or extension thereof by renewal, deferment of action, or otherwise, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security thereof, or for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the Secretary, or for the purpose of obtaining money, property, or anything of value, under this title, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

FEDERAL GRANTS FOR SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION AND TEACHERS' SALARIES

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and my colleague, the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. HART], I introduce and send to the desk, for appropriate reference, a bill to provide a program of Federal grants for school construction and teachers' salaries.

There are few legislative subjects that have commanded as much attention as has Federal assistance for our country's elementary and secondary schools. There appears to be agreement on both sides of the aisle in both Houses of Congress that the Federal Government must place its resources and prestige behind the fight for better schools. The question is, how should this be done?

The bill that I introduce is in all respects a duplicate of S. 8, the measure which passed the Senate in 1960. It provides Federal grants to each State, to be used as each State decided either for construction or salaries or for a combination of both. The average grant across the Nation would be equal to $20 per school-age child. Each State's per pupil grant would vary, since the money is to be allocated on a formula which relates the State's per capita wealth to the per capita wealth of the Nation.

The same imperative facts which caused the Senate to pass this bill last year are still with us. All too many of our children receive their education in buildings that are overcrowded, under-lighted, poorly ventilated, and lacking in minimum sanitary facilities. The most recent figures of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare demonstrate that we still have a shortage of more than 130,000 classrooms.

The salaries that are paid to the majority of the Nation's teachers are still inadequate to attract the gifted people we need in the profession.

The latest estimate of the National Education Association shows that the average salary for teachers in the school year 1960-61 will be slightly above $5,000 a year. The average beginning salary for teachers is clearly far below that amount. We can never expect to recruit the talent we must have in the teaching profession when the beginning salaries do not match even factory wages, not to mention professional salary rates.

The establishment of a Federal school-assistance program has been a goal of mine since I first came to the Senate. I introduced my first general school-aid bill in 1957; and the passage of S. 8 last year was a good omen for the final adoption of such a program.

I offer my bill this year as a continued expression of my deep concern for our schools and as a starting point for what I trust will be the Senate's passage of a Federal education program.

I ask unanimous consent that an analysis of the bill be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the analysis will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 8) to authorize Federal financial assistance for school construction and teachers' salaries, introduced by Mr. McNAMARA (for himself and Mr. HART), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The analysis presented by Mr. McNAMARA is as follows:

ANALYSIS OF S. 8

SECTION 1—SHORT TITLE

This section provides that it may be cited as the "School Construction Act of 1961."

SECTION 2—DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

This section declares that it is the purpose of the bill to provide for a 2-year program of Federal grants to the States to assist them in constructing urgently needed public elementary and secondary school facilities in local communities and for teachers' salaries.

SECTION 3—ASSURANCE AGAINST FEDERAL INTERFERENCE IN SCHOOLS

This section provides that in the administration of the act, no department, agency, officer, or employee of the United States shall exercise any direction, supervision, or control over the policy determination, personnel, curriculum, program of instruction, or the administration or operation of any school or school system.

SECTION 4—APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZED

This section authorizes annual appropriations of an amount equal to $20 times a number equal to the school age population of the United States, as defined in sec. 5(b) (4).

SECTION 5—ALLOTMENTS AND PAYMENTS TO STATES

Subsection (a) provides that the funds appropriated in any year would be allotted among the States on the basis of relative school-age population as weighted by relative income per school-age child. These allotments would be subject to the effort for school purposes of the respective State (effort index) after the first year of the program.

The U.S. Commissioner of Education would allot to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to the funds appropriated for the year as the product of (1) the State's school-age population multiplied by (2) the State's allotment ratio, bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all the States.

Subsection (b) provides the definitions of the terms used in subsection (a). A State's allotment ratio would vary inversely with the ratio which exists between the income per child of school age for the State and the income per child of school age for all the States, with the ratio for a State at the national average being 0.50. In no case would an allotment ratio for a State be less than 0.25 or more than 0.75. The allotment ratio for Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands would be set at 0.75.

The income per child of school age for any State would be the total personal income for the State divided by the number of school-age children in the State. The income per child of school age for all the States would be similarly computed. Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands would be excluded from these computations inasmuch as their allotment ratios are specified.

Subsection (c) provides that as soon as possible after appropriated amounts are available for payment the Commissioner shall pay each State which has submitted a proper application the amount allotted to it subject to any adjustments or reallocations made under the effort index provided for in section 6.

SECTION 6—MAINTENANCE OF STATE AND LOCAL SUPPORT FOR SCHOOL FINANCING (EFFORT INDEX)

This section provides that for the second year of the program, the allotment of any State would be reduced by the percentage (if any) that the State's school-effort index is less than the national school-effort index. The total of the reductions would be reapportioned among the States not subject to such reductions by increasing proportionately the sum of the amounts originally apportioned to them for the year.

The State index would be deemed equal to the national index in the case of (1) Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and the District of Columbia and (2) any State whose expenditures per public school child in average daily attendance were not less than those for all the States.

A State's school-effort index would be determined on the basis of the ratio of school expenditures per public schoolchild in average daily attendance to the State's income per child of school age. The national school-effort index would be based on comparable figures for all the States (excluding Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the District of Columbia).

The school expenditures are expenditures by the States and subdivisions for elementary and secondary education made from funds derived from State and local sources as determined by the Commissioner of Education for the most recent school year for which satisfactory data from the States are available to him. The number of children in average daily attendance would be similarly determined.

The income per child of school age for any State and for all the States (mentioned above) would be determined on the basis of data for the most recent year for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce.

SECTION 7—STATE APPLICATIONS

A State education agency which desires to receive an allotment and payment under this program must submit to the Commissioner of Education an application which (a) provides assurance that the State education agency will be the sole administering agency for the funds received; (b) sets forth procedures to insure that funds will be allocated among projects within the States so that priority is given to local education agencies, which, in the judgment of the State education agency, have the greatest need for additional school facilities and which are least able to finance the cost of needed school facilities; (c) provides assurance that every applicant whose application for funds is denied will be given an opportunity for a hearing before the State education agency; (d) sets forth procedures for such fiscal control as may be necessary to assure proper distribution of funds under this act.

When a State agency has exclusive responsibility for the financing of the construction of schools, the Commissioner may modify or make inapplicable the provisions of this section to the extent he deems such action appropriate because of such special governmental and school organization of the State.

SECTION 8—MATCHING BY STATES AND LOCAL COMMUNITIES

Subsection (a) provides that in the second year of the act, a State in order to receive its second year grant, must have increased its own expenditures by an amount not less than the product of (a) the State's share and (b) the expenditures of the State and local communities in the base school year of 1960-61. The subsection further provides that a State's second year grant will be reduced by the amount which the State fails to match the prescribed amount, and provides that such reduction shall be reallocated among the remaining States.

Subsection (b) defines the "State's share" as 5 percent of the remainder of $1 less than State's allotment ratio (sec. 5) except that in no case shall the ratio be less than 0.33% or more than 0.66%.

Subsection (c) defines "expenditures for elementary and secondary education."

Subsection (d) provides that a State shall be considered to have matched its Federal funds in any year in which its school-age 4 1961".

6 SEC. 2. The Congress declares that, even during periods
7 of prosperity for the Nation as a whole, some of our com-
8 munities suffer substantial and persistent unemployment; that

1 such unemployment causes hardship to many individuals and
2 their families and detracts from the national welfare by wast-
3 ing vital human resources and that the Federal Government,
4 in cooperation with the States, should take effective steps to 5 reduce the substantial and persistent unemployment in such 6 areas by the establishment of stable and diversified local 7 economies and the creation of new employment opportunities.

8 AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

9 SEC. 101. (a) The Secretary of Commerce, hereinafter
10 referred to as the Secretary, may designate as an area of 11 substantial and persistent unemployment any area certified
12 as eligible for such designation by the Secretary of Labor.

14 unemployment in such areas in the United States so desig-
15 nated the Secretary is authorized—

16 (1) to make grants for technical assistance in

2 new industries based on local resources, and to expand
3 existing industries.

4 (2) through grants made in accordance with the 5 provisions of section 106 of this Act, to towns pre-6 dominantly dependent on one industry and to rural 7 areas to help them to develop manufacturing, processing,
8 and other activities calculated to diversify and improve
9 their economies.

10 (d) The Secretary shall coordinate his functions under 11 this Act with those of the Secretary of Agriculture and other 12 officials administering Federal programs affecting local 13 economic conditions.

14 (e) The Secretary shall not provide any assistance
15 under this section if it is reasonable to believe that any 16 persons who will benefit, directly or indirectly, from such 17 assistance engage in, urge, seek, or promote any restrictive
18 work practices.

19 (f) As used in this Act—

20 (1) The term “United States” includes the several

12 as eligible for designation as areas of substantial and per-13 sistent unemployment whenever he finds, on the basis of 14 available labor force data or studies, that—

15 (1) the current rate of unemployment in the area,
16 excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or 17 seasonal factors, is 6 per centum, and 18 (2) the annual average rate of unemployment in 19 the area has been at least—

20 (A) 6 per centum for the period set out in 21 the applicable provision of subsection (B), and 22 (B) (i) 50 per centum above the national 23 average for three of the preceding four calendar

7 or to provide assistance to others in the preparation of,
8 studies of the size, characteristics, skills, adaptability, occu-
9 pational potentialities, and related aspects of the labor force
10 of an area necessary to determine whether such area should 11 be certified under this section.

12 (c) When the labor force in an area designated under 13 section 101 is not utilizing its full human resources and 14 skills, the Secretary of Labor is authorized to provide advice
15 and technical assistance in developing and carrying out a 16 program to improve such utilization by the labor force.

17 (d) Whenever the Secretary of Labor finds a need for 18 vocational education services in an area designated under 19 section 101 and when such area has an economic develop-20 ment program as provided in section 107 (b) (5), he is 21 authorized to assist interested agencies to determine the vo-
22 cational training needs of unemployed individuals residing 23 in the area, and he shall notify the Secretary of Health,
24 Education, and Welfare of the vocational training or re-

1 training requirements of the area. The Secretary of Health,
2 Education, and Welfare, through the Commissioner of Edu-
3 cation, is authorized to assist the State vocational education
4 agency in providing such services in the area. There is 5 hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $1,500,-
6 000 annually for the purpose of providing, when necessary
7 and appropriate, financial assistance under this subsection.

5 half of 1 per centum higher than the rate currently 6 payable under section 108 (e) on advances from the 14 or will be, located;

15 (B) The financial assistance applied for is

2 tality, or local political subdivision thereof.

3 (7) That nothing in this Act shall authorize finan-

20 by the Secretary of Labor, for benefit payments made from 21 such fund on account of employees performing activities au-

SECTION 9—PERIOD FOR USE OF FUNDS AND CERTIFICATION BY STATES

Subsection (a) provides that when funds are received under this act by the State they shall be deemed to be State funds to be distributed and expended not later than the end of the following fiscal year.

Subsection (b) provides that prior to the termination of such following fiscal year each State education agency receiving funds under this program is to (1) certify to the Commissioner the amount of such funds received which have been so distributed and expended, and (2) pay to him any amount of these funds which have not been so expended.

SECTION 11—DEFINITIONS

This section defines the terms "Commissioner," "State," "State education agency," "local education agency," "school facilities," "construct," "constructing," and "construction."

The term "State" includes Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands, and the District of Columbia, unless otherwise designated in the act.

The term "school facilities" is defined so that Federal assistance would be used to provide classrooms and related facilities for education in a State which is provided by a school district for elementary or secondary education at public expense and under public supervision and direction. This includes furniture, equipment, machinery, utilities, and instructional materials (other than textbooks). The term "instructional materials" would include, among other things, audiovisual equipment, films, film strips, and reference works for school libraries. It also includes interests in land including site, grading, and improvement. It does not include, however, athletic stadiums, or structures, or facilities intended primarily for events for which admission is to be charged.

The terms "construct," "constructing," and "construction" include the preparation of drawings and specifications for school facilities; erecting; building; acquiring, altering, remodeling, improving, or extending school facilities; and the inspection and supervision of the construction of school facilities.

The term "teacher" means any member of the instructional staff of a public elementary or secondary school as defined by the State education agency of each State.

The term "teachers' salaries" means the monetary compensation paid to teachers for services rendered in connection with their employment.

AID TO DISTRESSED AREAS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to aid distressed areas.

In the 2d session of the 86th Congress, on May 18, 1960, 5 days after the President vetoed Senate 722, I and five of my Republican colleagues introduced Senate bill 3569, which provided for an outlay of $180 million, including $100 million, in public facility loans. Senate bill 722 had called for an outlay, in one form or another, of about $389 million. Senate bill 722 passed the Senate by a vote of 49 to 46 in 1959. That means that it secured a majority of only 3 votes out of a total of 95 votes. In amended form it passed the House on May 4, 1960, by a vote of 202 to 184. This was a majority of only 18 votes out of a total of 386 votes. On May 6, 1960, the Senate voted 45 to 32 to accept the House amendments. On May 13 this measure was vetoed. The veto message languished for 6 weeks and then was called up for consideration. The veto was sustained on June 24 in the Senate by a vote of 45 to 39.

Two months later, on August 18, 1960, a 1-day hearing was held by the Subcommittee on Production and Stabilization of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. The Subcommittee consists of nine members. The hearing was spirited, but fruitless. It recessed at 4:30 p.m. on August 18.

Senate bill 3569, which I had introduced, was before the subcommittee at that time, and with it there was the appeal of the President in his veto message for legislation in this field. I deem it of such importance that I shall include the entire veto message in this statement.

The key expression in the veto message is found in paragraph VI:

My profound hope is that sound, new legislation will be promptly enacted.

But a majority of the subcommittee thought otherwise, and hence the Presidential entreaty was ignored. I believe it was fair and reasonable, therefore, to assume that the Democrat majority actually preferred an issue to some accomplishment in this field. But the problem and the challenge which the administration has recognized for more than 5 years is like the little man on the stair, and will not go away.

Certain it is, judging from campaign and possible campaign statements, that this matter is scheduled for early congressional action. To this end we have reconsidered Senate bill 3569 and the other legislative proposals dealing with this problem and we now introduce a bill which we regard as a sound, fair, and effective approach.

This bill embodies the basic provisions of S. 3569. It provides for an outlay of $180 million, but in this bill all of this outlay will go for the aid of distressed areas and assistance in developing the economic growth potential of this country.

This bill is based on the philosophy that the Federal Government, with all of its many complexities, should not step willy-nilly into our economy, but should deal only in areas where people want to help themselves but have problems too large for solution on the local level without assistance.

This bill does not hold out illusory promises of aid for depressed areas which have been bereft of their economic well-being by the circumstances of time and change. These areas would get no aid under those proposals which require redevelopment on the spot, because of the requirement that before any aid can be given there must be reasonable assurance that the aid can be paid back. What if the coal is gone and the whole population cannot be supported by new industry? Are those areas to be left without aid because the aid must be on the spot and must pay out? Any assistance program must be made broader and more flexible if it is to solve the problem. The solution must not be restricted to a particular area. To do so may be to create not permanent improvement of opportunity, but a permanent dole.

On November 28 there appeared in Time magazine a well-rounded article on this subject with emphasis on this thesis:

Government aid, if it is forthcoming, will not work without the will of a city to revitalize itself.

I believe this article merits inclusion in this statement.

The bill contains another significant feature. Because it is a bill to authorize the appropriations of Federal funds to provide greater employment opportunities, it also requires that such funds shall not be used where restrictive work practices exist. Those who seek Federal assistance should be ready to permit everyone to do a fair day's work and those who seek to provide Federal assistance should stand ready to require that everyone does a fair day's work.

It is to be assumed that this whole problem of distressed area assistance will have further consideration by the committee, and I trust the solution embodied in the bill which I introduced for myself and my colleagues will command favorable consideration by the committee.

The testimony of the Secretary of Commerce, Frederick Mueller, on August 18, is so much to the point that it deserves a place in these remarks in order to round out the whole story, and I request consent to have this testimony, the Time article, and the President's veto message made a part of my remarks.

Mr. President, this is the whole story, and this can then become, I think, for every Member of the Senate, if he so desires, a reference piece that he can clip and put in his notebook, because I was very careful and made sure that the dates of the rollcalls and the vote on the veto measure were quite correct.

I ask that the bill be permitted to lie on the desk for the next 2 days for such Members of the Senate as may want to cosponsor the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill and statements will be printed in the RECORD; and the bill will lie on the desk as requested.

The bill (S. 9) to assist areas to develop and maintain stable and diversified economies and create new employment opportunities, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. DIRKSEN (for himself and other Senators) was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Area Assistance Act of 1961."

DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The Congress declares that, even during periods of prosperity for the Nation as a whole, some of our communities suffer substantial and persistent unemployment; that such unemployment causes hardship to many individuals and their families and detracts from the national welfare by wasting vital human resources and that the Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, should take effective steps to reduce the substantial and persistent unemployment in such areas by the establishment of stable and diversified local economies and the creation of new employment opportunities.

AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

SEC. 101. (a) The Secretary of Commerce, hereinafter referred to as the Secretary, may designate as an area of substantial and persistent unemployment any area certified as eligible for such designation by the Secretary of Labor.

(b) To assist in reducing substantial and persistent unemployment in such areas in the United States so designated the Secretary is authorized—

(1) to make grants for technical assistance in accordance with the provisions of section 106 of this Act; and

(2) to provide loans in accordance with the provisions of section 107 of this Act.

(c) The Secretary is also authorized to extend the full cooperation of the Federal Government—

(1) through technical advice and consultation and, when necessary, through the conduct of special studies to all areas in the United States to promote the more effective use of local resources, the establishment of new industries based on local resources, and to expand existing industries.

(2) through grants made in accordance with the provisions of section 106 of this Act, to towns predominantly dependent on one industry and to rural areas to help them to develop manufacturing, processing, and other activities calculated to diversify and improve their economies.

(d) The Secretary shall coordinate his functions under this Act with those of the Secretary of Agriculture and other officials administering Federal programs affecting local economic conditions.

(e) The Secretary shall not provide any assistance under this section if it is reasonable to believe that any persons who will benefit, directly or indirectly, from such assistance engage in, urge, seek or promote any restrictive work practices.

(f) As used in this Act—

(1) The term "United States" includes the several States, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico.

(2) The term "State" refers to an individual State, the District of Columbia or Puerto Rico; and

(3) The term "loan" includes loans, immediate participation in loans, and purchase of evidences of indebtedness.

(4) The term "restrictive work practices" includes failing or refusing to perform any work in an efficient and economical manner, and requirements that unnecessary work be performed or unnecessary positions of employment created or continued.

AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF LABOR

SEC. 102. (a) The Secretary of Labor shall from time to time, or upon the request of the Secretary, or any appropriate State agency or political subdivision, certify areas as eligible for designation as areas of substantial and persistent unemployment whenever he finds, on the basis of available labor force data or studies, that—

(1) the current rate of unemployment in the area, excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal factors, is 6 per centum and

(2) the annual average rate of unemployment in the area has been at least—

(A) 6 per centum for the period set out in the applicable provision of subsection (B) and

(B) (i) 50 per centum above the national average for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

(ii) 75 per centum above the national average of two of the preceding three calendar years, or

(iii) 100 per centum above the national average for one of the preceding two calendar years.

(b) The Secretary of Labor is authorized, whenever he determines that such studies are needed, to undertake, or to provide assistance to others in the preparation of, studies of the size, characteristics, skills, adaptability, occupational potentialities, and related aspects of the labor force of an area necessary to determine whether such area should be certified under this section.

(c) When the labor force in an area designated under section 101 is not utilizing its full human resources and skills, the Secretary of Labor is authorized to provide advice and technical assistance in developing and carrying out a program to improve such utilization by the labor force.

(d) Whenever the Secretary of Labor finds a need for vocational education services in an area designated under section 101 and when such area has an economic development program as provided in section 107(b)

(5), he is authorized to assist interested agencies to determine the vocational training needs of unemployed individuals residing in the area, and he shall notify the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare of the vocational training or retraining requirements of the area. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, through the Commissioner of Education, is authorized to assist the State vocational education agency in providing such services in the area. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $1,500,000 annually for the purpose of providing, when necessary and appropriate, financial assistance under this subsection.

AUTHORITY OF HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE ADMINISTRATOR

SEC. 103. Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, is amended by adding the following new heading and section at the end of title I:

"AREAS OF SUBSTANTIAL AND PERSISTENT UNEMPLOYMENT"

"SEC. 113. (a) When the Secretary of Commerce certifies to the Administrator (1) that any county, city, or other municipality (all hereafter referred to as 'municipality' in this section) is situated in an area designated by the Secretary of Commerce pursuant to the Area Assistance Act of 1961 as an area of substantial and persistent unemployment, and (2) that there is a reasonable probability that with assistance provided under the Area Assistance Act of 1961 and other undertakings the area will be able to achieve lasting improvement in its economic development, the Administrator is authorized to extend financial assistance to a local public agency in any such municipality under this title and the provisions of this section.

"(b) The Administrator may provide such financial assistance under this section without regard to the requirements or limitations of section 110(c) of this title that the project area clearly be predominantly residential in character or become predominantly residential under the urban renewal plan.

"(c) Financial assistance under this section may be provided for any project involving a project area including primarily industrial or commercial structures suitable for rehabilitation under the urban renewal plan for the area.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this title, a contract for financial assistance under this section may include provisions permitting the disposal of any land in the project area designated under the urban renewal plan for industrial or commercial uses to any public agency or nonprofit corporation for subsequent disposition as promptly as practicable by such public agency or corporation for the redevelopment of the land in accordance with the urban renewal plan: Provided, That any disposal of such land to such public agency or corporation under this section shall be made at not less than its fair value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan: And provided further, That the purchaser from or lessees of such public agency or corporation, and their assignees, shall be required to assume the obligations imposed in conformity with the requirements of section 105(b) hereof.

"(e) After any contract for financial assistance under this section has been executed with respect to any project, the Administrator may complete such project notwithstanding any subsequent determination that the area in which the project is located is no longer an area of substantial and persistent unemployment.

"(f) Not more than 10 per centum of the funds authorized for capital grants under section 103 after June 30, 1960, shall be available to provide financial assistance under this section."

SEC. 104. (a) The first sentence of section 202(c) of title II of the Housing Amendments of 1955 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) In processing applications for financial assistance under this section, the Administrator shall give (1) priority to applications of counties, cities, and other municipalities and political subdivisions for financing needed public facilities in areas determined to be areas of substantial and persistent unemployment under the Area Assistance Act of 1961: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce certifies there is reasonable probability that with assistance made available under the Area Assistance Act of 1961 and other undertakings such areas will be able to achieve lasting improvement in their economic development; and

(2) a first priority above all others to applications for financing needed public facilities in connection with, and that will directly serve, a project eligible under section 107 of the Area Assistance Act of 1961."

(b) The first sentence of section 203(a) of title II of the Housing Amendments of 1955 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) In order to finance activities under this title, the Administrator is authorized and empowered to issue from time to time to the Secretary of the Treasury notes and other obligations in an amount outstanding at any one time not to exceed $100,000,000, provided that such limit shall be increased by such amounts, not exceeding an aggregate of $100,000,000, as may be specified from time to time in appropriation Acts."

URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

SEC. 105. Paragraph (3) of section 701(a) of the Housing Act of 1954 is amended by in-serting after "Cities, other municipalities, and counties which" the following: "(A) are situated in areas designated as areas of substantial and persistent unemployment under section 101(a) of the Area Assistance Act of 1961, or (B)."

GRANTS FOR TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 106. The grants for technical assistance which the Secretary is authorized to make by sections 101(b)(1) and 101(c)(2), may include grants for studies to determine the needs of the areas designated under Section 101(a) for the development of their economic growth potential. These grants may be made without regard to section 3648 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U.S.C. 529). Appropriations are hereby authorized for these grants in an amount not to exceed $3,500,000 annually. To the extent he may deem reasonable, taking into account the financial ability of the grantee and other relevant considerations, the Secretary shall obtain from the grantee contributions to the costs of projects undertaken under section 101(c)(2).

LOANS

SEC. 107. (a) In carrying out section 101(b)(2) of this Act the Secretary is authorized to purchase evidences of indebtedness and to make or participate in loans to aid in financing any project within an area of substantial and persistent unemployment for the purchase or development of land and facilities for industrial usage, and for the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, conversion, or enlargement of buildings for industrial use. Such financial assistance shall not be used for working capital, for the purchase of machinery or equipment, or to assist establishments relocating from one area to another.

(b) Financial assistance under this section shall be on such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines, subject, however, to the following restrictions and limitations:

(1) The total amount of loans and loan participations (including purchased evidences of indebtedness) outstanding at any one time under this section shall not exceed $75,000,000;

(2) Such assistance shall be extended only to applicants, whether private or public, approved by the State (or any agency or instrumentality thereof concerned with problems of economic development) in which the project to be financed shall be located;

(3) No loan, including renewals or extensions thereof, made hereunder may have a term exceeding thirty years and no evidences of indebtedness maturing more than thirty years from date of purchase may be purchased hereunder: Provided, That the foregoing restrictions on maturities shall not apply to securities or obligations received by the Secretary as a claimant in bankruptcy or equitable reorganization or as a creditor in other proceedings attendant upon insolvency of the obligor or to extensions or renewals for additional periods not to exceed a total of ten years, if such extensions or renewals will aid in the orderly liquidation of such loans or of such evidence of indebtedness;

(4) Each loan shall bear interest at a rate one-half of 1 per centum higher than the rate currently payable under section 108(e) on advances from the Treasury.

(5) (A) Not less than 15 per centum of the aggregate cost to the applicant (excluding all other Federal aid in connection with the undertaking) of acquiring or developing land and facilities, and of constructing, altering, converting, rehabilitating, or enlarging the building or buildings of the particular project shall be supplied by the State or any agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision thereof, or by a community or area organization, as equity capital or as a loan repayable only after the financial assistance hereunder has been repaid in full according to its terms and any security for any such loan shall be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing the financial assistance hereunder;

(B) Not more than 35 per centum of such aggregate cost to the applicant may be loaned by the Secretary under the terms of this Act and security for such a loan may be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens which secure any loan or financing other than funds required by section 107(b)(5) (A).

(C) No loans shall be made hereunder unless other funds are available in an amount which, together with assistance provided hereunder and funds required by section 107(b)(5) (A), shall be sufficient to pay such aggregate cost; and

(6) The Secretary first shall find that—

(A) It is reasonable to believe that the project for which financial assistance is sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the area of substantial and persistent unemployment in which it is, or will be, located;

(B) The financial assistance applied for is not otherwise available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on reasonable terms;

(C) A participation loan cannot be arranged;

(D) There is a reasonable assurance of repayment;

(E) The project for which financial assistance is sought is consistent with an overall program approved by the Secretary for the economic development of the area and a finding to that effect has been made by the State, or any agency, instrumentality, or local political subdivision thereof.

(7) That nothing in this Act shall authorize financial assistance for any project prohibited by laws of the State or local political subdivision in which the project would be located.

AREA ASSISTANCE FUND

SEC. 108. (a) There is hereby authorized to be established in the Treasury of the United States a revolving fund to be known as the Area Assistance Fund (hereinafter referred to as the "fund"), which shall be available to the Secretary for the payment of all obligations and expenses in connection with the loans authorized under section 101(b)(2).

(b) When requested by the Secretary, advances shall be made to the fund from the appropriations made therefor. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of making advances to the fund, without fiscal year limitation, an amount not to exceed $75,000,000.

(c) Receipts arising from the loan program shall be credited to the fund.

(d) Any moneys in the fund determined by the Secretary to be in excess of current needs shall be credited to the appropriation from which advanced to be held for future advances to the fund.

(e) There shall be paid into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury at the close of each fiscal year interest on advances to the fund at rates which shall be determined at the time the advances or commitments for advances are made, by the Secretary of the Treasury who shall take into consideration the current average market yields to maturity of outstanding marketable obligations of the United States having maturities comparable to loans made by the Secretary from such fund.

(f) Contributions shall be made from the fund to the civil service retirement and disability fund, in amounts determined annually by the Civil Service Commission, for the Government's share of the cost of the civil service retirement system applicable to employees (and their beneficiaries) performing activities authorized under section

101(b)(2). Contributions shall also be made to the employee's compensation fund, in amounts determined annually by the Secretary of Labor, for benefit payments made from such fund on account of employees performing activities authorized under section 101(b)(2). Such determinations shall include the fair portion of the cost of the administration of the respective funds, which shall be paid by the Secretary into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

SEC. 109. Whenever the Secretary shall determine that employment conditions within any area previously designated by him as an area of substantial and persistent unemployment have changed to such an extent that such area is no longer eligible for such designation under section 101(a) of this Act, no further assistance shall be granted under this Act, with respect to such area and, for the purposes of this Act, such area shall not be considered an area of substantial and persistent unemployment: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall—

(a) prevent any such area from again being designated an area of substantial and persistent unemployment under section 101(a) of this Act if the Secretary determines it to be eligible under such section, or

(b) affect the validity of any contracts or undertakings with respect to such area which were entered into pursuant to this act prior to a determination by the Secretary that such area no longer qualifies as an area of substantial and persistent unemployment. The Secretary shall keep the departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and interested State or local agencies, advised at all times of any changes made hereunder with respect to the designation of any area.

(b) maintain a set of accounts which shall be audited annually by the General Accounting Office in accordance with the principles and procedures applicable to commercial transactions as provided by the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, and no other audit shall be required: Provided, That the Secretary with respect to the program of financial assistance authorized by section 101(b)(2) shall determine the character of and the necessity for obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, subject to provisions of law specifically applicable to Government corporations.

The power to convey and to execute in the name of the Secretary deeds of conveyance, deeds of release, assignments and satisfactions of mortgages, and any other written instrument relating to real property or any interest therein acquired by the Secretary pursuant to the provisions of this title may be exercised by the Secretary or by any officer or agent appointed by him for the purpose;

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 119: In addition to appropriations specifically authorized by sections 106 and 108, appropriations are further authorized for the carrying out of other provisions and purposes of this Act.

The matters presented by Mr. DIRKSEN are as follows:

VETO MESSAGE—AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT, S. 722, 86TH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION

To the Senate of the United States:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 722, the area redevelopment bill.

For 5 consecutive years I have urged the Congress to enact sound area assistance legislation. On repeated occasions I have clearly outlined standards for the kind of program that is needed and that I would gladly approve.

In 1958 I vetoed a bill because it departed greatly from those standards. In 1959, despite my renewed urging, no area assistance bill was passed by the Congress.

Now in 1960, another election year, a new bill is before me that contains certain features which I find even more objectionable than those I found unacceptable in the 1958 bill.

The people of the relatively few communities of chronic unemployment—who want to share in the general prosperity—are, after 5 years, properly becoming increasingly impatient and are rightfully desirous of constructive action. The need is for truly sound and helpful legislation on which the Congress and the Executive can agree. There is still time and I willingly pledge once again my wholehearted cooperation in obtaining such a law.

S. 722 is seriously defective in six major respects which are summarized immediately below and discussed in detail thereafter.

1. S. 722 would squander the Federal taxpayers' money where there is only temporary economic difficulty, curable without the special Federal assistance provided in the bill. In consequence, communities in genuine need would receive less Federal help for industrial development projects than under the administration's proposal.

2. Essential local, State, and private initiative would be materially inhibited by the excessive Federal participation that S. 722 would authorize.

3. Federal financing of plant machinery and equipment is unwise and unnecessary and therefore wasteful of money that otherwise could be of real help.

4. The Federal loan assistance which S. 722 would provide for the construction of sewers, water mains, access roads, and other public facilities is unnecessary because such assistance is already available under an existing Government program. Outright grants for such a purpose, a provision of S. 722, are wholly inappropriate.

5. The provisions for Federal loans for the construction of industrial buildings in rural areas are incongruous and unnecessary.

6. The creation of a new Federal agency is not needed and would actually delay initiation of the new program for many months.

I

The most striking defect of S. 722 is that it would make eligible for Federal assistance areas that don't need it—thus providing less help for communities in genuine need than would the administration's proposal. S. 722, as opposed to the administration bill, would more than double the number of eligible communities competing for Federal participation in loans for the construction or refurbishing of plants for industrial use—the main objective of both bills. Communities experiencing only temporary economic difficulty would accordingly be made eligible under S. 722 and the dissipation of Federal help among them would deprive communities afflicted with truly chronic unemployment of the full measure of assistance they so desperately desire and which the administration bill would give them.

II

Lasting solutions to the problems of chronic unemployment can only be forthcoming if local citizens—the people most immediately concerned—take the lead in planning and financing them. The principal objective is to develop new industry. The Federal Government can and should help, but the major role in the undertaking must be the local community's. Neither money alone, nor the Federal Government alone, can do the job. The States also must help, and many are, but in many instances and in many ways they could do much more.

Under S. 722, however, financing of industrial development projects by the Federal Government—limited to 35 percent under the administration's proposal—could go as high as 65 percent, local community participation could be as low as 10 percent, and private financing as little as 5 percent. Furthermore, although S. 722 conditions this assistance on approval by a local economic development organization, if no such organization exists one can be appointed from Washington.

III

S. 722 would authorize Federal loans for the acquisition of machinery and equipment to manufacturers locating in eligible areas. Loans for machinery and equipment are unnecessary, unwise, and costly. Much more money would be required and unnecessarily spent, much less money would find its way into truly helpful projects, and manufacturers would be subsidized unnecessarily vis-a-vis their competitors.

IV

S. 722 would authorize further unnecessary spending by providing both loans and grants—up to 100 percent of the cost—for the construction of access roads, sewers, water mains, and other local public facilities.

Grants for local public facilities far exceed any appropriate Federal responsibility. Even though relatively modest at the start, they would set predictably expensive and discriminatory precedents.

With regard to loans for such purposes, exemption from Federal income taxes makes it possible today for local communities in almost every case to borrow on reasonable terms from private sources. Whenever such financing is difficult to obtain, the need can be filled by the existing public facility loan program of the Housing and Home Finance Agency—a program which S. 722 would needlessly duplicate and for which an additional $100 million authorization has already been requested.

V

S. 722 would make a minimum of 600 rural counties eligible for Federal loans for the construction of industrial buildings in such areas. The rural development program and the Small Business Administration are already contributing greatly to the economic improvement of low-income rural areas. Increasing the impact of these two activities, particularly the rural development program, is a preferable course.

VI

Finally, S. 722 would also create a new Federal agency and would, in consequence, mean many unnecessary additions to the Federal payroll and a considerable delay in the program before the new agency could be staffed and functioning effectively. None of this is necessary, for all that needs to be done can be done—much better and immediately—by the existing Department of Commerce.

Again, I strongly urge the Congress to enact new legislation at this session—but without those features of S. 722 that I find objectionable. I would, however, accept the eligibility criteria set forth in the bill that first passed the Senate even though these criteria are broader than those contained in the administration bill.

Moreover, during the process of developing a new bill, I would hope that in other areas of past differences solutions could be found satisfactory to both the Congress and the Executive.

My profound hope is that sound, new legislation will be promptly enacted. If it is, our communities of chronic unemployment will be only the immediate beneficiaries. A tone will have been set that would hold forth, for the remainder of the session, the hope of sound and rewarding legislation in other vital areas—mutual security, wheat, sugar, minimum wage, interest rates, revenue measures, medical care for the aged, and aid to education, to mention but a few.

Only this result can truly serve the finest and best interest of all our people.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 13, 1960.

THE DEPRESSED-AREA PROBLEM—THE CURE MUST BEGIN AT HOME

The weather was dreary and drizzling one morning last week as 500 people filed into the silent Ackermann plant of the Wheeling Steel Corp. in Wheeling, W. Va. The men were not workers arriving for the morning shift but guests at a funeral. They came to bid at an auction to liquidate the plant. In 18 hours of bidding, they bought $5 million worth of idle equipment that once had hummed busily under the hands of 1,200 workers. To Wheeling, the auctioneer's machinegun chant was an old familiar dirge; for years, thousands of its skilled workmen have looked on helplessly as, one after another, the gates of its plants have closed for good. Once-thriving Wheeling is a prime example of an urgent problem: the depressed area.

By Government reckoning, a depressed area is one in which at least 6 percent of the workers are unemployed and the total has run at least 50 percent above the national average for 4 of the last 5 years. The United States has 19 major depressed areas and dozens of minor ones scattered from Washington to Maine, most of them concentrated in the industrial East. They account for more than half a million unemployed workers for whom recession is a year-round, inescapable fact, even when the Nation's economy is booming. Both parties introduced bills to aid depressed areas in the last Congress, but squabbled them to death. The cost was comparatively small: $180 million for the administration bill against $251 million for the Democratic bill. Now President-elect John F. Kennedy has put a depressed-areas bill at the top of his list of "must" legislation.

The Nation's pockets of economic blight are caused by the fact that industries that once provided the major payrolls have either left the area, collapsed, or severely cut back their work force under the stress of technological change or competition from more efficient plants elsewhere. The textile industry has moved out of New England for the South's lower wages. In Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Kentucky automation in the coal mines and a national shift from coal to oil and gas have thrown thousands out of work. Modernization of the steel industry, abetted by a slump in steel sales, is pushing Youngstown and Pittsburgh toward the depressed category.

Most depressed areas not only economic skeletons incapable of revival; they need only saving infusions of new industry. While they deserve a helping hand from the Government, chiefly in the form of loans and grants to encourage new plant building and new public facilities, it is a fact that Government help can do little good unless depressed areas first go to work to cure their own problems. Many have already arrested the decline, even made healthy comebacks by aggressively working to attract industry, but others are so badly depressed that they lack even the "seed money" to make a fresh start.

Pennsylvania has set up the strongest program to aid local communities in their battle for survival. With about a fourth of all U.S. depressed areas within its borders, the State 5 years ago launched an industrial development program. Its heart was a $20 million revolving fund authorized to make loans to nonprofit development agencies for the construction of new plants in distressed areas. Result: the plan has attracted 389 plants (including Radio Corp. of America, Fruehauf Trailer and Chrysler Corp.) providing 106,000 factory jobs, encouraged the expansion of 700 existing firms, put to work 391 idle plants.

At the city level, Scranton has come up with one of the most imaginative programs. Hit by a cut in mining workers from 17,910 in 1940 to about 2,220 this year, Scranton set out to attract new employers by offering to build them a modern factory to meet their specifications. The city paid for all construction, charged the company only rent. The plan was first financed by the sale of municipal bonds, but the public has chipped in willingly with outright donations to keep the fund going. About 30 community-financed plants have been built at a cost of nearly $20 million, providing jobs for more than 10,000 people. One secret of the plan's success: low wage rates, which 81 percent of the new industries admitted were what made the area attractive to them.

Many plants have closed up or moved away from depressed areas largely because area workers cling to high wage rates out of line with other regions. But as their savings melt away, workers have lowered their sights. The loss of the Ackermann plant so upset Wheeling workers that a jobless steelworker, Thomas Elliott, set up a "save-a-plant" movement, signed up more than 700 unemployed workers who are willing to take much lower wages.

Industrial development agencies have found that one of the most valuable investments they can make is a complete survey of a depressed area's facilities and natural resources. A geological survey of the area around Freedom, Ind., turned up the presence of gypsum; it took little urging to persuade a gypsum mine and mill to locate in the area. More and more depressed communities are setting up training programs to reeducate workers for new jobs. Pennsylvania spends $500,000 a year retraining unemployed workers. Though it costs about $140 to train one worker over a course of several weeks, the State figures that it easily gets that back in taxes within a year.

Instead of concentrating solely on industrial plants, many communities now realize that their biggest hope is to create or attract more service industries. Pennsylvania's service industry employment has steadily increased, jumped from 79,000 in 1950 to 103,900 this year. By attracting enough factories to employ 10,000 people, Scranton figured that it created 17,000 additional jobs in the service industries, retail businesses, and professions. One reason: an average of three people leave the relief rolls for every new job created, thus increasing the market for services.

By working in partnership with the State, local businesses, and—most important—with the workers themselves, local communities can do at least as much as Lawrence, Mass., which, by careful planning and aggressive selling of its assets, has cut its unemployed from 25,000 to 4,500 since most of its textile mills left. All the areas that have worked on curing their own problems agree on one basic fact: Government aid, if it is forthcoming, will not work without the will of a city to revitalize itself.

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY OF COMMERCE FREDERICK H. MUELLER ON AREA ASSISTANCE LEGISLATION, BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON PRODUCTION AND STABILIZATION OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY, AUGUST 18, 1960

Mr. Chairman and members of subcommittee, I welcome the opportunity to discuss with you proposed legislation to provide authority for an effective and sound Federal program of loans and grants to assist areas of substantial and persistent unemployment in their efforts to establish stable and diversified local economies.

I welcome this hearing, too, because people—their personal problems, their individual well-being, their future prospects—are the constant concern of the administration. We are proud of our record of promoting "Government for the people"; and that the encouragement of a climate favorable to private enterprise has helped develop widespread prosperity, a prosperity which no other nation at no other time in history has ever matched.

However, we shall never be satisfied—and I am sure this committee agrees—until men and women in areas of chronic unemployment also have an opportunity for a larger share of this country's prosperity.

And they can.

I am here to urge again immediate action to create new opportunities for the jobless and for industries—especially small business in these areas. I propose sound measures aimed at genuine solution. I think that is what the public hopes will be initiated rather than unrealistic plans based on excessive spending and bureaucratic confusion that would turn out to be disappointing to the unemployed.

We can begin now—this year—to help these deserving people. All that is necessary for a start is cooperation in the public interest by the executive and legislative branches. I sincerely believe the public wants prompt progress in a further contribution to healthy economic growth. So does the administration. So—I am confident—do the majority of Members of Congress.

Let us remove the roadblocks that have delayed needed legislation. For 5 years, the President has sought effective and sound legislation in this field and, as late as August 8, the day that the Senate reconvened, he urged that such legislation be enacted at this time. He characterized this as one of the items which should not await the selection and assembly of a new Congress and a new administration. He stressed his desire to cooperate with the Congress in enactment of items listed in his message, and I am pleased therefore at this occasion to work with your committee in its consideration of proposals in this field.

The President's message of May 13, returning without approval S. 722, set forth in detail the reasons for that action. He urged enactment of legislation on which the Congress and the Executive can agree and pledged his cooperation to that end. A legislative proposal was introduced within 5 days thereafter by Senators DIRKSEN, BUSH, BEALL, KEATING, MORTON, and JAVITS (S. 3569) and by Congressmen WIDNALL and SILER in the House. This proposal was intended to provide a program on which the two branches of government could agree. At the time of its introduction this proposal was publicly acknowledged to be the administration's program, and we urged then and urge now speedy congressional approval. It should be noted that the administration's bill represented a sincere attempt to effect compromises leading to speedy action.

In your letter inviting me to appear today you mentioned your intention to explore in detail S. 722 as passed by this Congress; S. 1064, the earlier proposal endorsed by the administration; S. 3568; and S. 3569, to which reference was made above.

The veto message pointed out that S. 722 made eligible areas that were not chronically distressed. Communities in temporary economic difficulty should not be included. That they were included in the vetoed measure is made abundantly clear by the fact that, since passage of the measure by Congress, 12 areas (9 major and 3 smaller) eligible thereunder would no longer be eligible for benefits. Based on current figures from the Department of Labor, there are 31 major and 105 smaller communities which are eligible under S. 722; and 18 major and 74 smaller of such communities eligible under S. 3569.

The other detailed reasons for not approving S. 722, given by the President in his veto message, do not, in my opinion, need further explanation, but I would like to list and comment on them in a summary manner.

1. Under S. 722, the major role of solving these problems would be undertaken by the Federal Government. This takes the form of Federal participation in loans in amounts in excess to that needed.

We believe that a much more satisfactory way to accomplish local industrial growth and expansion is to concentrate the main effort with those close to the situation, who are familiar not only with the problems but also are aware of local assets and local efforts that can be developed. Experience and logic demonstrate that local private initiative is the key to sustained interest of the community and to lasting benefits. Federal Government should supplement and cooperate, but the prime impetus is local endeavor.

2. Machinery and equipment loans would be provided. Such loans are available, from manufacturers, other private sources, and the Small Business Administration and under the Small Business Investment Act. We believe therefore that authority for such loans would result in unnecessary and unwarranted duplication by the Federal Government in a field where the service is either already provided by nongovernment sources or by SBA when not available privately.

3. The loan program of S. 722 for public facilities again duplicates an existing program for assistance in the construction of basic public works, and the grants which would be authorized by the proposal are not within the scope of the program of assistance to the community as we visualize it. Such grants are disruptive to competition between businessmen and communities and more properly should be the responsibility of State and local agencies. It is neither equitable nor wise to use one type of area development to affect adversely the economic stability of other areas.

4. The rural area program proposed by S. 722 introduced problems entirely different from those found in the industrial communities sought to be assisted by this legislation. Other means of Federal assistance are available and are being used. The rural development program is giving special attention to these areas and is demonstrating positive results. It is widening the opportunities for off-farm jobs, helping the living conditions of low-income farm families, and providing job training and health services. If more assistance is necessary in rural areas, it should be through the medium.

5. Further, the proposed establishment of a new and independent agency is contrary to good administrative practice. Studies and reports by unbiased commissions over recent years have repeatedly stressed the inability of separate agencies of this type to have proper administrative control.

In order to assure top priority of direction and wide cooperation among all agencies of the executive branch that can contribute to the solution, the area development agency should be under a Cabinet department responsive to the President.

In brief, gentlemen, we have opposed S. 722 because by its diffusion of Federal funds and its lack of concentration of aid it has failed to meet the objective which all of us are seeking; namely, the providing of assistance to the Nation's areas of substantial and persistent unemployment. It should be emphasized in this connection that there are major differences between the low-income rural areas on the one hand (such as those sought to be aided by S. 722) and urban industrial areas of chronic unemployment on the other. The urban-industrial areas are those which once had a functioning economy, but which have experienced a severe and lasting unemployment shock. These towns have municipal facilities such as water and sewage systems, they have banks and other commercial facilities, and in general have a concentration of capital investment, human resources, and social institutions which need to be conserved and which provide a base for industrial development. Admittedly rural low-income areas have significant problems but these are not problems of substantial unemployment; nor do those areas have the broad base on which industrial development can immediately take place. These two different types of areas clearly call for different types of treatment and that is why the administration supports separate programs addressed to the two types of areas.

I would like to illustrate in more specific terms how the loan funds for industrial areas provided under the criteria of S. 722 would not be as effective for the areas of real need as they would be under S. 3569. Although I recognize that area assistance loans will not, under either S. 3569 or S. 722, be based solely on the extent of unemployment in the areas for which the loans are sought, yet your subcommittee might be interested in a brief comparison of the two bills based on unemployment criteria alone. Each of the measures provides $75 million for loans to depressed industrial areas. Under the criteria of the administration's bill, S. 3569, there were as of March this year 88 areas that would qualify (17 major and 71 smaller areas). Under S. 722, the vetoed bill, there would be 142 areas (40 major and 102 smaller areas). If the $75 million provided by each bill were prorated proportionately among the distressed areas there would of course be more dollars available per distressed area under the administration's bill than under S. 722. Illinois, which has no major depressed areas, has four minor areas under the tests of S. 3569 and five such areas within the terms of S. 722. The allocation of funds so prorated would be somewhat as follows:

Name	Number unemployed (March 1960)	S. 3569	S. 722
Centralia.....	1,750	$262,500	$120,000
Harrisburg.....	4,600	682,500	322,500
Herrin-Murphysboro-West Frankfort.....	12,050	1,785,000	840,000
Mount Carmel-Olney.....	1,375	97,500
Mount Vernon.....	2,850	427,500	195,000

On the foregoing comparative basis four of the Illinois needy areas would be entitled to twice as much money under the administration's bill than under the vetoed bill. A fifth area, Mount Carmel-Olney, whose unemployment is less than 1,400 persons, would not qualify under S. 3569.

Turning to West Virginia, a State critically in need of area assistance, there are three major depressed areas. Here, using the same yardstick, there would be more than double the amount of funds available for these needy communities under the administration's proposal than under S. 722.

Name	Number unemployed (March 1960)	S. 3569	S. 722
Charleston.....	8,150	$1,215,000	$570,000
Huntington-Ashland.....	11,900	1,777,500	832,500
Wheeling.....	10,300	1,537,500	720,000

The same results hold true for West Virginia's smaller areas. Based on the March figures, 11 such areas would qualify for a total of $2,733,500 under the vetoed bill; whereas under S. 3569 9 of these areas would qualify for $6,016,500. Both in totals and in averages per community the criteria of the Administration's bill would provide more aid for West Virginia's depressed communities than would S. 722.

In Pennsylvania, the story is much the same. In March of this year it had five major areas of distress under the criteria of S. 3569 and eight such areas within the terms of S. 722. The principal differences being that Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and York with less persistent unemployment would not meet the tests of S. 3569. In the five areas which would qualify under both bills, the aid under S. 722 would be less than half that available under the administration's measure. The figures are as follows:

Altoona.....	4,700	$697,500	$322,500
Erie.....	9,700	1,447,500	675,000
Johnstown.....	10,100	1,507,500	705,000
Philadelphia.....	119,300	8,302,500
Pittsburgh.....	75,700	5,265,000
Scranton.....	13,200	1,957,500	922,500
Wilkes-Barre-Hazleton.....	19,800	2,947,500	1,380,000
York.....	6,700	465,000

Based on the latest figures from the Department of Labor, I would like to point out that Philadelphia and York are no longer areas of critical unemployment under the standards of either bill. With respect to smaller areas in Pennsylvania, 15 would meet the tests of S. 722 and 11 would qualify under S. 3569. Here again in both totals and averages the vetoed bill would provide considerably less aid than would S. 3569.

If the object of this legislation is to provide material assistance for industrial areas suffering from chronic unemployment, very clearly S. 722 is found wanting—its scatter-shot approach encompassing communities with temporary, seasonal or mild unemployment problems can mean only that less aid will be available for those unfortunate communities faced with the specter of persistent unemployment.

So much in respect to the previous bill. But the areas with persistent unemployment need not be left neglected in the months ahead. The Congress can act now on an acceptable measure that will bring relief. I refer to S. 3569, which was introduced because the foregoing features of S. 722 prompted a veto in the public interest and because necessity demands a new attempt to pass a bill on which all who want to reduce chronic unemployment can agree.

S. 3569 is a more comprehensive bill than its predecessors. It seeks to gear together all the public and private forces that generate area development and to lay the foundation for permanent economic progress.

This bill provides broader criteria than those provided by S. 1064, the earlier administration proposal considered by the Congress along with S. 722. Such a modification was referred to by the President in his veto message when he stated that he would accept changes in these criteria in the interest of agreement on a proposal.

The sum of $1.5 million annually is authorized to be used in helping State vocational education agencies in vocational training and retraining to assist eligible areas. The earlier bill (S. 1064) provided authority for this activity but did not expressly set out authorization which might serve as a measure of the need for this aspect of the program.

S. 3569 not only provides for priority for eligible areas in obtaining community facilities loans, as did S. 1064, but also expressly provides for the authorization of an additional $100 million in funds to be available for these loans.

Funds available for grants to provide technical assistance would be increased from $3 million annually to $3.5 million annually; $1.5 million would (as in S. 1064) be available annually for areas eligible generally and $2 million would be available annually for towns predominantly dependent on one industry, small towns which could serve as centers for economic diversification of low-income areas, and other low-income areas to help them develop manufacturing, processing, and other activities calculated to diversify and improve their economies.

The maximum term of loans to industrial areas authorized by section 101(b)(2) of S. 3569 would be increased to 30 years from the 25-year maximum provided in S. 1064. The total amount of such loans which may be outstanding at any one time has been increased to $75 million from the $50 million provided for in S. 1064. I must emphasize that the true significance of such an adjustment will obviously be evaluated better on the basis of experience under the program. You may be assured that the budget process, executive and legislative, will arrive at realistic figures. Finally, S. 3569 would make more definite the interest rate to be charged on these loans. The establishment of a more precise formula would assure favorable charges to borrowers.

I have undertaken to describe to this committee in some detail the changes which have been made in the proposed program in the interest of seeking out a proposal on which agreement might be reached. In your letter of invitation, you also asked for detail on the provisions of S. 3568, which was also introduced after the veto of S. 722 as a measure on which agreement might be reached. While we are very appreciative of the thought that went into this latter proposal, we prefer the program to be provided by S. 3569 and have not, therefore, thought it necessary to go into detail with respect to S. 3568.

S. 3569 can be a trailblazer. After initiating a course of action, time will tell whether further adjustments are needed to improve its operation. However, I should like to point out that the President and the administration have been constantly mindful of the problems of the areas of acute unemployment. Since his veto message, the President has personally urged that the various Federal agencies do their utmost within their present authorities and appropriations to assist such areas. Under the chairmanship of the Under Secretary of Commerce, member agencies of the Interdepartmental Committee coordinating the Federal assistance programs have made tangible progress. I am submitting for the record three documents summarizing this assistance.

In closing, I should like to reemphasize a fundamental in respect to any approach to permanent relief and lasting progress:

Money which the taxpayers send to the Treasury is not the sole instrument for use in area development. Excessive Federal funds unwisely spent by officials in Washington, unfamiliar with local conditions, could create duplications and confusions that defeat the purpose and might even cause injury to other sections. Action with any assurance of success must be a cooperative undertaking tailored to fit local conditions. It must stimulate local initiative and must fit into the pattern of private enterprise.

And such action is possible through S. 3569.

HOOVER-TYPE COMMISSION ON FEDERAL TAXATION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I introduce for myself and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. BIBLE] a bill to establish a Hoover-type Commission on Federal Taxation.

The purpose of this Commission would be to make a top-to-bottom review of our tax system, to develop recommendations for providing more equitable tax laws, and to try to find ways and means by which the country can (a) more effectively meet its fiscal needs; (b) assure fair treatment of our citizens under the law; and (c) spur, not stunt, economic growth and progress.

The Nation, I believe, could benefit from creation of a realistic, long-range tax philosophy to serve—and preserve—our free-enterprise system, as well as development of a more equitable system of laws to reflect that philosophy.

Economically, we now exist on a kind of hand-to-mouth practice of levying new laws, and continuing ones that threaten to expire; rarely do we repeal laws, though some continue long beyond their originally intended time.

This results in taxes for economic expediency, rather than adherence to a system of principles designed to meet the long-range needs of the economy and the country.

My colleagues will recall that I introduced a similar measure in the previous Congress. Then, I was gratified by the many Members who joined in cosponsoring the Tax Commission bill.

To give other Senators an opportunity, again, to cosponsor the measure, I request unanimous consent that the bill remain on the desk for 1 week.

At this time, I also request unanimous consent to have the text of the bill printed at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 10) for the establishment of a Commission on Federal Taxation, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. It is hereby declared to be the general policy of the Congress—

(a) to strengthen the private enterprise system of the United States in terms of its changing needs, requirements, and opportunities, and thereby to advance the freedom and well-being of the American people;

(b) to provide the soundest basis for the collection of adequate revenue to meet the obligations of the Federal Government;

(c) to promote respect for and observance of Federal revenue laws and regulations, and

(d) toward the accomplishment of these objectives, to promote efficiency, stability, economy, clarity, simplicity, consistency, equity, and justice in the tax policy and tax structure of the Federal Government.

It is the purpose of this Act to establish a medium for the comprehensive implementation of this general policy through the establishment of a Commission to study and investigate the fundamental tax policy and the tax structure of the Federal Government and their application to the people on an individual basis as well as to the various segments of the national economy in order to improve the existing tax policy and tax structure of the Federal Government.

EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and several colleagues, I am today introducing a bill to amend the Clayton Antitrust Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, with reference to equality of opportunity. The bill would make more effective the act's prohibitions against price discrimination by eliminating the defense of meeting in good faith the equally low price of a competitor in those instances where it is affirmatively shown that the price discrimination may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. Where the effect of the discrimination is not so severe as this, meeting competition in good faith would continue as a defense.

The necessity for the bill arises from the 1951 decision of the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil of Indiana case (340 U.S. 231). In this decision the Court held that price discriminations, unlawful under section 2(a) of the Clayton Act because of their substantial adverse effect upon competition, could be continued upon a showing that the discriminations were made in good faith.

This decision stands for the proposition that substantially lessening of competition or tendency toward monopoly is in the public interest if the business practices which produce these results are done in good faith.

The bill, on the other hand, is based on the proposition that substantial lessening of competition or tending toward monopoly is not in the public interest regardless of whether the business practices which produce those results are done in good faith or bad faith. The bill says that good faith monopoly is as

87TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 4569

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 20, 1961

Mr. SPENCE introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

A BILL

To establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2 tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3 That this Act may be cited as the "Area Redevelopment
4 Act".

5 DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

6 SEC. 2. The Congress declares that the maintenance
7 of the national economy at a high level is vital to the best
8 interests of the United States, but that some of our com-
9 munities are suffering substantial and persistent unemploy-
10 ment and underemployment; that such unemployment and

1 underemployment cause hardship to many individuals and 2 their families and detract from the national welfare by 3 wasting vital human resources; that to overcome this prob-
4 lem the Federal Government, in cooperation with the States,
5 should help areas of substantial and persistent unemploy-
6 ment and underemployment to take effective steps in plan-
7 ning and financing their economic redevelopment; that Fed-
8 eral assistance to communities, industries, enterprises, and 9 individuals in areas needing redevelopment should enable 10 such areas to achieve lasting improvement and enhance the 11 domestic prosperity by the establishment of stable and diver-
12 sified local economies; and that under the provisions of this 13 Act new employment opportunities should be created by de-
14 veloping and expanding new and existing facilities and re-
15 sources without substantially reducing employment in other
16 areas of the United States.

17 AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATOR

18 SEC. 3. There shall be appointed by the President, by 19 and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an Area Re-
20 development Administrator in the Department of Commerce
21 who shall receive compensation at a rate equal to that re-
22 ceived by Assistant Secretaries of Commerce. The Admin-
23 istrator shall perform such duties in the execution of this Act 24 as the Secretary of Commerce (hereinafter referred to as the 25 Secretary) may assign.

ADVISORY BOARD

SEC. 4. (a) To advise the Secretary in the performance of functions authorized by this Act, there is authorized to be created an Area Redevelopment Advisory Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), which shall consist of the following members, all ex officio: the Secretary as Chairman; the Secretaries of Agriculture; Health, Education, and Welfare; Interior; Labor; and Treasury; and the Administrators of the Housing and Home Finance Agency; and the Small Business Administration; and such other members as the Secretary shall designate. Each member of the Board may designate an officer of his agency to act for him as a member of the Board with respect to any matter there considered.

(b) The Secretary shall appoint a National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment which shall consist of twenty-five members and shall be composed of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and the public in general. From the members appointed to such Committee the Secretary shall designate a Chairman. Such Committee, or any duly established subcommittee thereof, shall from time to time make recommendations to the Secretary relative to the carrying out of his duties under this Act. Such Committee shall hold not less than two meetings during each calendar year.

(c) The Secretary is authorized from time to time to

1 call together and confer with representatives of any group
2 who can assist in meeting the problems of unemployment or 3 underemployment in the several areas designated by the 4 Secretary as redevelopment areas. The Secretary may also 5 call upon representatives of interested governmental depart-
6 ments and agencies, together with representatives of trans-
7 portation and other industries, to participate in any confer-
8 ence convened under authority of this subsection whenever 9 he determines that such participation would contribute to a
10 solution of the problems creating such unemployment or un-
11 deremployment. The representatives at any such confer-
12 ence shall consider with and may recommend to the Secre-
13 tary plans and programs to further the objectives of this 14 Act with special reference to the industry with respect to 15 which the conference was convened.

16 REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

17 SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary shall designate as "rede-18 velopment areas" those areas within the United States in 19 which he determines that there has existed substantial and 20 peristent unemployment for an extended period of time.
21 There shall be included among the areas so designated any
22 area—

23 (1) where the Secretary of Labor finds that the rate
24 of unemployment, excluding unemployment due pri-
25 marily to temporary or seasonal factors, is currently 6

1 per centum or more and has averaged at least 6 per 2 centum for the qualifying time periods specified in sub-
3 paragraph (2) below; and

4 (2) where the Secretary of Labor finds that the an-
5 nual average rate of unemployment has been at least—

6 (A) 50 per centum above the national average
7 for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

8 (B) 75 per centum above the national average
9 for two of the preceding three calendar years, or

10 (C) 100 per centum above the national average
11 for one of the preceding two years.

12 The Secretary of Labor shall find the facts and provide the 13 data to be used by the Secretary in making the determina-
14 tions required by this subsection.

15 Any area in which a substantial part of the employment
16 is or most recently was in an industry adversely affected by 17 the reduction of trade barriers under section 350 of the Tariff
18 Act of 1930, as amended, with respect to which the Presi-
19 dent has reported to the Congress under subsections 4 (a)
20 and 7 (c) of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951,
21 as amended, and meeting the standards of unemployment set
22 forth in this section shall be entitled on application to a pri-
23 ority of consideration by the Secretary for designation as a 24 redevelopment area.

25 (b) The Secretary shall also designate as “redevelop-

1 ment areas" those areas (including Indian reservations)
2 within the United States which do not meet the require-
3 ments set forth in subsection (a) but which he determines
4 are among the highest in numbers and percentages of low-
5 income families, and in which there exists a condition of sub-
6 stantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment.
7 In making the designations under this subsection, the Secre-
8 tary shall consider, among other relevant factors, the number
9 of low-income farm families in the various rural areas of the 10 United States, the proportion that such low-income families
11 are to the total farm families of each of such areas, the re-

19 Federal Government and/or from the State or States in 20 which such area is located or from any municipality therein.
21 In making these determinations the Secretary shall be

21 project within a redevelopment area for the purchase or
22 development of land and facilities (including, in exceptional
23 cases, machinery and equipment) for industrial or com-
24 mercial usage, including the construction of new buildings, 25 the rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, and

1 the alteration, conversion, or enlargement of existing build-
2 ings. Such financial assistance shall not be extended for 3 working capital, or to assist establishments relocating from 4 one area to another when such assistance will result in sub-
5 stantial detriment to the area of original location by increas-
6 ing unemployment.

7 (b) Financial assistance under this section shall be
8 on such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines
9 subject, however, to the following restrictions and limita-
10 tions—

11 (1) The total amount of loans and loan participa-
12 tions (including purchased evidences of indebtedness)
13 outstanding at any one time under this section (A)
14 with respect to projects in redevelopment areas desig-
15 nated under section 5 (a) shall not exceed $100,000,000
16 (but not to exceed $30,000,000 prior to July 1, 1962) ,
17 and (B) with respect to projects in redevelopment
18 areas designated under section 5 (b) shall not exceed 19 $100,000,000 (but not to exceed $30,000,000 prior 20 to July 1, 1962) ;

21 (2) except as provided in subsection (c) , such 22 assistance shall be extended only to applicants, both 23 private and public (including Indian tribes) , which 24 have been approved for such assistance by an agency
25 or instrumentality of the State or political subdivision

1 thereof in which the project to be financed is located,
2 and which agency or instrumentality is directly con-
3 cerned with problems of economic development in 4 such State or subdivision;

5 (3) the project for which financial assistance is 6 sought is reasonably calculated to provide more than 7 a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underem-
8 ployment within the redevelopment area wherein it is,
9 or will be, located;

10 (4) no such assistance shall be extended hereunder
11 unless the financial assistance applied for is not other-
12 wise available from private lenders or other Federal
13 agencies on reasonable terms;

14 (5) no loans shall be made unless it is determined
15 that an immediate participation is not available;

16 (6) no evidences of indebtedness shall be purchased
17 and no loans shall be made unless it is determined that
18 there is a reasonable assurance of repayment;

19 (7) subject to section 12 (5) of this Act, no loan,
20 including renewals or extension thereof, may be made
21 hereunder for a period exceeding twenty-five years and 22 no evidences of indebtedness maturing more than 23 twenty-five years from date of purchase may be pur-
24 chased hereunder: Provided, That the foregoing re-

1 restrictions on maturities shall not apply to securities or 2 obligations received by the Secretary as a claimant in 3 bankruptcy or equitable reorganization or as a creditor
4 in other proceedings attendant upon insolvency of the 5 obligor;

6 (8) such loans shall bear interest at a rate equal to 7 the rate of interest paid by the Secretary on funds ob-
8 tained from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided
9 in section 9 of this Act, plus one-half of 1 per centum
10 per annum to cover administrative expenses and to pro-
11 vide for losses on loans under this section;

12 (9) such assistance shall not exceed 65 per centum
13 of the aggregate cost to the applicant (excluding all
14 other Federal aid in connection with the undertaking)
15 of acquiring or developing land and facilities (including, 16 in exceptional cases, machinery and equipment), and of 17 constructing, altering, converting, rehabilitating, or en-
18 larging the building or buildings of the particular proj-
19 ect and shall, among others, be on the following
20 conditions:

21 (A) that other funds are available in an
22 amount which, together with the assistance provided
23 hereunder, shall be sufficient to pay such aggregate
24 cost;

25 (B) that not less than 10 per centum of such

1 aggregate cost be supplied by the State or any
2 agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision
3 thereof, or by a community, or area organization
4 which is nongovernmental in character, as equity
5 capital or as a loan;

6 (C) that in extending financial assistance under 7 this section with respect to a redevelopment area,
8 the Secretary shall require that not less than 5 per 9 centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which
10 such loan is made shall be supplied by nongovern-
11 mental sources; and

12 (D) that to the extent the Secretary finds such 13 action necessary to encourage financial participa-
14 tion in a particular project by other lenders and in-15 vestors any Federal financial assistance extended
16 under this section may be repayable only after other 17 loans made in connection with such project and 18 in accordance with this section have been repaid
19 in full, and the security, if any, for such Federal 20 financial assistance may be subordinate and in-21 ferior to the lien or liens securing other loans made
22 in connection with the same project;

23 (10) no such assistance shall be extended unless
24 there shall be submitted to and approved by the Secre-
25 tary an overall program for the economic development

1 of the area and a finding by the State, or any agency,
2 instrumentality, or local political subdivision thereof,
3 that the project for which financial assistance is 4 sought is consistent with such program: Provided,
5 That nothing in this Act shall authorize financial as-
6 sistance for any project prohibited by laws of the State
7 or local political subdivision in which the project would 8 be located.

9 (c) If there is no agency or instrumentality in any
10 State, or political subdivision thereof, qualified to approve
11 applicants for assistance under this section as provided in 12 paragraph (2) of subsection (b), the Secretary shall, upon 13 determining that any area in such State is a redevelopment
14 area, appoint a local redevelopment committee (hereinafter 15 referred to as a "local committee") to be composed of not 16 less than seven residents of such area who, as nearly as 17 possible, are representative of labor, commercial, industrial,
18 and agricultural groups, and of the residents generally of 19 such area. In appointing any such local committee, the Sec-
20 retary may include therein members of any existing local re-
21 development committees. Financial assistance under this 22 section in connection with projects located in a redevel-
23 opment area, for which a local committee has been appointed 24 under this section, shall be extended only to applicants, both

1 private and public (including Indian tribes), which have 2 been approved by such local committee.

3 LOANS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

4 SEC. 7. (a) Upon the application of any State, or politi-
5 cal subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public
6 organization or association representing any redevelopment
7 area or part thereof, the Secretary is authorized to make loans
8 to assist in financing the purchase or development of land
9 for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation,
10 alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities
11 within any redevelopment area, if he finds that—

12 (1) the project for which financial assistance is
13 sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation
14 of unemployment or underemployment in the redevel-
15 opment area wherein such project is, or will be, located,
16 and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area
17 for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial
18 or commercial plants or facilities;

19 (2) the funds requested for such project are not
20 otherwise available on reasonable terms;

21 (3) the amount of the loan plus the amount of other 22 available funds for such projects are adequate to insure 23 the completion thereof;

1 (4) there is a reasonable expectation of repay-
2 ment; and

3 (5) such area has an approved economic develop-
4 ment program as provided in section 6 (b) (10) and the 5 project for which financial assistance is sought is con-
6 sistent with such program.

7 (b) Subject to section 12 (5), the maturity date of any 8 such loan shall be not later than forty years after the date
9 such loan is made. Any such loan shall bear interest at a rate
10 equal to the rate of interest paid by the Secretary on funds
11 obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in 12 section 9 of this Act, plus one-quarter of 1 per centum per 13 annum.

14 (c) The total amount of loans outstanding at any one 15 time under this section shall not exceed $100,000,000 (but 16 not to exceed $30,000,000 prior to July 1, 1962).

17 (d) No financial assistance shall be extended under this
18 section with respect to any public facility which would com-
19 pete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering
20 a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regula-
21 tion by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory
22 body determines that in the area to be served by the public
23 facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended
24 there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into 25 consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the

1 existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing
2 facilities or through an expansion which it is prepared to
3 undertake.

4 GRANTS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

5 SEC. 8. (a) The Secretary may conduct studies of needs
6 in the various redevelopment areas throughout the United 7 States for, and the probable cost of, land acquisition or de-
8 velopment for public facility usage, and the construction,
9 rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of use-
10 ful public facilities within such areas, and may receive pro-
11 posals from any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian 12 tribe, or private or public organization or association repre-
13 senting any redevelopment area, or part thereof, relating to 14 land acquisition or development for public facility usage, and 15 the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or im-
16 provement of public facilities within any such area. Any 17 such proposal shall contain plans showing the project pro-
18 posed to be undertaken, the cost thereof, and the contribu-
19 tions proposed to be made to such cost by the entity making
20 the proposal. The Secretary, in consultation with such en-
21 tity, is authorized to modify all or any part of such proposal.

22 (b) The Secretary, pursuant to a proposal received by 23 him under this section, may make grants to any State, or 24 political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or 25 public organization or association representing any redevel-

1 opment area, or part thereof, for land acquisition or develop-
 2 ment for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabili-
 3 tation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facili-
 4 ties within a redevelopment area, if he finds that—

5 (1) the project for which financial assistance is
 6 sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation
 7 of unemployment or underemployment in the redevel-
 8 opment area wherein such project is, or will be, located,
 9 and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area
 10 for the successful establishment or expansion of indus-
 11 trial or commercial plants or facilities;

12 (2) the entity requesting the grant proposes to
 13 contribute to the cost of the project for which such grant
 14 is requested in proportion to its ability so to contribute;

15 (3) the project for which a grant is requested will 16 fulfill a pressing need of the area, or part thereof, in 17 which it is, or will be, located, and there is little proba-
 18 bility that such project can be undertaken without the 19 assistance of a grant under this section; and

20 (4) the area for which a project is to be undertaken
 21 has an approved economic development program as pro-
 22 vided in section 6 (b) (10), and such project is consist-23 ent with such program.

24 The amount of any grant under this section for any such 25 project shall not exceed 65 per centum of the difference

1 between the funds which can be practicably obtained for
2 such projects from loans (including a loan under section 7
3 of this Act) and from other Federal sources for such project
4 and amount which is necessary to insure the completion
5 thereof.

6 (c) The Secretary shall by regulation provide for the 7 supervision of projects with respect to which grants are
8 made under this section so as to insure that Federal funds
9 are not wasted or dissipated.

10 (d) No financial assistance shall be extended under this
11 section with respect to any public facility which would com-
12 pete with an existing privately owned public utility render-
13 ing a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regu-
14 lation by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory
15 body determines that in the area to be served by the public
16 facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended
17 there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into 18 consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the
19 existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing 20 facilities or through an expansion which it is prepared to 21 undertake.

22 (e) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated not
23 to exceed $75,000,000 for the purpose of making grants
24 under this section: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000,-

1 000 shall be appropriated for such purpose prior to July 1,
2 1962.

11 (b) When requested by the Secretary, advances shall 12 be made to the fund from the appropriations made therefor.
13 There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the pur-
14 pose of making advances to the fund, without fiscal year
15 limitation, an amount not exceeding $300,000,000.

22 the Treasury at the close of each fiscal year interest on 23 advances to the fund at rates which shall be determined by 24 the Secretary of the Treasury at the time the advances or 25 commitments for advances are made after taking into con-

1 sideration the current average market yields of outstanding
2 marketable obligations of the United States having maturities
3 comparable to loans made by the Secretary.

4 (e) The fund shall contribute to the civil service retire-
5 ment and disability fund a sum as provided by section 4 (a)
6 of the Civil Service Retirement Act, as amended (5 U.S.C.
7 2254 (a)), except that such sum shall be determined by 8 applying to the total basic salaries (as defined in that Act)
9 paid to employees performing activities authorized under 10 sections 6 and 7 of this Act and covered by that Act the 11 per centum rate determined annually by the Civil Service
12 Commission to be the excess of the total normal cost per 13 centum rate of the civil service retirement system over the 14 employee deduction rate specified in section 4 (a) . The fund
15 shall also pay into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts
16 that portion of the cost of administration of the civil service
17 retirement and disability fund attributable to employees per-18 forming activities authorized under sections 6 and 7 of this 19 Act, as determined by the Civil Service Commission.

20 (f) In the performance of and with respect to the func-
21 tions, powers, and duties vested in him by sections 6 and 22 7 of this Act, the Secretary shall—

23 (1) prepare annually and submit a budget program
24 in accordance with the provisions of sections 102, 103,

1 and 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act,
2 as amended; and

3 (2) determine the character of and the necessity
4 for obligations and expenditures and the manner in 5 which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, subject
6 to provisions of law specifically applicable to Govern-
7 ment corporations.

“REDEVELOPMENT AREAS UNDER THE AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

“SEC. 113. (a) Whenever the Secretary of Commerce certifies to the Administrator (1) that any county, city, or other municipality (in this section referred to as a ‘municipality’) is situated in an area designated under section 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act as a redevelopment area, and (2) that there is a reasonable probability that with assistance provided under such Act and other undertakings the area will be able to achieve more than temporary improvement in its economy, the Administrator is authorized to provide financial assistance to a local public agency in any such municipality under this title and the provisions of this section.

“(b) The Administrator may provide such financial assistance under this section without regard to the requirement or limitations of section 110 (c) that the project area be predominantly residential in character or be redeveloped for predominantly residential uses under the urban renewal plan,

25 of such contract that the area in which the project is located

1 may no longer be redevelopment area under the Area Re-
2 development Act.”

3 URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

4 SEC. 15. Paragraph (3) of section 701(a) of the 5 Housing Act of 1954 is amended by inserting after “coun-
6 ties which” the following: “(A) are situated in areas des-
7 ignated by the Secretary of Commerce under section 5(a)
8 of the Area Redevelopment Act as redevelopment areas
9 or (B) ”.

10 OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING

11 SEC. 16. (a) The Secretary of Labor is authorized,
12 upon request and whenever he determines such studies are 13 needed, to undertake, or to provide assistance to others for 14 studies of the size, characteristics, skills, adaptability, occu-
15 pational potentialities, and related aspects of the labor force
16 of any redevelopment area.

17 (b) When a redevelopment area has an approved eco-
18 nomic development program as provided in section 6(b)
19 (10), the Secretary of Labor, in consultation with the 20 Secretary, shall determine the vocational training or retrain-
21 ing needs of unemployed and underemployed individuals re-
22 siding in the redevelopment area. The Secretary of Labor
23 shall notify the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare
24 of the vocational training or retraining requirements of the 25 area, and shall provide for the orderly selection and referral

1 of those unemployed and underemployed individuals resid-

3 employment as a result of the skill they will acquire in the 4 training which is to be made available, and shall make ap-
5 propriate provision for such supervision by the appropriate
6 agency as is necessary to the successful operation of any 7 training program established under this section. The Secre-
8 tary of Labor shall cooperate with the Secretary of Health,
9 Education, and Welfare and with existing State and local 10 agencies and officials in charge of existing programs relating 11 to vocational training and retraining for the purpose of as-12 suring that the facilities and services of such agencies are 13 made fully available to such individuals.

14 (c) Whenever the Secretary of Labor finds that addi-
15 tional facilities or services are needed in the area to meet the 16 vocational training or retraining needs of such individuals,
17 he shall so advise the Secretary of Health, Education, and
18 Welfare. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare
19 shall provide assistance, including financial assistance when 20 necessary, to the appropriate State vocational educational 21 agency in the provision of such additional facilities or serv-
22 ices. If the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare
23 finds that the State vocational educational agency is unable 24 to provide the facilities and services needed, he may, after 25 consultation with such agency, provide for the same by agree-

1 ment or contract with public or private educational insti-
2 tutions.

3 (d) The Secretary of Labor shall arrange to provide any 4 necessary assistance for setting up apprenticeships, and to

7 SEC. 17. (a) The Secretary of Labor in consultation
8 with the Secretary is authorized, on behalf of the United 9 States, to enter into agreements with States in which re-

11 of Labor shall make payments to such States either in ad-
12 vance or by way of reimbursement for the purpose of en-
13 abling such States, as agents of the United States, to make 14 weekly retraining payments to unemployed and underem-
15 ployed individuals residing within such redevelopment areas
16 who are certified by the Secretary of Labor to be undergoing
17 vocational training or retraining under section 16 of this Act.
18 Such payments shall be made for a period not exceeding 19 sixteen weeks, and the amounts of such payments shall not 20 exceed the amount of the average weekly unemployment
21 compensation payment payable in the State making such 22 payments.

23 (b) No weekly retraining payment shall be made to 24 any person otherwise eligible who, with respect to the week
25 for which such payment would be made, has received or is

1 seeking unemployment compensation under title XV of the 2 Social Security Act or any other Federal or any State un-
3 employment compensation law, but if the appropriate State
4 or Federal agency finally determines that a person denied
5 weekly training benefits because of this paragraph is not 6 entitled to unemployment compensation under title XV of 7 the Social Security Act or such Federal or State law, this 8 paragraph shall not apply.

9 (c) Any agreement under this section may contain 10 provisions (including, so far as may be appropriate, pro-
11 visions authorized or made applicable with respect to agree-
12 ments concluded by the Secretary of Labor pursuant to 13 title XV of the Social Security Act) as will promote effec-
14 tive administration, protect the United States against loss, 15 and insure the proper application of payments made to the 16 State under such agreement. Except as may be provided
17 in such agreements, or in the rules and regulations prescribed
18 pursuant to subsection (d) of this section, determinations
19 by any duly designated officer or agency as to the eligibility
20 of individuals for weekly retraining payments under this 21 section shall be final and conclusive for any purposes and 22 not subject to review by any court or any other officer.

23 (d) The Secretary of Labor and the Secretary shall 24 jointly prescribe such rules and regulations as they may 25 deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

A BILL

To establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

By Mr. SPENCE

FEBRUARY 20, 1961

Referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

In the passing of our beloved friend, Willa Eslick, the State of Tennessee has lost one of her most distinguished daughters. I shall miss her particularly, for I valued her counsel and advice and, above all, her warm friendship. Her memory will live on in the highest traditions in the history of her district, State and Nation—and in the hearts of her many friends.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the life and service of our late former colleague, Mrs. Willa B. Eslick.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF MEMBER TO COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a resolution (H. Res. 175) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That EDWARD J. DERWINSKI of Illinois be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Post Office and Civil Service.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT BILL

(Mr. SPENCE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced the bill approved by the administration, to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain areas of the United States. This is a bill in which many of my colleagues are deeply interested.

It will be known as the Area Redevelopment Act. There are many areas of the country deeply distressed today by reason of persistent and substantial unemployment. In some areas this has existed for years. It is time the Federal Government took some action to help these people who are in such distress. It is not only a condition of supreme importance to the people of these areas but it is also a matter of grave concern to the Nation. We cannot attain full economic growth until these conditions are alleviated. To do so would give us strength at home and add to our prestige abroad.

The bill will be set for hearing at the earliest practicable date. Mr. PATMAN is the chairman of the subcommittee to which the bill will be referred.

UNEMPLOYMENT CONDITIONS IN CONNECTICUT

(Mr. MONAGAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the Republican Party suffers from a strange blindness when human problems are concerned.

An excellent example of this sight difficulty is provided in the current discussion of our economic and employment problems.

Senator DIRKSEN and Representative HALLECK, the congressional leaders, cannot see any economic cloud on the horizon. All is fair and bright. In fact, they prefer not to talk about the jobs and hours of work. They even warn us ominously about the danger of talking ourselves into a recession.

Well, for the information of these gentlemen, we are in a recession right now.

In the three major areas of my district, Torrington, Ansonia-Derby and Waterbury, the amounts of unemployed of the total working force are, respectively, 12.2, 12.3, and 10.8 percent.

In these same areas, unemployment compensation claims are 2,331, 1,658 and 6,144.

Of course, these figures do not take into consideration reduced hours of work of those who are still technically unemployed. The average week worked in Connecticut declined from 40 hours to 38 from November through December.

These figures can be matched in many, if not most, areas of the Nation. The least the Republican Party can do is take notice of the problem. It is this lack of interest in the welfare of the average person on the part of its leaders which has caused the Republican Party to become the minority party in the Nation.

Now, I will admit that the question of what to do about the recession is a difficult one. President Kennedy has made certain recommendations to Congress and he has taken certain steps by Executive order to speed up procurement and hasten contract-letting in order to stimulate the economy. On the other hand, a respectable school of economists believes that we are now over the hump and that the economy will revive by its own momentum from this point on.

My own approach is to support the middle-of-the-road course of the President which prescribes short-range stimulation but also adopts a wait-and-see attitude on extreme remedies such as a general tax cut.

It is apparent that Messrs. DIRKSEN and HALLECK are committing the Republican minority in the Senate and the House to a hopeless course. Failing even to admit that a recession exists prevents taking adequate steps to cure it. Of course, the answer is that the Republican leadership is afraid to admit that we are in an economic pause because then people will realize that this recession began under the auspices of the late administration.

Well, the people of this country are too intelligent to be hoodwinked. They know when business is good and jobs are plentiful. And they know the opposite as well.

They also know that leadership—such as that of Messrs. DIRKSEN and HALLECK—which is the accepted and overwhelmingly supported leadership of the Republican Party in Congress will not and should not have the support of the Nation.

WASTE OF MILITARY MANPOWER

(Mr. KOWALSKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.)

Mr. KOWALSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have high hopes that the new Secretary of Defense—an able man with a great record of achievement in both academic and business fields—will move swiftly and effectively to end the colossal waste of our precious treasure of military manpower that has prevailed.

With our armed services needing every available man for defense duties, I am sure that Secretary McNamara will act to reverse the old policies under which men trained at great expense in military specialties have been assigned to non-military duties which are either unnecessary or could better be performed by civilians.

I believe the Secretary of Defense will be as shocked as I was to learn of two recent memorandums issued at Fort Monmouth, N.J.

After the furore over training manuals last year, it would appear that the military might have learned a lesson. But no—one of these memorandums is entitled "Grocery Bagging" and consists of a page of detailed instructions on how to fill bags of groceries in the commissaries.

The other memorandum is a welcome to the men assigned to the commissary. It makes a statement that will startle our millions of unemployed, namely, that the soldiers were assigned there because civilians could not be found to fill the jobs. This, of course, is nonsense.

Mr. Speaker, if there has to be a choice, we can afford a grocery bag lag more than a missile lag.

We need our trained fighting men in units where they can contribute significantly to our national defense. We need them in the jobs for which they entered the service, not as grocery baggers.

And we need a better and greater sense of responsibility in the services than one which not only has so little regard for the proper use of trained military men, but which then compounds its offense by wasting time and money in the issuance of a training manual on how to put groceries properly into a paper bag.

The soldiers who brought these memorandums to my attention told me of their various military skills, of their desire to be on truly military assignment, and also of their disillusionment with a system that relegated them to grocery bagging.

Mr. Speaker, I am submitting copies of these two memorandums to the attention of the House. I hope they will be read not only here but in the Pentagon, and that action will follow to end this utterly fantastic waste of men not only at Fort Monmouth but at every post in all the services.

The job of our military services is to defend America, not to fill grocery bags.

Here are the texts of the memorandums:

GROCERY BAGGING

Nothing irks a customer more than a poorly packed bag of groceries. If packed in lopsided fashion, it can become an awful burden. If packed in unbalanced style, it can become an awful mess. If packed in a loose manner, it can become an awful waste. Conversely, packing a customer's grocery bag properly builds good will and increases your service. The bagger, whether bag boy or checker, sells no groceries, just courtesy and efficiency. On this page are a few suggestions for good bagging.

1. Plan the packing: Open the bag fully; a partially opened bag can be easily torn. If more than one bag must be used, pack them with equal weight for easy carrying.

2. Get the right start: Make a solid base by putting the heavy packages and cans at the bottom. They pack solidly.

3. Use extra care: To prevent soaked bags and bag breakage, use waxed bags for wet vegetables, frozen foods, and ice cream (aluminum foil bags are also good for packing ice cream).

4. Watch the perishables: Pack eggs, berries, bread, tomatoes, and other crushable items near the top of the bag. (Inept baggers generally fail in this and cause untold customers complaints.)

5. Use small items: These, such as candy and cigarettes, should be used to fill up the empty spaces and "holes" in the bag.

6. The finale: Put the cash register receipt in the bag, hand the bag to the customer (making sure she has a firm hold on it), smile, and say pleasantly, "Thank you!"

Thank you for your cooperation and support of the Army team.

Commissary Officer.

To All Details:

Welcome to the commissary, gentlemen, you are detailed here today, and your services are greatly appreciated by the quartermaster and the commanding general. Your work here is necessary because of our inability to secure needed civilian employees.

Commissary privileges are a benefit to you and other eligible military personnel. Please be very courteous to all customers, and above all, do not engage in any argument with them.

Thank you for your cooperation and support of the Army team.

Commissary Officer.

THE INDICTMENT OF EICHMANN BY ISRAEL FOR MASS MURDER

(Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.)

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, the Chelsea Zionist District of Massachusetts, held its installation ceremonies at the Shurtleff Street Synagogue in Chelsea, on Sunday, February 12, 1961.

As principal speaker, I took for my subject: "The Eichmann Case." Adolph Eichmann will be tried by the Republic of Israel next month, as one of the major Nazi criminals who were responsible for the murder of over 6 million Jewish civilians, men, women, and children.

All humanity will read the day-to-day reports of this trial which involves a Nazi accused of the appalling crime of genocide; the cruel and methodical attempt to exterminate a whole people. The evidence against Eichmann is overwhelming. The world will wait to see if the rule of law will prevail to establish a precedent that will deter future aggressors from committing similar crimes against innocent peoples.

At the breakfast meeting of the Chelsea Zionist District it was my humble honor to be presented with an engraved citation on a plaque for outstanding service to the Zionist cause and to the welfare of the Jewish people.

The address that I delivered at the installation is as follows:

Mr. Chairman, Mr. President, at the very outset let me applaud the outgoing administration and congratulate the incoming officers for work well done and for confidence well placed. The Chelsea Zionist district has long been active in supporting the cause of Israel and urging its support by others. That its efforts have been rewarded is obvious. That its continued efforts are necessary is certain.

In 1947, on a very grim occasion, I visited this wonderful city of Chelsea. I was your speaker at the high school auditorium. The occasion was a welcome-home and a well-done to a brave Chelsea lad who was wounded by a pistol shot while resisting a boarding party from a British gunboat that intercepted a vessel running displaced Jews into Palestine past the British blockade. His name was William Millman, and he was a member of that gallant crew bringing a precious cargo of human souls to Palestine.

I told you then, in those horrible days, when the land of Israel was barred to the children of Israel, not to be dismayed, there will be a state of Israel. There was.

I told you that President Truman will speedily recognize that state. He did.

I also told you that the state of Israel will be readily admitted to the United Nations. It was.

I did not then, as I do not now, lay any claim to powers of prophecy. My predictions of things to come was based solely on things that went before. I knew then, as I know now, that a people who refused to perish through 2,000 years of travail and exile and the indescribable horrors of Hitler will not perish; that the spirit of faith and devotion to the moral principles of their forefathers, having been so tried, must eventually serve the purpose for which it was being tested.

I can now proudly state that my reasoning was correct. What I anticipated would happen, did happen. I also knew that a State of Israel will be a shining light in the gloomy world that followed World War II, because I knew it would be a democratic government in an area that was ruled by despots, backward and illiterate, and thus bring light where light was badly needed.

I am not disappointed. The State of Israel, founded on those virtues of liberty, equality, and faith, democratic and free, is not only an outpost for democratic institutions but is an example for all new nations, now appearing, to consider and emulate. The State of Israel is the strongest rebuff the reactionary, enslaving, soul-crushing doctrines of communism have so far received. It is no wonder that Russia wants to see Israel obliterated because the forces of darkness must always flee before the power of light.

Let the new nations of the world compare. Compare a new state, founded on democratic principles, the State of Israel, with other states weighted down under the despotism of communism. I ask, where do you find greater freedom of expression, thought and soul; greater opportunity for spiritual expression, cultural development and economic progress—in the democratically governed State of Israel or in Communist dominated Hungary, Poland, Rumania, and even Russia itself.

By example alone, the State of Israel has demonstrated the simple and eternal truth that he who lives by the sword shall perish by the sword and that it is not by might and not by strength but by spirit that man endures.

Therefore, when United States marine shipping was barred from the international Suez Canal because of having been used in trade with Israel; when foreign powers dared to dictate to us and classify our citizens and insist on which of our citizens they will allow in their countries and which they will not, and we submitted; when they professed to be peace loving yet refused to sit down and discuss peace terms with Israel, the nation which defeated them; when they asserted a serious refugee problem but did nothing to help their own for admittedly political reasons; when they caused our Navy Department to insert cancellation clauses in all its contracts with its suppliers whose supply ships are blacklisted by the U.A.R.; and, when in the face of all this, the State Department permitted the U.S. executive director of the World Bank to vote for a $56 million loan to the U.A.R. for widening the Suez Canal, I brought this to the attention of Congress on February 4, 1960.

I informed Congress that this affront to the United States, this insult to our people, to our principles, and to our professed sense of morality, was induced only because our Government, at that time, resorted to the use of platitudes and the comfort of temporary expediency for positive action. True facts and moral realities were swept under the rug.

I warned the administration that the pile of sweepings was so great that the administration itself would trip over it. The recent election proved how correct I was. I said that the debris must be cleaned out without delay or else in the eyes of the nations of the world we shall be considered not only weak in arms and technology but also in enforcing moral issues. You who have heard or read the inaugural address of President Kennedy know that you can expect the debris to be cleaned out without much delay.

A few weeks from today, a great and wonderful event will take place in Jerusalem.

Just as thousands of years ago there was brought down from Mount Sinai and given to the children of Israel a new moral code for all men to heed and use as a guide for civilized living (we call it the 10 Commandments), so in a few weeks, in Jerusalem, the State of Israel will open the eyes of the world to the realization that there can be no exceptions to the commandment "Thou shalt not kill." I refer to the Eichmann case.

Rarely, since the framing of our Constitution and the writing of the Declaration of Independence has the concept of natural law been raised, as it will be raised in the coming trial of Adolph Eichmann.

As a lawyer, lawmaker and human being the issues of jurisdiction and venue greatly interest me. We are aware of the accusations against Eichmann, his apprehension, his delivery to the State of Israel and the diplomatic hauling and pulling that ensued.

There are many pros and cons offered relative to the trial of Eichmann in Israel. The arguments range all the way from those induced by anger to those advanced by thinkers, philosophers and would-be philosophers and some not worthy of classifying.

During the course of argument the State of Israel will be the target of hate mongers, Communists, and assorted cranks.

There will also be true students of jurisprudence, dispassionate thinkers and analysts who will dissent from what I am about to say by reason of their sincere beliefs. For such I have sincerest respect because our common purpose is to see justice done. We may merely differ as to the means of accomplishing that purpose.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT—1961

MARCH 8, 1961.—Ordered to be printed

Mr. DOUGLAS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following

REPORT

[To accompany S. 1]

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically depressed areas, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with amendments and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

INTRODUCTION

Many communities or areas in the United States suffer from substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment of their human resources. This condition of chronic distress has existed in these areas for a number of years. They have been especially hard hit during periods of business recession, and even during periods of national prosperity, these pockets have remained in a severely depressed condition. This economically unhealthy situation causes hardship to hundreds of thousands of families and impairs the national welfare by allowing vital human resources to remain wasted. S. 1 would provide a sound program, consisting of a number of inter-related tools for economic growth whereby the Federal Government would help these distressed areas to raise themselves to a condition of fuller utilization of their resources and prosperity.

Many factors are responsible for this condition of economic distress in these areas. Shifts in demand for products, shifts in plant locations, new technology leading to new types of productive techniques, the exhaustion of certain natural resources and inadequate basic public facilities, are among the prime forces preventing these communities from sharing adequately in our economic growth. Coal mining regions and former centers of textile manufacturing are two of the most obvious victims of our rapidly changing economy.

S. 1 is designed to help these areas of distress which have a sound economic potential to share more fully in our economic growth—to transform themselves into productive communities enjoying a standard of living comparable to that of the country as a whole. S. 1 is directed toward assisting communities, industries, enterprises, and individuals in these areas to achieve lasting improvements in their economic infrastructure by assisting in the creation of new employment opportunities which will contribute to lasting growth.

To continue to ignore these economically distressed areas will only compound their difficulties. Continued over a long period, depressed employment conditions result in the gradual disintegration of the community and all its physical resources built up over the years—schools, stores, hospitals, banks, office buildings, homes, churches, and all of the rest of the capital investment of these areas which has been acquired at great expense and over long periods of time.

Furthermore, a successful program of area redevelopment would serve to reduce public outlays for unemployment compensation relief and other forms of public assistance designed to alleviate severe personal hardship—payments for which no current production is received in return. A successful program would be self-financing to the extent that all of these other forms of public assistance can be reduced.

The needs of the low-income rural areas are no less urgent than those of the distressed industrial areas. The potential loss of national production due to underutilization of manpower in the rural areas is a major impediment to faster economic growth. Available data indicate that in many rural counties in the United States, the average per capita income is as little as one-fourth of the national average. To the extent that the program included in S. 1 can substantially raise the productivity of these rural areas, it will contribute to a faster rate of national economic growth.

The Employment Act of 1946 declares that the Federal Government should help assure maximum employment. The persistence of unemployment and underemployment in these areas should be combated by a Federal program, not only because of the human hardship and suffering involved, but also because such conditions are a threat to the general welfare of the Nation.

Upon receipt of the Special Task Force Report on Area Redevelopment on December 29, 1960, President Kennedy stated:

It would be a mistake to consider the problems of chronic unemployment and underemployment solely in the context of the areas directly affected. The entire Nation suffers when there is prolonged hardship in any locality. This problem is especially critical today, for 1 out of every 10 persons in the United States lives in an area that now feels the impact of chronic unemployment or underemployment.

S. 1 recognizes this responsibility and provides for a program of integrated techniques which will help the people in such areas to expand the base of their economic activities so as to alleviate this long-term problem of individual distress and economic decay.

BACKGROUND OF THE BILL

The problems which S. 1 is designed to meet are not new. The provisions in S. 1 have been considered in one form or another by four separate committees of Congress in the past 6 years.

The Joint Economic Committee was the first congressional group in the 84th Congress to call for Federal action to help chronically distressed communities. In its 1955 report, the Joint Economic Committee urged that the public works program should be speeded up, and that loans and technical assistance should be extended to help these distressed communities to improve their economic conditions.

Later, in the same year, the Joint Economic Committee made a careful study of low-income families in the United States and in its report the committee called attention not only to the problems of depressed industrial areas but also to the persistence of low income in various rural areas in the country, particularly in the South. The committee favored a comprehensive Federal program which would combat the basic causes of economic distress both in depressed industrial areas and in regions where low incomes prevailed.

In 1956, that committee reiterated its conclusion that a Federal depressed areas program was needed, and a comprehensive program was embodied in a bill, S. 2663, 84th Congress, introduced by the then chairman of the committee, Senator Paul H. Douglas. In addition, President Eisenhower had given support to an area redevelopment program in his economic reports to the 84th, 85th, and 86th Congresses.

Such legislation passed in the Senate in 1956 and again in 1958. In 1958 the House also passed the legislation and it was sent to the President who refused to approve the measure, killing it by a pocket veto.

In the first session of the 86th Congress area redevelopment legislation (S. 722) was again introduced and passed in the Senate.

The House passed S. 722 in May of 1960, and the bill was vetoed by the President. An attempt to override the President's veto in the Senate was unsuccessful.

Over these years scores of witnesses have testified before this committee on area redevelopment; and almost 3,500 pages of testimony have been presented.

Since the Senate considered S. 722 in detail in the 86th Congress, two significant reports have been made on the problem of persistent unemployment: the report of the Special Committee on Unemployment Problems under the chairmanship of Senator McCarthy, issued March 30, 1960, and the report of the Special Task Force on Area Redevelopment appointed by President Kennedy, under the chairmanship of Senator Douglas, which issued its report on December 29, 1960.

Both of these careful studies unanimously recommended a broad-gage Federal program for the assistance of areas of chronic unemployment, including the legislation embodied in S. 1. These recommendations were on a bipartisan basis. The minority of the Special Senate Committee on Unemployment Problems were quite as emphatic in their recommendations as the majority as to the need to enact area redevelopment legislation.

S. 1 as reported is the product of many years of exhaustive study. Public hearings were held on S. 1 in January and February of this year by the Subcommittee on Production and Stabilization under the chairmanship of Senator Paul H. Douglas. Over 30 witnesses were heard including the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Commerce and individual Senators and Congressmen. The subcommittee went into executive session on March 2, 1961. The bill was then ordered reported to the full Banking and Currency Committee which reported it with amendments to the Senate on March 6, 1961.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

This legislation is being considered in the midst of a recession which has affected the centers of heavy industry with especial severity. It has thus aggravated the unemployment problem of many of the areas which were already depressed.

This bill is not an antirecessionary measure. This is generally agreed. It is a long-range recovery measure, designed to assure that areas of persistent unemployment and underemployment will have a better opportunity in the future to obtain their fair share of the Nation's future economic growth.

Nonetheless, the recession has an effect upon the consideration of this legislation. In the past, areas of chronic unemployment have been slower to recover than the rest of the country. Moreover, after other recessions additional areas have developed persistent unemployment. Thus, with jobs scarce and new hiring limited, skilled men who might otherwise find work elsewhere now find this alternative closed to them even after an extended search for jobs in other communities.

In these circumstances, the current economic situation, with its unusual high levels of unemployment, and the possibility that unemployment may remain high for some time after recovery has begun, is of great interest to the committee.

After each postwar recession since 1953-54, the rate of unemployment in the recovery has been higher than in the previous recovery period. This suggests that unemployment has been creeping upward even in good times, when the number of employed was increasing.

The problem of partial employment in rural areas is equally disturbing.

The Secretary of Agriculture in his testimony before the subcommittee emphasized the extent of underemployment in such areas:

Underemployment in agriculture has become an increasingly serious problem since the end of the war. An increasing number and an increasing percentage of farm families are found in the lowest income group of the Nation—the lowest one-fifth. In the 1944-47 period, 40 percent of the farm operator families were in that group, but in the 1955-57 period more than 50 percent were in it. Another way to see this problem is to look at actual income figures. In 1959, only about 13 percent of the families in the Nation had incomes less than $2,000, but about 36 percent of the farm families had incomes under $2,000.

There is enough underemployment each year among workers 20 to 64 years of age who live on farms to equal a full year of unemployment for 1,400,000 workers. That is to say—if we did not have so many people underemployed in agriculture, the Nation would have roughly 1,400,000 more unemployed workers than are currently reported.

It is clear that unemployment and underemployment are basically the same condition. We need more jobs.

THE ESSENTIAL FEATURES OF AREA REDEVELOPMENT

S. 1 recognizes the fact that persistent unemployment and underemployment in chronic labor surplus areas is a stubborn problem and requires tailor-made solutions to meet the specific problems in each community. It provides a package of tools which will be made available to the redevelopment areas. It recognizes that an effective program cannot be imposed from outside, but that local leaders, with the help of the programs made possible under S. 1, could embark upon realistic programs of economic rehabilitation and self-help.

The purpose of the legislation is to create jobs in redevelopment areas as an essential step in a comprehensive program to help these communities to rehabilitate themselves.

S. 1 provides a combination of integrated tools for effective redevelopment.

The first step in an effective program can be summarized in the Socratic admonition "Know thyself." A community development organization must have comprehensive knowledge about its current and potential resources, both physical and human. With an inventory of its resources, a community can discuss its advantages with a prospective employer on a specific and factual basis. A careful analysis of the existing and potential resources can indicate the kind of industries the local industrial development committee should try to attract. Frequently, communities need guidance and aid in assessing their own economic potential realistically. S. 1 would provide such assistance to labor surplus areas.

Lack of capital is a major obstacle to the development and recovery of labor surplus areas. In order to induce business to locate or expand existing facilities in a redevelopment area, S. 1 would provide the employer with part of the needed capital at attractive rates of interest. Testimony presented before this committee in its formal investigations over the past 5 years, filling more than 3,500 closely printed pages, provides ample evidence that traditional lending institutions in distressed areas are not as venturesome as their counterparts in growing and expanding communities.

To provide long-term loans, S. 1, therefore, favors the establishment of a revolving fund from which businessmen could borrow part of the funds needed for expansion or for new enterprises. The balance of the funds would be provided by the State and local governments and, of course, by the entrepreneurs. An effective program to aid distressed areas requires coordinated efforts and participation by all levels of government and private enterprise.

Distressed areas frequently lack facilities needed to attract new industry. Often the community's resources are inadequate because of a deteriorated tax base and chronic low income of its citizenry. S. 1 would provide for the creation of a separate fund from which communities could obtain credit to improve their public facilities.

In extreme cases of need the Federal Government would be empowered to make grants. The extent to which the Federal Government would provide such grants would depend upon the ability of the community and the State to contribute.

The skills of many workers in redevelopment areas may become obsolescent because of automation or other reasons. In many low-income rural areas industrial skills have never been adequately developed. The Federal Government has participated in vocational training programs since World War I, but on a limited basis. S. 1 would allocate additional funds to chronic labor surplus areas to finance more extensive occupational training and retraining. The exact type of training would, of course, depend on the occupational requirements of the area and the needs of new or potential industries that might locate in the community.

It would be unrealistic, however, to expect workers without means of subsistence to complete an effective training program. S. 1 would, therefore, provide unemployed workers undergoing training, who are not already receiving unemployment insurance benefits, subsistence payments equal to the average unemployment benefits in their States.

In short, S. 1 will provide the needed machinery by which new industry will be channeled into chronic labor surplus areas. It provides only part of the capital and resources that is needed to meet the difficult problem facing the Nation of completely rehabilitating these areas. It is, however, anticipated that the program provided by S. 1 will provide the needed seed capital and the other tools to help these areas to develop a program which would allow them to share, in a greater measure, in the economic growth of the Nation.

CAUSES OF LOCALIZED CHRONIC UNEMPLOYMENT

Several factors are usually involved in the decline of employment in the areas of substantial and persistent unemployment. These include changes in production technology, in consumer demand, or in the competitive market position of certain products, automation, the depletion or exhaustion of local natural resources, the lack of diversification of industry, the shutdown of obsolete or economically unprofitable plants, and the transfer of important local industries to other areas.

TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

Technological change is one of the mainsprings of American economic progress. It provides new and improved methods of production, frequently at lower cost, so that mass markets can be developed and American goods can compete more effectively at home and abroad. At the same time, displacement of workers due to technological change can cause severe hardships to individuals and to communities in the short run.

Technological change is one important factor in the severity of unemployment in some of the areas which would receive Federal assistance under this bill. In view of the present rapid rate of technological change and the prospect that this high rate will continue in the future, particularly in manufacturing, mining, transportation, and agriculture, it is important that provision be made for technical assistance to areas which without advance area development planning might eventually become areas of persistent unemployment.

There are many illustrations of the effects of technological change. The Secretary of Labor, in his testimony before the committee, gave the following examples:

In certain areas and in certain industries the rapid development of automation has made possible massive displacement of men by machines. The bituminous coal mining industry offers a dramatic illustration. In 1937, the industry produced over 446 million tons of coal with 491,864 employees. In 1958, it produced 410 million tons with 195,000 employees. In 1959, it produced 412 million tons with 179,636 employees. The use of machinery was necessary if coal was to maintain its competitive position with other fuels, but mechanization displaced vast numbers of mineworkers and caused serious economic and social distress in the coal regions.

At the present time, the rapid development of automation and other technological developments could create new distressed areas if nothing is done to anticipate the dislocations which may occur. In the past year, the threat of employee displacement from automation or technological change has been the central point in most major labor disputes, including those in the steel, longshore, meatpacking, and railroad industries. Most American trade unions accept improved technology as a desirable development which holds promise for greater productivity, higher wages and higher standards of living. We, too, are convinced that automation need not be an evil but can bring great benefits. Yet, its short-term effects are obviously disturbing to individual displaced workers and can be near-catastrophic when entire communities are affected.

MIGRATION OF INDUSTRY

The migration of industry to new areas has affected many lines of activity. Again, the classic case is the movement of textile mills out of New England and the growth of the textile industry in the South. This occurred not only in cotton textiles, but in synthetic textiles, the woolen and worsted industries, the hosiery industry and other branches of the knit-goods industry.

Many of these mill closings were sudden. They left one-industry towns with little industrial employment. Whenever this is accompanied by a diminution in demand, as has been the case with certain types of textiles and coal, the situation was particularly severe.

Frequently these facilities built in new locations, with new and modern equipment, are erected in an effort to come closer to markets, and in other cases because it is less expensive to build in new areas than to restore obsolete facilities in older locations. In a recession, production tends to be concentrated in the newer and more efficient facilities, leaving pockets of unemployment in the cities in which the older plants are located.

This same process affects heavier industry. For instance, it has been a policy of certain automobile companies to decentralize their operations out of Detroit, and to build new facilities in other areas. In some cases, plants for the manufacture of the new compact cars, for example, the Falcon of the Ford Motor Co., have been located in other areas. As these lines have gained in popularity in relation to the standard models still made in Detroit, employment was reduced in Detroit. In much the same way, the manufacture of certain automobile parts has been concentrated in other locations.

The same process has occurred in the steel industry, where new facilities have been developed, in which costs of production are lower, and in which production tends to be concentrated during a recession, while unemployment tends to increase in such areas as Youngstown and Pittsburgh, where older mills are located. When combined, as has been the case in both steel and in automobiles, with a diminution in the demand for certain product lines, the effect can be and has been quite severe in the established centers.

SHIFTS IN DEMAND

Shifts in demand, already noted in connection with bituminous coal, with certain automobile products, and with steel, have also affected the anthracite coal mining industry, which has lost much of the home heating market to gas and oil. Conversion of the railroads from steam to diesel engines seriously affected areas dependent upon production and maintenance of steam equipment, such as Altoona, Pa.

Areas which are dependent upon one industry or one product line of an industry for a major portion of their employment may be severely affected by such shifts in demand. Such areas may have many of the requisites for sustained industrial activity but need assistance in shifting to new types of employment activity.

DEPLETION OF RESOURCES

The depletion of natural resources has been the principal cause of the loss of employment in other areas.

Timberlands which have been cut over within easy range of mills have led to mill closings and reduction of employment in a number of lumber centers in the Pacific Northwest, such as Tacoma, Wash., for example, the northern peninsula in Michigan, and in certain areas of the South.

In the same way, the exhaustion of mineral resources, both of iron ore and of the nonferrous metals, has left behind virtual "ghost towns" because adequate assistance to adjust to this problem has not been available. Where activity continues, it is often on a small scale. Thus, part of the problem of unemployment in Minnesota results from the shutdown of iron mines.

These illustrations are sufficient to indicate the great variety of circumstances which may give rise to persistent unemployment, and to underscore the great importance of technical assistance in economic planning for redevelopment. It also emphasizes the importance of administrative flexibility in the application of the provisions of this legislation. For some areas, public facility loans may be the primary need; for others the retraining of workers; for still others a combined approach by several Federal agencies in helping to develop recreational facilities; for others, loans for industrial parks; for still others only technical assistance would be in order. Clearly, different approaches must be made to each locality.

THE NEED FOR FEDERAL ACTION

In its declaration of policy, the Employment Act of 1946 states:

The Congress declares that it is the continuing policy and responsibility of the Federal Government to use all practicable means consistent with its needs and obligations and other essential considerations of national policy, with the assistance and cooperation of industry, agriculture, labor, and State and local governments, to coordinate and utilize all its plans, functions, and resources for the purposes of creating and maintaining, in a manner calculated to foster and promote free competitive enterprise and the general welfare, conditions under which there will be afforded useful employment opportunities, including self-employment, for those able, willing, and seeking to work, and to promote maximum employment, production and purchasing power.

The continuing responsibility of the Federal Government to afford useful employment opportunities and to promote maximum employment, production and purchasing power applies alike to general nationwide economic conditions, and to conditions in those unfortunate areas where unemployment and underemployment continue to exist, year after year, whatever may be happening elsewhere.

The Joint Economic Committee in its report on the "President's 1959 Economic Report," stated:

Our programs contributing to the economic progress of underdeveloped regions abroad highlight the inadequacy of public efforts to improve economic conditions in depressed and underdeveloped areas at home. We can no more afford the continuing waste of our own idle or underutilized resources in these areas than we can afford to turn our back on the problem of economic development abroad.

We therefore urge the Congress to enact a substantial program for aid to our depressed areas. * * *

The objective of such a program is to increase economically sound employment opportunities on a permanent basis for the substantial numbers of fully or partially unemployed in these depressed areas, and not to subsidize otherwise uneconomic activities. A program designed to achieve this objective will contribute to the Nation's economic growth. It will represent an investment in increasing productivity. Moreover, it will serve to reduce public outlays for unemployment compensation, relief, and various other forms of public assistance, for which no current production is received in return. The net cost of the program, therefore, will be significantly outweighed by the increase in productivity and in production toward which it is aimed.

During the last 5 years, this committee has received countless pages of testimony from officials of the States and localities in which depressed areas are located. In many of these areas, great and truly heroic efforts have been made on the State and local level to solve the problems of chronic unemployment and underemployment. But in all too many cases, even the most sincere State and local efforts have proved to be inadequate. The consequences of obsolescent and deserved industrial plants, a reduced tax base, declining community facilities, and a labor force, large portions of which are ill trained or possess skills no longer in demand, and many of whom, suffer all the physical and psychological consequences of long-term unemployment, are more than can be overcome by State and local action without Federal assistance.

Nor will measures designed solely to end the current recession and restore general economic prosperity alleviate the economic problems of these depressed communities. These areas, therefore, must be given Federal assistance quite apart from that provided by an overall antirecession program.

The Federal Government has made some attempts in the past to aid labor surplus areas. It has developed a number of uncoordinated programs with the purpose of helping such areas. These programs include limited technical assistance, preference to firms in depressed areas in securing Government contracts and some measure of protection from foreign competition under the Buy American Act. Depressed areas are also assisted by the food distribution program of the Department of Agriculture and may benefit by the urban renewal program and by loans granted by the Small Business Administration. The rural development program conducted by the Department of Agriculture and initiated in 1956 is intended to benefit directly low-income rural areas.

Experience has shown, however, that these uncoordinated programs are totally inadequate to provide for the need of areas suffering from chronic unemployment and underemployment.

Areas of chronic distress have continued to persist.

The social capital of these areas continues to waste away.

The unemployed and underemployed continue to wait and hope for new job opportunities.

Only a comprehensive Federal program, such as proposed by S. 1, can meet the longstanding needs of depressed urban and rural areas.

COMPARISON OF COSTS

COST OF S. 1

The following table shows the new authorizations approved by the committee to carry out the purposes of S. 1:

Authorizations contained in S. 1:

Loans:

Private projects (nonrural areas)-----	$100, 000, 000
Private projects (rural areas)-----	100, 000, 000
Public facilities for industrial or commercial purposes----	100, 000, 000

Grants:

Public facilities for industrial or commercial purposes---	75, 000, 000
Technical assistance (annually)-----	4, 500, 000
Retraining subsistence payments (annually)-----	10, 000, 000
Occupational training (annually)-----	4, 500, 000

As indicated in the table above, over three-fourths of the funds authorized would be for the purpose of making loans. The sum of $100 million is authorized to be borrowed from the Department of the Treasury to establish revolving loan funds for each of the following purposes:

1. To make loans, up to 25 years, for private projects in non-rural areas.

2. To make loans, up to 25 years, for private projects in rural areas.

3. To make loans, up to 40 years, for public facilities for industrial or commercial projects.

In addition, the committee approved an authorization for $75 million for grants for public facilities for industrial or commercial purposes to assist those areas in which the project could not be undertaken without grant aid.

S. 1 authorizes $4½ million annually for technical assistance, $10 million annually for retraining subsistence payments, and $4½ million annually for occupational retraining.

The interest rate on the three types of loans would be at a rate which would more than cover the cost to the Federal Government of borrowing money. The interest rate on the two private type loan funds must amount to one-half of 1 percent above the amount paid to the Secretary of the Treasury, to cover losses and administrative expenses. The interest rate on the public facilities loans would be one-fourth of 1 percent above the rate paid by the Administrator to the Secretary of the Treasury. Recent rates for these two types of loans would have been approximately 4½ percent for the private type loans and around 4 percent for the public facility loans.

Thus the bulk of the expenditures under the bill will be investments of the Federal Government which should provide for a sufficient return to the Government in interest payments which should cover all costs including any losses.

THE COST OF DOING NOTHING

The persistence of high unemployment in certain areas is not merely a matter of local concern, but of national concern as well. It means, first of all, a loss of opportunity and often genuine privation for the unemployed workers and their families. It means a loss of human dignity which accompanies long idleness for men and women who want jobs, not relief.

It also means failure to utilize people, a loss of valuable man-hours of productive work, a loss of potential production of goods and services for the Nation's use. It constitutes an economic burden in a very real sense, in higher unemployment compensation payments, in relief payments, in lost revenues from taxation, and in production and income foregone.

Even in good times, such as 1956-57, unemployment in chronically distressed areas accounted for at least one-fifth of total unemployment. If the rate of unemployment in these areas could have been reduced to the national average, the jobless total would have been roughly a quarter of a million lower in 1956-57.

If, in November 1960, the rate of unemployment in these areas had been as low as the national average of 5.7 percent—a very high figure—the jobless total would have been roughly 280,000 lower.

It is difficult to estimate the amount of reduction in unemployment compensation which would occur in such areas if the unemployment were reduced only to the average for the Nation as a whole, because a higher percentage of the unemployed in areas of chronic unemployment have, by definition, exhausted their benefit rights. A rough calculation indicates that unemployment compensation payments would have been reduced in these areas by somewhere between $100 million and $200 million, depending upon what proportion of people had exhausted their rights in 1960. This assumes the national average benefit payment of about $33 per week and an average duration of payments of 22 weeks, for persons exhausting benefits in the autumn of 1960. If all 280,000 had been in a position to receive this full amount, the reduction would have been $200 million. However, studies of earlier years have indicated that around half of the unemployed in chronically depressed areas were no longer eligible to receive unemployment compensation.

A comprehensive study of chronic unemployment covering periods of full employment in 1956-57, was prepared by the Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics for the Joint Economic Committee in January 1960, entitled "The Structure of Unemployment in Areas of Substantial Labor Surplus."

It shows that in these areas the rate of long-term unemployment, of 15 weeks or longer, in both chronically distressed areas and other areas of substantial labor surplus, is much higher than that in other areas, both in good times and bad. The differences are especially sharp for those who had been out of work for one-half of a year or longer, with a much higher rate in depressed areas.

Moreover, the characteristics of the unemployed in depressed areas and in areas of substantial labor surplus in general indicated that unemployment "had much more serious welfare implications in these areas than elsewhere."

Wherever such conditions prevail, with heads of families out of work for long periods, not only the economic but the social consequences as well are very grave.

Relief payments mount. Unfortunately, there are no comprehensive figures on the overall cost. But the eyewitness accounts by the Special Task Force on Unemployment of the lack of adequate food, clothing, and housing for families of the unemployed, especially in the small coal-mining centers, freely support earlier findings. It is no accident that the first order of President Kennedy was to increase surplus food allowances in these areas. All too often these very communities have exhausted their local resources for relief. Moreover, what is needed is not relief, but jobs.

New job opportunities in these areas will mean increased income and production which will lead to reductions in the costs of many types of public assistance expenditures as well as increased personal and business tax collections of all types at all levels of government. To the extent that an area redevelopment program is successful, there would be reductions in many types of Government expenditures and increases in the income of the Government.

MAJOR PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

ADMINISTRATION

S. 1, as amended by the committee, would create an Area Redevelopment Administration within the Department of Commerce, headed by an Administrator, appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The Secretary of Commerce shall serve as Chairman of the Advisory Policy Board which shall include six Secretaries of other departments and the administrators of two independent agencies. Also the Secretary of Commerce shall appoint the National Public Advisory Committee and shall designate the Chairman of that Committee.

The committee desired to avoid the creation of a new independent agency. At the same time, the committee recognized that the task of effectively administering the area redevelopment program requires independence of action on the part of the Administrator. To assure efficiency of operations, the Administrator is authorized to issue the necessary regulations and interpretations in connection with the program and to enter directly into agreements with other governmental agencies to carry out the provisions of the act.

Although there are many departments which have substantial interest in area redevelopment, placing the Administration in the Department of Commerce assures that existing facilities and specialists within that Department will be fully utilized to avoid any possible duplication.

To achieve maximum success this program will require the full time and attention of an Administrator of the highest possible caliber. The Administrator must enjoy the complete confidence of all segments of these local areas—labor, agriculture, and business, as well as others.

The very difficult problem of area redevelopment requires a carefully integrated unified program with an Administrator directly responsible to the Congress and the President.

REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

Section 5 of the bill contains criteria to be followed by the Administrator in designating areas eligible for redevelopment assistance. Assistance under this bill is to be extended to areas where a chronic or persistent unemployment or underemployment problem exists. This bill does not purport to make assistance available to areas suffering from temporary unemployment at a low point in the business cycle. The bill is not designed to alleviate generalized unemployment. The bill is not designed primarily to alleviate individual hardship in the many areas of chronic and persistent unemployment. Many other Federal, State, and local programs are specifically tailored to meet these needs.

On the contrary, the criteria included in section 5 are intended to direct assistance under this bill to those areas which have not shared in the Nation's economic growth—areas in which there is a persistent underutilization of available resources.

Under subsection 5(a), an area may be designated in the following ways: (1) The Administrator must designate as a redevelopment area any area in which (a) the rate of unemployment, excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal factors, is currently 6 percent or more and has averaged at least 6 percent for the qualifying time periods specified below; and also meets the following requirements:

The annual average rate of unemployment has been at least:

(1) 50 percent above the national average for 3 of the preceding 4 calendar years, or

(2) 75 percent above the national average for 2 of the 3 preceding calendar years, or

(3) 100 percent above the national average for 1 of the 2 preceding years.

As of January 1961, the following standard labor market areas would meet these criteria:

The national average unemployment rates utilized for making these determinations are as follows:

National average unemployment rates

Year:	Rate	Year—Continued	Rate
1957-----	4.3	1959-----	5.5
1958-----	6.8	1960-----	5.6

Data on annual average unemployment rates for individual areas are based on information compiled from area labor market reports prepared by State employment security agencies in connection with the Bureau of Employment Security's regular program for the classification of areas according to the relative adequacy of labor supply. Reports containing such unemployment and labor force data are generally available on a bimonthly basis for the major areas, and semiannually for smaller areas. Preliminary data were utilized in some instances in determining the annual average unemployment rates.

(For more complete data on labor market areas which would meet these criteria as of January 1961, see appendix A.)

The Administrator may also, at his discretion, designate other areas as eligible for assistance where substantial and persistent unemployment has existed and which have unemployment conditions generally comparable to those of the areas of mandatory designation.

For example, this is intended to give the Administrator the necessary discretion to designate as a redevelopment area and an area which has suffered from a sudden, severe, or catastrophic loss of employment opportunity and which might not otherwise become eligible for assistance until at least a year had passed.

The Administrator would define the boundaries of these redevelopment areas which he has designated. These boundaries would not have to be identical with the standard labor market areas as defined by the Department of Labor and could include one or more States, counties, or municipalities, as well as a part of a county or municipality.

The Secretary of Labor is required to supply the information to the Administrator so that he may make the designations of areas eligible for assistance in subsection (a).

These criteria have been tailored to focus the assistance available under this bill on those nonrural areas of most severe need. It is felt that the Administrator must have some discretion in the designation of some of the areas eligible for assistance. Current and prospective data on labor-market areas may not fully define all of the relative aspects of the chronic unemployment problems that exist in certain instances. The Administrator needs a limited amount of flexibility in the discretion of redevelopment areas to insure efficient and effective utilization of the Federal funds involved.

Under 5(b) the Administrator shall also designate as redevelopment areas those areas which do not meet the criteria set forth above but which he determines are among the "highest in numbers and percentages of low-income families, and in which there exists a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment." The bill specifies seven factors that the Administrator shall consider, among others, in making designations of these types of areas:

- (1) The number of low-income farm families in rural areas;
- (2) The proportion that such low-income families are to the total farm families of each of such areas;
- (3) The relationship of the income levels of the families in each of such areas to the general levels of income in the United States;
- (4) The current and prospective employment opportunities in each such area;
- (5) The availability of manpower in each such area for supplemental employment;
- (6) The extent of migration out of the area; and
- (7) The proportion of the population in each such area receiving public assistance.

(For a fuller discussion of the utilization of these criteria in order to designate areas, see appendix C, technical memorandum submitted to the Banking and Currency Committee by the Secretary of Agriculture and the discussion of the amendment to sec. 5(b) in Designation of Rural Areas.)

Although the criteria for the designation of so-called rural areas are not quantitative in nature and therefore require some discretion by the Administrator, the committee feels that the language of the bill offers sufficient policy guidelines to the Administrator. To specify overly rigid formulas for eligibility for rural areas would only deny the Administrator the necessary flexibility to carry out the intent of subsection (b).

LOANS FOR INDUSTRIAL PROJECTS

Section 6 of the bill provides for two $100 million revolving funds, one for industrial projects in nonrural redevelopment areas, the other for industrial projects in rural redevelopment areas. These revolving funds for loans were provided because in these areas where unemployment and underemployment has been substantial and persistent, the communities own resources, including all possible sources of capital funds, have not been sufficient to make it possible to generate the needed industrial development.

This need for capital in these areas is related closer to the nationwide need for small business credit, which has occupied the attention of Congress for many years. The Small Business Administration is now providing a limited amount of assistance. State business development credit corporations and authorities and similar local organizations have attempted to provide equity capital or long-term credit for businesses in areas of chronic unemployment. However, the local capital which was available in the past frequently has been fully utilized in previous efforts to generate new business firms or in relief measures. Outside capital is doubly reluctant to venture into an area where other industries may have suffered or failed, whatever the cause may have been. In a growing economy safer investment opportunities may be available elsewhere and would seem preferable to these outside sources of private capital.

It is impossible to predict accurately the kind or number of projects, or the number of jobs which will be created by these loans. However, the requirements for an approved economic development plan and the authority of the Administrator to provide informational services and technical assistance attempts to insure that these loan funds will be most effectively and efficiently utilized. The two $100 million revolving loan funds would seem sufficient to finance a substantial program which would demonstrate the feasibility of the approach to area redevelopment contained in this bill. According to available data the total capital investment in the projects for which these loans are needed is likely to be a multiple of the Federal loan participation. By conservative measure, the loans authorized in section 6 should generate a total combined public and private investment of at least $300 million. This should have a substantial impact in providing permanent jobs in these areas and laying the base for sustained economic growth. As these loans are repaid additional funds would become available for new Federal loans for future projects.

Section 6 explicitly states that Federal financial assistance shall not be extended to assist existing firms to relocate from one area to another. This provision reflects the declaration of purpose of the act—to create new employment opportunities by developing and expanding existing facilities and resources rather than merely transferring jobs from one community to another. In an expanding economy ample opportunity should be found to develop these areas of chronic unemployment and underemployment without injury to other areas of the country.

INDUSTRIAL OR COMMERCIAL PUBLIC FACILITY ASSISTANCE

Section 7 of the bill would authorize a $100 million revolving fund to be used for loans for qualified public facilities projects in redevelopment areas. These loans could be up to 40 years and 65 percent of project cost. The funds would be borrowed from the Treasury under the same interest rate formula and other provisions applicable, in section 9 of the bill, to funds for private industrial and commercial loans. This formula presently produces a rate for Treasury borrowing of roughly 3½ percent. The lending rate would be one-quarter percent higher, or approximately 4½ percent at the present time.

At least 10 percent of the cost of any project would be required to be supplied by the State, the locality itself, or other State political subdivision, either as equity or as a loan. More than a 10-percent contribution may be required if the Administrator determines this to be desirable, after considering such factors as the financial condition of the State and local governments and the per capita income of the residents of the area. It is expected that funds would be available under the grant program in section 8 of the bill for the remaining financing on projects eligible under that section.

The loans would be available to States, political subdivisions, Indian tribes, or public or private nonprofit organizations or associations representing part or all of a redevelopment area. The projects themselves would have to be primarily for use by industrial or commercial establishments in the area and necessary for those establishments—for example, a sewage system to serve the area of a new industrial area. However, such projects would not be ineligible for assistance merely because they to a lesser extent also generally served the population of the redevelopment areas.

For a project to qualify for a loan under this section, the Administrator would also have to find that (1) it will tend to improve the opportunities in the redevelopment area for the establishment or expansion of industry or commerce and will provide a lasting increase in employment opportunities; (2) the funds are not otherwise available on reasonable terms; (3) enough funds will be available to complete the project; (4) there is reasonable expectation of repayment, and (5) the project is consistent with an approved economic development program of the type described in section 6.

Many examples of the kinds of public facilities which might be built under these programs have been presented to the committee; for example, water systems to supply industrial water for factories, sewer systems to carry away industrial wastes, generating plants to supply industrial power, piers and other related public facilities for seafood production.

Where necessary to encourage participation in the project by other lenders or investors the Federal loans may be made subordinate both in security and repayment.

Loans are specifically prohibited for any public facility which will compete with a privately owned but publicly regulated public utility, in reference either to existing or to planned facilities.

In many redevelopment areas the provision of additional public facilities will be an essential prerequisite to attracting the urgently needed additional industrial and commercial facilities. Where credit is unavailable to a community, or available only at high rates of interest, the loan funds provided under this bill will be of substantial assistance. Public facility projects not eligible for assistance under this provision but essential to a community may still qualify for assistance under the existing public facility loan program of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Section 8 of the act would authorize the appropriation of $75 million for grants to provide additional financing for eligible public facilities projects, which will fulfill a pressing need in the area and for which there is otherwise little probability that the projects can be undertaken. The grants would be limited to any funds not practically obtainable from other sources, including loans under section 7. Other applicant and project eligibility requirements would be the same as in the case of loans.

These grant funds would be used only as a last resort, where the Federal loan funds, combined with other financing practically available to the locality, are insufficient to complete the project.

FUNDS FOR LOAN PROGRAMS

S. 1 contains three revolving funds for loan programs and, in addition, it contains grants and authorizations for direct expenditures and administrative expenses.

The grant program and the authorizations for direct expenditures and administrative expenses would be financed through appropriations. These expenditures would not be recouped, and the appropriations process is the correct way to finance them.

In the case of the three $100 million revolving funds for loans to private enterprises and to public and nonprofit organizations, S. 1 would authorize the Administrator to borrow the needed funds from the Secretary of the Treasury through public debt transactions. The Administrator would pay interest to the Treasury, and he would be required to charge interest on the loans he made in sufficient amounts to pay the Treasury and provide leeway for administrative expenses, and losses on the private loans.

The use of the borrowing authority to finance revolving loan funds is the businesslike way to carry out these loan programs. It provides for continuity in the program.

The public debt transaction is a tried and tested method of financing governmental loan programs which has demonstrated its superiority for financing certain types of programs. Among the agencies and programs financed in part or entirely by this method have been the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, the Federal Public Housing Authority, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Export-Import Bank of Washington, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. There are many others.

The Congress will have ample opportunity to review and scrutinize activities under this act. Under section 9(b) the Administrator will be required to prepare annually and submit a budget program under sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act. The budget program must contain estimates of the financial condition and operations, and a statement of financial condition, a statement of income and expenses, a statement of sources and application of funds, estimates of operations by major types of activities, estimates of administrative expenses and borrowings, and other financial information. This must be transmitted to the Congress as a part of the President's annual budget.

The Banking and Currency Committees under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 will have a duty to watch over the activities of the Administrator. And furthermore, the new section 27 specifically requires the Senate Banking and Currency Committee to make a complete review of the administration of the act after it has been in effect 2 years and to report to the Senate on this review and to make such recommendations as it deems advisable.

INFORMATION AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

The bill directs the Administrator to provide assistance, technical information, market research, and other forms of advice available from the Federal Government which would be useful in alleviating unemployment and underemployment both in redevelopment and other areas. In addition, the Administrator is authorized to provide technical assistance which would be useful in alleviating or preventing conditions of excessive unemployment or underemployment to areas which he has designated as redevelopment areas and to other areas which he finds have substantial need for such assistance. Such assistance would include studies evaluating the needs of and developing potentials for economic growth for such areas and could be conducted either by the Administrator's staff or by employing individuals, firms, or institutions. For example, State universities and land-grant colleges might be in a position to make a substantial contribution to the development of areas by this means. Appropriations up to $4.5 million annually are authorized for this program.

The sound redevelopment of a depressed area should be based on careful planning. Early in the program, a technological audit should be made to determine the types of economic activity which would contribute to sound and lasting growth.

A well-planned and carefully executed technological audit should show how the resources of an area could be put to their optimum use. The audit would not be limited to natural resources, although the best use of these should be carefully explored. Recent experiments in the use of coal as a raw material for the chemical industry and in the development of synthetic fuels hold much promise for a revival of the coal industry in some areas currently depressed. Instead of mining coal to be shipped to industrial centers as fuel, however, various types of chemical plants could be attracted to the coalfields since there would be substantial weight loss in the extraction of synthetic gases and chemicals from coal. Experimental work along these lines is now in progress. It could be hastened, however, by financial and technical assistance to labor surplus areas.

Some depressed areas are poorly endowed with natural resources, however, and in other basic resources have been largely depleted. Here the problem would be to discover the locational advantages of these communities for various types of processing, fabricating, and research activities. Specialists in industrial location could help determine the advantages which such locations have to offer to expanding industries. Their analysis would be based on long-term fundamental advantages, and not short-term inducements often artificially created.

Businesses now operating in depressed areas could be encouraged to expand. Many types of specialists could assist in this. Industrial engineers, cost accountants, marketing specialists and others could assist small firms to increase their efficiency and to develop new products and services.

Experts in city planning and, in particular, in the development of community facilities can assist in appraising the adequacy of these facilities—for example, sewer and water systems, access roads and other essential community installations. Testimony before the committee indicates that the absence of adequate modern facilities is often one of the most important deterrents to location of new industry.

The surveys of the skills of the local labor force constitute another form of technical assistance which is very important in appraising the type of activity which is suitable for an area.

URBAN RENEWAL AND PLANNING AID

In addition to other types of Federal assistance under S. 1, section 14 makes it impossible for redevelopment areas to participate more fully in the Federal urban renewal program. Under existing law, this program is available to localities which have undertaken a program to clear and redevelop slums and to rehabilitate blighted areas. Upon compliance with the policies and procedures of the Housing and Home Finance Administrator, a locality may obtain Federal financial assistance in the form of advances, loans and grants for the planning and undertaking of urban renewal projects. Federal advances are used to defray planning and other initial expenses. Temporary loans are used as working capital, largely to acquire land and to pay administrative overhead, and both loans and advances are repaid from the proceeds of land and the Federal grant. Federal grants may not exceed two-thirds of the aggregate net project costs (or three-fourths in the case of a project undertaken on a so-called three-fourths basis).

Historically, the urban renewal program is related primarily to the clearance, rehabilitation, and redevelopment of residential areas. To assure that urban renewal activity is confined largely to residential renewal, section 110(c) of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, now provides:

Financial assistance shall not be extended under this title with respect to any urban renewal area which is not predominantly residential in character and which, under the urban renewal plan therefor, is not to be redeveloped for predominantly residential uses.

Existing law provides an exception to this rule

* * * if the governing body of the local public agency determines that the redevelopment of such an area (not predominantly residential in character and not to be redeveloped for predominantly residential uses) for predominantly nonresidential uses is necessary for the proper development of the community.

In such cases, the Housing Administrator may extend financial assistance, but the aggregate amount of capital grants for such projects may not exceed 20 percent of the total amount of capital grants authorized by the Housing Act of 1959 and subsequent acts.

Section 14 adds a new section 113 to title I of the Housing Act of 1949. Subsection (a) of the new section 113 provides Federal financial assistance whenever the Area Redevelopment Administrator certifies to the Housing Administrator that the municipality is located in an area designated as a redevelopment area and that there is a reasonable probability that such assistance will achieve more than temporary improvement in the economy.

Subsection (b) waives the "predominantly residential" limitations of section 110(c) for projects in a redevelopment area but the volume of capital grants authorized for such projects is governed by subsection (e).

Subsection (c) authorizes the disposition of land designated for industrial or commercial uses to any public agency or nonprofit corporation at fair value for subsequent disposition for uses in accordance with the plan. Under present law, purchasers or lessees of project land, together with their assignees, must agree to commence the improvements required by the urban renewal plan within a reasonable time and must be obligated to devote the land to the uses specified in the plan. Subsection (c) provides that only purchasers or lessees from the public agency or nonprofit corporation, and subsequent developers, shall be required to assume the obligations relating to the commencement of improvements. This provision permits a local public agency to dispose of certain project land to a public body or nonprofit corporation to hold for subsequent disposition to a redeveloper.

Subsection (d) authorizes the Housing Administrator to exercise all the authority vested in him to complete a project commenced with financial assistance obtained under this section, even though the determination is made that the area is no longer a redevelopment area.

Subsection (e) provides that the present limitation on the aggregate amount of capital grant authorizations for nonresidential exception projects may be increased by 10 percent of the aggregate amount of new grant authority provided after September 23, 1959, whenever the Housing Administrator determines such an increase to be necessary to provide assistance under this section.

As stated previously, present law permits 20 percent of the aggregate amount of grants authorized for urban renewal purposes after September 23, 1959, to be used for assisting projects which are classified as exceptions to the predominantly residential requirement. Section 14 may be expected to increase the demand upon capital grant authorizations under the exception for nonresidential projects being redeveloped for nonresidential uses. Since earmarking and reservations for nonresidential exception projects have exhausted the available grant authority which may be used for such projects under the 20-percent limitation, subsection (e) authorizes the 10-percent increase, which amounts to $65 million on the basis of existing grant authorizations.

If additional funds are made available for urban renewal grants during the present session of Congress, 20 percent of these new funds will become available for nonresidential urban renewal projects. The purpose of subsection (e) is to give the Housing Administrator a call upon at least 10 percent of any new grant authority for the purpose of assisting projects undertaken pursuant to this section.

Essentially, S. 1 is designed to establish various types of programs which would be effective in alleviating substantial and persistent unemployment in redevelopment areas. Admittedly, the urban renewal program is not specifically designed to alleviate unemployment. Nevertheless, it can generate a considerable amount of economic activity through the acquisition and disposition of land, the demolition and clearance of slums and blighted areas, the construction of project improvements and public facilities, the repair and improvement of buildings in a project area scheduled for rehabilitation and the redevelopment of areas that are prepared and available for new construction.

It has been argued that despite the close association of the urban renewal program with clearance of residential slums and the improvement of housing standards and living conditions, it is also important to provide employment and income for the individual in order to permit him personally to improve his living standards. The exception to the predominantly residential requirement seeks to achieve this objective.

URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

Section 15 of the bill would amend section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954 to permit an urban planning grant to be made directly to cities, other municipalities, and counties in a redevelopment area. As a general matter under present law, only cities, other municipalities, and counties having a population of less than 50,000 are eligible for an urban planning grant, and then only through a State planning agency. Larger cities and counties can generally receive the assistance of such grants only through the work of metropolitan or regional planning agencies.

It is the intention of this section to encourage small cities and counties in a redevelopment area to take full advantage of the urban planning grant assistance program without the time-consuming delays that would be necessary if they had to comply with existing law and make their applications through a State planning agency. It is also intended to permit cities and counties with a population of 50,000 or more that are situated in a redevelopment area to share in the benefits of this program. This section also authorizes an increase in the amount of the grant to 75 percent of the estimated cost of the planning work. Since the communities sought to be assisted are generally least able to provide the local share of the planning costs, the committee believes that this liberalization of the sharing ratio for cities and counties located in a redevelopment area is necessary.

OCCUPATIONAL RETRAINING AND SUBSISTENCE PAYMENTS

In areas where the principal industry has left or the facilities are obsolete, or where the area never reached an advanced state of development, it will be important to provide vocational and job training and retraining for the people of the area. Determination of the types of new industries which can effectively be manned by the areas' labor force cannot be made until its characteristics and occupational potentialities are known.

Accordingly, the Secretary of Labor is authorized to make studies of the skills, adaptability, characteristics, and occupational potentialities of the labor force in any redevelopment area. After an area has an approved economic development program, the Secretary of Labor shall determine its occupational training or retraining needs and shall cooperate with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and existing State and local agencies to make vocational training services available. In areas where educational facilities are needed, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is to provide assistance, including financial assistance where necessary, to the appropriate State vocational educational agencies or through educational institutions if the State agency is unable to provide the facilities or services needed.

Provision is made for the orderly selection and referral of trainees from among the unemployed who reside in the redevelopment area. To the extent that suitable opportunities for employment and applicants for training can be matched, training of unemployed individuals residing in redevelopment areas for job opportunities in other areas is authorized. Appropriations up to $4.5 million annually are authorized for this program.

In recognition of the fact that the unemployed in need of occupational retraining may also be in need of a minimum level of income until they can be retrained for useful employment, the bill authorizes a program of retraining subsistence payments. The payments will be made by the States in which redevelopment areas are located under agreements entered into by the States and the Secretary of Labor. The States will act as agents of the United States while making these payments with Federal funds. The amount of the retraining subsistence payments will be equal to the average weekly unemployment compensation payment payable in the State making such payments. The payments will be made only for the period a trainee is receiving occupational training or retraining, but no trainee shall receive such payment for more than 16 weeks. An annual appropriation of $10 million is authorized for retraining subsistence payments.

In a growing and changing economy, new technology, shifts in consumer preferences, and changes in resource use will always cause shifts in the kinds of skills needed in local labor markets. In many labor market areas, these resulting shifts in jobs by workers occur automatically with a minimum of hardship for the individuals involved. In many other areas, however, workers have been left without any alternative employment opportunities either because their skills are now obsolete or because of the deterioration of the economic base of the area. The criteria in section 5 are designed so that the retraining and subsistence assistance is directed at and limited to those areas in which these automatic shifts in employment have not occurred. The training and subsistence payments programs will assist the mobility of labor from obsolete or unneeded skills into more productive employment. These programs will complement free market forces by assisting the private market mechanism to respond more quickly and more effectively to structural changes in the economy.

Economic history (including experience in recent years with foreign assistance programs) has pinpointed the necessity of a fully utilized and highly skilled labor force as a fundamental determinant of sustained economic growth.

USE OF OTHER AGENCIES AND DELEGATION OF FUNCTIONS

Section 24 of the bill specifies that the Administrator may use the available services and facilities of other Federal agencies and instrumentalities, to the extent practicable and with their consent, on a reimbursable basis. Where the duplication of existing staffs and facilities would be thereby avoided, the section requires such use. Many facilities of the Department of Commerce could be utilized to assist the Administrator in the performance of his duties. Provision is also made for the transfer of funds authorized under this bill and the hiring of new supergrade personnel, in accord with any such transfer of functions.

Under section 25, the Administrator may, with Presidential approval, delegate functions under this bill to other agencies.

These provisions will assure the full use of the experienced staffs administering existing Federal programs similar to those proposed in this bill. Thus, for instance, the Housing and Home Finance Agency, which administers a public facility loan program under existing law, could be utilized to assist in making the loans and grants under sections 7 and 8 of the bill. The Small Business Administration and the Department of Agriculture could assist in making private type loans under these sections. The Department of Commerce is well equipped to perform numerous functions in cooperation with the Administrator. These provisions are desirable in the interest of prompt action, efficiency, and economy.

However, in the interest of simplifying administration of the program and relieving the communities, regions, and States of any undue burden general pervuew of the entire program should, so far as possible, be vested in the Area Redevelopment Administration. It is vital that we do not force these areas which seek assistance to shuttle around from one Government agency to another to attain proper attention to their needs.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This section would provide that the act may be cited as the "Area Redevelopment Act."

SECTION 2. DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

This section would declare it to be the purpose of the bill to provide Federal help for areas needing economic redevelopment so that they can expand their economic activities and alleviate the substantial unemployment and underemployment that prevail within such areas. This would be accomplished by assisting communities, industries, enterprises, and individuals to create new employment opportunities by developing and expanding new and existing facilities and resources, rather than merely transferring jobs from one community to another.

SECTION 3. AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

This section would establish an Area Redevelopment Administration in the Department of Commerce. The Administration would be headed by an Administrator appointed by the President and subject to confirmation by the Senate. The Administrator would receive a salary of $20,000 a year.

SECTION 4. ADVISORY POLICY BOARD

Subsection (a) would create an Area Redevelopment Advisory Board to advise the Administrator in the performance of his functions under the bill. The Board would be composed of the Secretary of Commerce, as Chairman, and seven other department and agency heads whose functions are related to (or could assist in) the improvement of economic conditions in redevelopment areas. Any member of the Board could designate an officer of his agency to act for him as a member of the Board. The Chairman could invite other interested officials in the executive branch to participate in the functions of the Board.

(b) Would require the Secretary of Commerce to appoint a 25-member National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment, to be composed of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, State and local governments, and the general public, one of whom would be designated as Chairman by the Secretary of Commerce. This Committee would be required to meet at least twice a year and make recommendations to the Secretary of Commerce from time to time, to assist him in carrying out his duties under the bill.

(c) Would authorize the Administrator to call together and confer with any persons, including representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and government, who can assist in meeting the problems of unemployment or underemployment in redevelopment areas.

SECTION 5. REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

The bill recognizes two types of redevelopment areas which will be eligible to receive Federal assistance under this bill.

Under subsection (a) nonrural areas may be designated as redevelopment areas in any one of the following ways: (i) the Administrator may, at his discretion, determine, upon the basis of standards generally comparable with those in (1) and (2) below, that a given area has been subject to substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended period of time and designate the area an industrial redevelopment area; or (ii) the Administrator must designate an industrial area as an industrial redevelopment area—

(1) where the rate of unemployment, excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal factors, is currently 6 percent or more and has averaged at least 6 percent for the qualifying time periods specified in subparagraph (2) below; and

(2) where the annual average rate of unemployment has been at least (a) 50 percent above the national average for three of the preceding four calendar years, or (b) 75 percent above the national average for two of the preceding three calendar years, or (c) 100 percent above the national average for one of the preceding two years.

The Secretary of Labor is responsible for providing the information the Administrator will use in making these designations.

Areas adversely affected by trade agreements concerning which the President has notified the Administrator under section 5(f) are given special consideration for designation as industrial redevelopment areas.

(b) Sets forth the criteria for rural redevelopment areas (including Indian reservations). The Administrator is directed to designate as redevelopment areas those areas which he determines are among the highest in numbers and percentages of low-income families, and in which there exists a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment. In making these designations, and before making any loans as the result of these designations, the Administrator must, by regulation, prescribe detailed standards upon which designations under the subsection must be based. In the formulation of these standards, the Administrator is required to consider, among other relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families in the various rural areas in the United States, the proportion of such low-income families to the total farm families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of families in each such area to the general levels of income in the United States, the current and prospective employment opportunities in each area, the availability of manpower in each area for supplemental employment, and the proportion of the population receiving public assistance.

In designating areas under subsection 5(b), the Administrator must endeavor to distribute the projects widely among the States, so far as is feasible and proper, in order to give as wide a variety of experience with these programs as possible.

In making determinations concerning redevelopment areas, the Administrator is to be guided, but not conclusively governed, by studies made and the available information compiled by the various Federal agencies, State and local governments, universities, and private organizations.

Under (c) the Administrator may request from the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Interior, and other heads of agencies special studies and such information and data as he deems necessary to enable him to make the determinations provided for in this section. The Administrator is required to reimburse these agencies for expenditures which they incur in connection with filling his requests.

(d) Defines the term "redevelopment area" to mean any area within the United States which has been designated by the Administrator as a redevelopment areas. This provision limits the benefits of the act to the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

SECTION 6. LOANS AND PARTICIPATIONS

Under subsection (a) the Administrator is authorized to make loans (including participations), to assist in the purchase or development of land and facilities (including machinery and equipment incomes of demonstrated need) for industrial use, or for the construction, rehabilitation, or alteration of industrial plants. This assistance shall not be extended for (1) working capital or (2) to assist establishments relocating from one area to another.

Clause (2) above shall not be construed to prohibit assistance for the expansion of an existing business operation from its original location or for the establishment of a new branch, affiliate, or subsidiary, provided that such assistance will not substantially decrease employment in the area of original location.

(b) Imposes the following restrictions:

(1) The total amount of loans and participations outstanding at any one time in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(a) must not exceed $100 million. Similar provisions are made for redevelopment areas designated under 5(b).

(2) The assistance may only be extended to applicants which have been approved for the purpose by an agency of the State or its political subdivision concerned with problems of economic development in the State or subdivision.

(3) The project will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment.

(4) The assistance may only be extended if such financial assistance is not otherwise available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on reasonable terms.

(5) The Administrator shall not make any loan without a participation unless he determines that the loan cannot be made on a participation basis.

(6) There must be reasonable assurance of repayment.

(7) The length of the loan may not exceed 25 years.

(8) The interest must be one-half of 1 percent above the amount paid to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be used to cover administrative expenses and to provide for losses on loans.

(9) The assistance must not exceed 65 percent of the cost to the applicant, excluding other Federal aid, and the following conditions must be observed:

(A) Enough funds must be available to complete the project;

(B) At least 10 percent of the cost must be supplied by the State or a subdivision, community or area organization, as equity capital, or as a loan;

(C) In the case of a project in a redevelopment area designated under 5(a) not less than 5 percent of the cost must be supplied by nongovernmental sources;

(D) To the extent necessary the Federal financial assistance may be repayable after other loans made in connection with the project and in accordance with this section have been repaid in full.

(10) An overall program for the economic development of the area must have been approved by the Administrator and a finding must be made by the State or a subdivision that the project is consistent with the program.

(c) Creates a revolving fund of $100 million for projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(a) and another revolving fund of $100 million for projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(b).

SECTION 7. PUBLIC FACILITY LOANS FOR INDUSTRIAL OR COMMERCIAL PURPOSES

Subsection (a) loans for public facilities may be made on the application of a State or a political subdivision thereof, or an Indian tribe, or a private nonprofit or public organization or association representing a redevelopment area. The loan may be made for the purpose of financing the purchase or development of land for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within the redevelopment area.

(1) The project must provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment, and must tend to improve the opportunities in the area for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities.

(2) The loan may not be granted if funds are available from other sources on reasonable terms.

(3) The amount of the loan plus other available funds must be sufficient for completion of the project.

(4) There must be a reasonable expectation of repayment.

(5) The area has an approved economic development program and the proposed project is consistent with that program.

(b) The loan is limited to 65 percent of the aggregate cost of the project, and it must mature within 40 years. The interest rate is to be one-quarter of 1 percent above the rate of interest paid by the Administrator to the Secretary of the Treasury.

(c) The Administrator must require that at least 10 percent of the cost of the project shall be supplied by the State (or any political subdivision thereof) as equity capital, or as a loan.

(d) The Federal loan may be subordinate to other loans made in connection with the project and in accordance with this section.

(e) Prohibits financial assistance to a public facility which would compete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory body determines that in the area to be served by the public facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing facilities or through an expansion which it agrees to undertake.

(f) A revolving fund of $100 million is set up, from funds borrowed from the Treasury.

SECTION 8. PUBLIC FACILITY GRANTS FOR INDUSTRIAL OR COMMERCIAL PURPOSES

Subsection (a) authorizes the Administrator to make studies of the needs for public facilities to meet industrial or commercial needs in the various redevelopment areas and to make grants for the acquisition or development of land for public facility usage in redevelopment areas, and for the construction, rehabilitation, or improvement of public facilities in such areas.

(b) A grant may be made only pursuant to a proposal (showing the proposed project, its cost, and the proposed local contributions) received from the State or local government, Indian tribe, or from a public or private nonprofit organization representing the redevelopment area.

Before the Administrator approves a grant he must find that (1) the proposed project will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the area, and will tend to promote industrial or commercial development, (2) the entity requesting the grant will contribute to the cost of the project in proportion to its ability, (3) the project is urgently needed in the area and could not be undertaken without such a grant. No such grant could exceed the difference between the total cost of the project and the amount available for it from other sources (including loans under sec. 7 of the bill), and (4) the area for which a project is to be undertaken has an approved economic development program and the project is consistent with that program.

(c) Directs the Administrator to issue regulations to insure that Federal funds made available for public facility projects under this section are not wasted or dissipated.

(d) Imposes a restriction on grants for public utilities like the restrictions imposed on loans under subsection 7(e) described above.

(e) Would authorize an appropriation not exceeding $75 million for public facility grants under this section.

SECTION 9. FUNDS FOR LOANS

Subsection (a): This section would authorize the Administrator to obtain funds for making loans under sections 6 and 7 of the bill by borrowing from the Treasury in amounts not exceeding $300 million outstanding at any one time. The interest rate on the notes and obligations representing this borrowing would be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury at a rate not greater than the current average yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations. The amounts thus obtained from the Treasury would be used to establish the revolving funds provided for in sections 6 and 7 of the bill.

(b) The Administrator shall—

- (1) Prepare and submit annually a budget program, and
- (2) Determine the character of and the necessity for obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they are paid.

SECTION 10. INFORMATION

The Administrator is authorized to extend to parties located in redevelopment areas and other areas technical information, market research data, and other forms of assistance obtainable from the various Federal agencies which might be useful to the areas in expanding employment or preventing excessive unemployment or underemployment.

In addition, the Administrator is directed to furnish Federal procurement agencies addresses of businesses located in redevelopment areas desirous of obtaining Government contracts. The lists shall specify the supplies and services in which the designated firms are engaged.

SECTION 11. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

This section authorizes the Administrator to offer technical assistance to redevelopment areas and to other areas which have need of such assistance to alleviate or prevent excessive unemployment or underemployment. Such technical assistance might consist of data concerning the resources and the economic potential of the areas and other information that may help the economic growth of these areas. The assistance may be provided directly through members of the staff of the Area Redevelopment Administration or through contracts with private individuals, partnerships, firms, corporations, or institutions. An amount not to exceed $4.5 million annually is appropriated under this section.

SECTION 12. POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR

This section provides the Administrator with the administrative powers needed to carry out the area redevelopment program under the bill. The Administrator is authorized by this section to engage in such business transactions, and to take such action to acquire, dispose of, and otherwise deal with both real and personal property and to enforce any rights, claims, and obligations, as may be necessary or appropriate in connection with the performance of his duties under the bill; procure the temporary help of experts or consultants; and to establish such rules and regulations as may be appropriate in carrying out the provisions of the bill.

SECTION 13. TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

Under this section the Administrator is required to terminate the eligibility for area redevelopment assistance when he finds the economic conditions within the area have improved to the extent that the area is no longer eligible for designation under section 5.

An area may be redesignated as a redevelopment area, if the economic conditions within the area deteriorate to qualify it again for redevelopment assistance. No action in terminating the eligibility of an area to receive aid under this bill will affect the validity of any contracts entered into prior to the termination of eligibility.

SECTION 14. URBAN RENEWAL

This is an amendment to title I of the Housing Act of 1949 and will be designated as section 113 of that act.

Subsection (a) provides financial assistance to local public agencies in any otherwise eligible municipality where the Area Redevelopment Administrator certifies to the Administrator (HHFA) that—

(1) the municipality is situated in an area designated as a redevelopment area; and

(2) there is a probability that such assistance will contribute to more than temporary improvement in economic development.

(b) Waives the “predominantly residential” requirement of section 110(c) of title I of the Housing Act of 1949 and the limitations of section 110(c) concerning projects for nonresidential uses.

(c) Authorizes disposition of land under this section to any public agency or nonprofit corporation for subsequent disposition provided that—

(1) such disposition shall be made to the public agency or nonprofit corporation at fair market value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan;

(2) subsequent purchasers shall be required to assume the obligations relating to the commencement of improvements imposed under section 105(b) of title I of the Housing Act of 1949. (Sec. 105(b) requires developer to proceed with development or redevelopment promptly and in accordance with an approved plan.)

(d) Permits the Administrator to continue financial assistance to complete a project even though the area in which the project is located may no longer be a redevelopment area.

(e) An additional 10 percent of new grant authority provided after September 23, 1959, may be used, under certain conditions, for non-residential redevelopment projects.

SECTION 15. URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

Subsection (a) amends section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954 so as to make planning grants available to communities in redevelopment areas with a population in excess of 25,000.

(b) Grants may be made for not more than 75 percent of the cost of the planning.

SECTION 16. OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING

Subsection (a) provides that the Secretary of Labor may undertake studies of the labor force in any redevelopment area.

(b) The Secretary of Labor in consultation with the Administrator is required to determine the retraining needs in redevelopment areas with approved economic development programs. The Secretary of Labor shall notify the Secretary of HEW of the training requirements of the area, shall select those individuals for retraining and in cooperation with those agencies already performing occupational training, shall see to it that all available facilities are being utilized for the purposes of this section.

(c) If the Secretary of Labor finds that additional training or retraining facilities are needed in a redevelopment area, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is required to assist the State vocational agency in acquiring the needed vocational facilities or services. The Secretary of HEW may also enter into contracts, after due consultation with the State vocational agency, with public or private educational institutions to provide the needed facilities or services.

(d) The Secretary of Labor is required to provide technical assistance for setting up apprenticeship training facilities.

(e) Authorizes an annual appropriation of not more than $4,500,000 for occupational training.

SECTION 17. RETRAINING SUBSISTENCE PAYMENTS

Subsection (a): The Secretary of Labor may enter into agreements with States where redevelopment areas are located providing for weekly subsistence payments to unemployed or underemployed persons undergoing retraining, who are not eligible to receive unemployment compensation. The subsistence payments made to any individual are limited to 16 weeks and shall be equal to the average weekly unemployment compensation benefits paid in the State.

(b) Denies retraining payments to individuals who are receiving unemployment compensation under the Social Security Act or under any other Federal or State employment law.

(c) The agreements with States may contain provision to promote effective administration and protect the United States against loss. Determination by appropriate officers or agencies concerning eligibility of individuals for retraining payment shall be final and conclusive subject to the rules and regulations of (d) below.

(d) The Secretary of Labor and the Administrator shall prescribe the rules and regulations needed to carry out the provisions of subsection (a).

(e) An annual appropriation not to exceed $10 million is authorized for retraining subsistence payments.

SECTION 18. PENALTIES

Subsection (a) makes it a crime to knowingly make a false statement or willfully overvalue a security for the purpose of obtaining a loan or of influencing any action of the Administrator or to obtain money, property, or anything of value under the act.

(b) makes it a crime for any employee or agent of the Administrator to embezzle or misapply any money or securities, or make any false entries, or to issue or assign notes or other documents with intent to defraud, or to participate or share in any loan or contract made by the Administrator with intent to defraud, or to give out any unauthorized information about the actions or plans of the Administrator, or to invest or speculate in the securities of a company receiving assistance from the Administrator.

Violation of the above is punishable by a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

SECTION 19. EMPLOYMENT OF EXPEDITERS AND ADMINISTRATIVE EMPLOYEES

This section provides that a loan may not be made to a business enterprise unless the names of the attorneys and agents expediting the application and the fees paid to them are certified to the Administrator and unless an agreement is executed requiring the firm to refrain from employing or offering to employ or retain the professional services of an employee of the Administrator who exercised discretionary power at the time the assistance was granted or during the preceding year.

SECTION 20. RECORD OF APPLICATIONS

The Administrator is required to keep a public record of the approved applications, with the name or names of the applicants and the amount, duration, and purposes of the loan, and the security given.

SECTION 21. PREVAILING RATE OF WAGE, 40-HOUR WEEK AND 8-HOUR DAY

This section requires the Administrator to insure that all laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on projects undertaken by public applicants assisted under the act (1) be paid wages at rates no less than those prevailing on the same type of work on similar construction in the immediate locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor under the Davis-Bacon Act and (2) receive time and one-half for hours worked during a week in excess of 40 and for hours worked in a day in excess of 8. In order to coordinate the administration and enforcement of these standards, Reorganization Plan No. 14 of 1950 (giving the Secretary of Labor coordinating authority over these enforcement activities of the contracting agencies) and the Copeland Act (prohibiting employers from defeating the standards through kickbacks) are made applicable.

SECTION 22. ANNUAL REPORT

This section requires the Administrator to submit a detailed and comprehensive semiannual report to the Congress, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1962. The report shall show, among other things, (1) the number of unemployed persons in redevelopment areas; (2) the loans outstanding under the act, the expenditures through grants and other forms of assistance, and the administrative expenses incurred; (3) the number of applications pending and the assistance requested therein; (4) the number of enterprises which have commenced or expanded operations in redevelopment areas by reason of assistance under the act, their asset value, and whether each enterprise is wholly new, has moved from another area, or is a branch of an existing business located elsewhere; (5) the number of jobs created in each area through assistance under the act; (6) the sum obtained by dividing the Federal assistance under the act, including administrative expenses, by the number of jobs created through such assistance; (7) the number and size of Government procurement contracts placed in redevelopment areas; and (8) the amount and duration of employment therefrom. The various procurement agencies, upon the request of the Administrator, are directed to furnish the Administrator such information as may be necessary to enable him to carry out his duties under this section.

SECTION 23. APPROPRIATIONS

This section provides authorization for appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of the act.

SECTION 24. USE OF OTHER FACILITIES

Subsection (a) requires the Administrator to use available services and the advice of other Government agencies on a reimbursable basis, to the extent practicable and with their consent.

(b) Requires Government agencies to exercise their powers, duties, and functions so as to assist in carrying out the objectives of the act.

(c) Funds appropriated for specific purposes may be transferred within the Government.

(d) Authorizes the Administrator to create one supergrade position which he may assign to another agency performing functions he has delegated to that agency.

SECTION 25. DELEGATION OF FUNCTIONS

The Administrator, with the approval of the President, is authorized to delegate appropriate functions to other Government agencies.

SECTION 26. RECORDS AND AUDITS

This section requires borrowers under sections 6 and 7 to keep records of their activities and to allow the Administrator and the Comptroller General access to their records.

SECTION 27. REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATION OF ACT

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee, or a subcommittee thereof, must, after the expiration of 2 years from the enactment of the act, make a full and complete study and investigation of its administration. The committee must report to the Senate, as soon as practicable thereafter, the results of the study and investigation, together with its recommendations.

SECTION 28. DEFINITIONS

This section contains definitions of the terms "State" and "United States." The States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico would be included.

PRINCIPAL AMENDMENTS

ANTIPIRATING PROVISIONS

As introduced, S. 1's "Declaration of purpose" stated that under the provisions of the proposed act—

new employment opportunities should be created by developing and expanding new and existing facilities and resources without substantially reducing employment in other areas of the United States. [Emphasis added.]

Similarly, in section 6(a), "Loans and participations," S. 1, as introduced, stated that Federal financial assistance for industrial or commercial projects—shall not be extended for working capital, or to assist establishments relocating from one area to another when such assistance will result in substantial detriment to the area of original location by increasing unemployment. [Emphasis added.]

During the subcommittee hearings, concern was expressed that these restrictions against the use of Federal funds for so-called industry pirating were not strong enough to be effective, and placed an impossible burden upon the Administrator who would be called upon to determine how many lost jobs in a community constituted "substantial detriment."

Senators Bush, of Connecticut, and Muskie, of Maine, jointly proposed amendments to meet this problem. In the "Declaration of purpose," the language was amended to read that—

new employment opportunities should be created by developing and expanding new and existing facilities and resources rather than merely transferring jobs from one community to another. [Emphasis added.]

Section 6(a) was amended to provide that—

Such (Federal) financial assistance shall not be extended (1) for working capital, or (2) to assist establishments relocating from one area to another.

Additional language was added as follows:

The limitation set forth in clause (2) above shall not be construed to prohibit assistance for the expansion of an existing business operation from its original location or for the establishment of a new branch, affiliate or subsidiary: Provided, That such assistance will not substantially decrease employment in the area of original location.

The committee intends that these amendments be strictly construed, and that the Administrator, through appropriate regulations, guard against attempts to evade their purpose. They are intended to prohibit, without qualifications, Federal financial assistance for "relocating" an existing business enterprise from one area to another. These provisions are not intended to prohibit assistance for expansion of existing businesses to new areas through the establishment of new branches, affiliates or subsidiaries. Prior to granting assistance for such expansion the Administrator must determine that the proposed move will not substantially decrease employment in the area of original location.

ADMINISTRATION

S. 1, as introduced, would have established, within the executive branch of the Government, an Area Redevelopment Administration, under the direction and control of an Administrator appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The principal powers and functions of the act would have been vested in the Administrator. The Administrator would have been chairman of an Area Redevelopment Advisory Board composed of Cabinet members and agency heads and he would have appointed a National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment.

Under S. 1, as reported, an Area Redevelopment Administration would be established in the Department of Commerce. This Administration would be under the direction and control of an Administrator appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The principal powers and functions created by the act would be vested in this Administrator. The Secretary of Commerce would be the chairman of the Area Redevelopment Advisory Policy Board and would appoint the members of the National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment.

TIGHTENING OF CRITERIA

The criteria spelled out in subsections 5(a) and 5(b) of the act were tightened by the committee.

Under section 5(a) of S. 1, as introduced, the Administrator was authorized to designate areas where there has existed substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended period of time, and in addition he was required to include among the designated areas those which complied with certain specified formulas based on rates of unemployment.

In subsection 5(a) of S. 1, as reported, the Administrator's power to designate on the basis of general standards was limited and he was required to act, in the exercise of this general authority, upon the basis of standards generally comparable with those set forth in the specific formulas based on rates of unemployment.

In subsection 5(b), as introduced, the Administrator was authorized to designate rural areas on the basis of proportions of low income families and substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment.

Under S. 1, as reported, the Administrator was required, before making any loans as the result of designations under this subsection, to prescribe by regulation detailed standards for these designations, based upon the same factors.

DESIGNATION OF RURAL AREAS

Subsection 5(b) of S. 1 includes a number of general factors relating to numbers and percentages of low-income families in rural areas, and substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment, on the basis of which he would designate rural areas as redevelopment areas.

This subsection was amended by adding a new provision requiring the Administrator to distribute the projects widely among the States, so far as feasible and proper, in order that there may be actual experience in this program in as many States and areas and under as many different circumstances as possible.

GOVERNMENT CORPORATION CONTROL ACT

A provision was inserted in section 9, requiring the Administrator to prepare annually and submit a budget program in accordance with sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act. This will require the submission, as part of the President's annual budget, of complete information about the Administrator's financial activities.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Under section 11 of S. 1, as introduced, the Administrator was authorized to provide technical assistance to areas designated as redevelopment areas.

This provision was amended so as to permit the Administrator to give technical assistance either to areas designated as redevelopment areas or to other areas which he finds have substantial need for such assistance.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS FOR OCCUPATIONAL RETRAINING

A new subsection (e) was added to section 15 which authorizes appropriations not in excess of $4,500,000 annually to carry out the provisions of section 16 relating to occupational training and retraining.

REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATION OF THE ACT

A new section 27 was inserted in S. 1, requiring the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, or a subcommittee thereof, after the expiration of 2 years after the enactment of the act, to make a full and complete study and investigation of the administration of the act. The committee must then report, at the earliest practicable date, the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW

In compliance with subsection (4) of rule XXIX of the Standing Rules of the Senate, changes in existing law made by the bill, as reported, are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets, new matter is printed in italic, existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman):

HOUSING ACT OF 1949

* * * * *

 TITLE 1—SLUM CLEARANCE AND URBAN RENEWAL

 REDEVELOPMENT AREAS UNDER THE AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

SEC. 113. (a) Whenever the Area Redevelopment Administrator certifies to the Administrator (1) that any county, city, or other municipality (in this section referred to as a "municipality") is situated in an area designated under section 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act as a redevelopment area, and (2) that there is a reasonable probability that with assistance provided under such Act and other undertakings the area will be able to achieve more than temporary improvement in its economy, the Administrator is authorized to provide financial assistance to a local public agency in any such municipality under this title and the provisions of this section.

(b) The Administrator may provide such financial assistance under this section without regard to the requirement or limitations of section 110(c) that the project area be predominantly residential in character or be redeveloped for predominantly residential uses under the urban renewal plan, and without regard to any of the limitations of that section on the undertaking of projects for predominantly nonresidential uses.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a contract for financial assistance under this section may include provisions permitting the disposition of any land in the project area designated under the urban renewal plan for industrial or commercial uses to any public agency or nonprofit corporation for subsequent disposition as promptly as practicable by such public agency or corporation for the redevelopment of the land in accordance with the urban renewal plan: Provided, That any disposition of such land to such public agency or corporation under this section shall be made at its fair value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan: And provided further, That only the purchasers from or lessees of such public agency or corporation, and their assignees, shall be required to assume the obligations relating to the commencement of improvements imposed under section 105(b) hereof.

(d) Following the execution of any contract for financial assistance under this section with respect to any project, the Administrator may exercise the authority vested in him under this section as well as other provisions of this title for the completion of such projects, notwithstanding any determination made after the execution of such contract that the area in which the project is located is no longer a redevelopment area under the Area Redevelopment Act.

(e) The aggregate amount of capital grants which may be contracted for under this title with respect to projects for the redevelopment of urban renewal areas for predominantly nonresidential uses, under the second proviso of the fifth sentence of section 110(c), may be increased by an amount not to exceed 10 per centum of the aggregate amount of new grant contract authority provided after September 23, 1959, whenever the Administrator determines (1) that an increase in such amount is necessary in order to provide financial assistance under this section, and (2) that such assistance is not otherwise available because of the limitation contained in such proviso.

URBAN PLANNING

SEC. 701. (a) In order to assist State and local governments in solving planning problems resulting from increasing concentration of population in metropolitan and other urban areas, including smaller communities, to facilitate comprehensive planning for urban development by State and local governments on a continuing basis, and to encourage State and local governments to establish and develop planning staffs, the Administrator is authorized to make planning grants to—

(1) State planning agencies, or (in States where no such planning agency exists) to agencies or instrumentalities of State government designated by the Governor of the State and acceptable to the Administrator as capable of carrying out the planning functions contemplated by this section, for the provision of planning assistance to (A) cities, other municipalities, and counties having a population of less than 50,000 according to the latest decennial census, (B) any group of adjacent communities, either incorporated or unincorporated, having a total population of less than 50,000 according to the latest decennial census and having common or related urban planning problems resulting from rapid urbanization, and (C) cities, other municipalities, and counties referred to in paragraph (3) of this subsection and areas referred to in paragraph (4) of this subsection;

(2) official State, metropolitan, and regional planning agencies empowered under State or local laws or interstate compact to perform metropolitan or regional planning;

(3) cities, other municipalities, and counties which (A) are situated in areas designated by the Area Redevelopment Administrator under section 5(a) of the Area Redevelopment Act as redevelopment areas or (B) have suffered substantial damage as a result of a catastrophe which the President, pursuant to section 2(a) of "An Act to authorize Federal assistance to States and local governments in major disasters, and for other purposes" has determined to be a major disaster;

(4) to official governmental planning agencies for areas where rapid urbanization has resulted or is expected to result from the establishment or rapid and substantial expansion of a Federal installation; and

(5) State planning agencies for State and interstate comprehensive planning (as defined in subsection (d)) and for research and coordination activity related thereto.

Planning assisted under this section shall, to the maximum extent feasible, cover entire urban areas having common or related urban development problems.

(b) A grant made under this section shall not exceed 50 per centum of the estimated cost of the work for which the grant is made: Provided,

That a grant may be made under clause (A) of paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of this section for not more than 75 per centum of such estimated cost. All grants made under this section shall be subject to terms and conditions prescribed by the Administrator. No portion of any grant made under this section shall be used for the preparation of plans for specific public works. The Administrator is authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to make advances or progress payments on account of any planning grant made under this section. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated not exceeding $20,000,000 to carry out the purposes of this section, and any amounts so appropriated shall remain available until expended.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF MR. ROBERTSON

I oppose S. 1. It provides an incorrect and ineffective approach to one of the economic facts of life. Thus the bill will give false hope to those who look to it for economic salvation. It will use inefficiently whatever Federal resources are expended under it.

Every bill, however inappropriate and ineffective, can be improved to some degree. If a bill like S. 1 is to be passed, it could be strengthened in a number of major respects. The administration of the program should be vested directly in the Secretary of Commerce, not in an essentially new independent agency loosely associated with the Department of Commerce. Annual appropriations rather than back-door Treasury financing should be required for both loans and grants. The duration of the program should be limited by statute to 1 year, after which time the Congress may provide for extension if desirable. But even with these amendments, the bill would be essentially impotent.

S. 1 is an incorrect approach

As our economy expands, some communities inevitably lag behind the national rate of growth. Over a period of time, these localities—the most publicized of which are depressed areas—may seem to be less and less well off. This may be so even though in some cases a large share of the local labor force is employed and even though local standards of living continue to rise.

It is obvious that no matter what our national level of prosperity may be, approximately one-half of all areas will be below average at any one time or over any given period. As long as the below-average communities improve no faster than the Nation grows, they will always appear to be comparatively depressed, no matter how much progress they have made. S. 1, therefore, cannot eliminate a problem which, like the poor, will always be with us in some measure.

According to the proponents of S. 1, the bill is supposed to channel economic activity into depressed areas to a greater degree than would otherwise occur. In other words, growth would be directed away from its natural course to benefit a relatively small number of areas at the expense of all others. Federal direction of economic growth would be implemented primarily through the availability of Federal credit for loans and grants as well as for technical assistance and retraining benefits.

These provisions, in my opinion, set a precedent which could ultimately lead to Federal control over all industrial location or relocation in every area. To the extent that Federal control under this bill channels economic expansion away from its normal path, we will suffer through a reduced rate of overall economic growth and a lower average per capita income for the country as a whole.

The philosophy of the bill is that business is attracted by low cost opportunities for production rather than by high profit opportunities for distribution. This approach seems questionable if not fallacious. Consider the conclusions of a careful study made by the Temporary derives from the fact that businessmen choose to locate or expand in those places which offer the best profit opportunities rather than the lowest costs. They will pay an annual rent of up to $9 per square foot for office space in a choice Manhattan location when space in other cities can be obtained for much less, will accept corporate and personal income taxes higher than elsewhere if after-tax earnings are also higher, will forego the lure of low-wage or nonunion areas in other States if such places are out of convenient reach of customers, suppliers, or an ample pool of trained labor.

And yet S. 1, in an effort to reduce production costs, would try to resolve our difficulties by offering Federal loans and grants for industrial and commercial facilities and for related public facilities to any eligible private or public applicant whether in Detroit, Pittsburgh, Atlantic City, San Juan, or in several hundred other areas. For loans, the bill would provide $300 million in 25- to 40-year unamortized advances, at low or subsidized interest rates, requiring no minimum equity investment.

The wrong time

This is no time to enact the wrong kind of legislation. Unemployment throughout the Nation in February was recently reported by the Secretary of Labor to total 5.7 million persons, a record high since the great depression. If Federal action is taken now to relieve the unemployment situation, it should be directed toward stimulating a higher general level of production and distribution rather than channeled toward alleviating unemployment in a few selected localities.

Only last month, the Secretary of the Treasury estimated that the Federal budget deficit for fiscal 1961 would total approximately $1 billion. Any additional legislation, such as S. 1, which would authorize expenditures to unbalance the budget further should be considered with utmost care. Funds should be applied where their results would be greatest. They should not be expended solely in areas which qualify under S. 1 for aid merely by their inability to keep pace with the national rate of economic growth.

S. 1 would be ineffective

S. 1 incorporates the wrong approach at the wrong time. Furthermore, the amount of aid it holds forth would be ineffective. The bill, for example, would provide $200 million in loans for commercial and industrial facilities. Included in this total are loans for machinery and equipment "in cases of demonstrated need."

The $200 million for commercial and industrial loans would be advanced under S. 1 only over a period of years. This large Federal outlay would nevertheless be equivalent to less than 3 percent of total expenditures for new plant and equipment in all manufacturing industries throughout the nation in a single year. According to the most recent Census of Manufactures for 1958, such expenditures came to $8,980 million. These sums, of course, exclude any outlays for commercial facilities and equipment.

Vague eligibility standards.—Because S. 1 incorporates such vague standards of eligibility for aid, assistance extended under it would often be misdirected. According to the mandatory unemployment tests included in the bill, the Administrator of the proposed legislation would have to designate at least 103 industrialized communities as eligible for assistance. Besides these communities, several hundred other localities—including rural areas—would undoubtedly be eligible although they cannot so far be identified under the loosely worded provisions of the bill.

The standards of eligibility under the bill give no indication of degrees of priority for assistance. S. 1 would provide Federal aid to an area in which 85 percent of the labor force worked 100 percent of the year and 15 percent was unemployed throughout the year. It would apparently give the same priority to an area in which 100 percent of the labor force worked 85 percent of the year and then was unemployed the remainder of the time. Would the latter type of area be equally "depressed"?

Nor is any indication given in S. 1 of how Federal assistance should be allocated among eligible areas. No limit is placed on the amount of loans or grants that could be made to any one project or to any one State. Of the total number of unemployed persons in the 103 eligible industrialized areas, approximately one-third were in the cities of Detroit and Pittsburgh alone. Would Detroit and Pittsburgh then get one-third of all Federal assistance? If Federal aid were spread equally among the 103 eligible areas, each area would receive less than $4 million, regardless of the reasons why its unemployment rate was high and regardless of its potentialities for redevelopment. These cases indicate some of the difficulties inherent in administering the proposed legislation.

Relief only transitory.—While few, if any, areas would receive substantial assistance under S. 1, there is no guarantee that such aid would be translated into lasting employment benefits. The provisions of the bill require that—the project for which financial assistance is sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelopment area wherein such project is, or will be, located.

In view of the fluctuations in employment and unemployment which occur during business cycles—particularly within depressed areas—what permanent alleviation could this bill truly promise?

No immediate relief, however transitory, would be in sight. Many months would pass before aid could be incorporated into commercial or industrial facilities and evidenced by additional employment, if any. In most areas, particularly in rural places, the program would undoubtedly be slow in getting started even after an area was designated by the administrative machinery as eligible for assistance. Detailed plans would have to be perfected and approved through bureaucratic channels. Each application for aid would have to be accompanied by "an overall program for the economic development of the area and a finding by the State, or any agency, instrumentality, or local political subdivision thereof, that the project for which financial assistance is sought is consistent with such program." The Administrator would then have to pass upon the feasibility of each local program. Meanwhile, no new blue collar jobs would be created through S. 1. Many areas originally eligible for assistance might well work themselves out of their difficulties before financial aid was actually received under the proposed legislation.

Undermines local initiative.—S. 1 fails to provide for the most effective use of whatever Federal aid could be extended. No mandatory State or local participation is required for grants for public facilities for industrial or commercial purposes. Nor are any State or local funds called for to help pay for technical assistance. No State or local aid is necessary to finance the retraining subsistence payments, which might better be classified either as outright Federal aid to education or as unemployment relief underwritten entirely at Federal expense. Failure to require greater State or local participation in these programs means that Federal aid, however ineffective, will not go as far as it might if State or local participation were at least more than nominal.

Worse yet, the nominal requirements for State or local financial participation are likely to encourage still greater dependence upon Federal largess. Long ago, Woodrow Wilson, in his book on "Congressional Government," warned us about the unfavorable results derived from increasing State and local government reliance upon the Federal Government. In discussing the spread of Federal control and influence, Mr. Wilson pointed to—its moral effects in rendering State administrations less self-reliant and efficient, less prudent and thrifty, by accustoming them to accepting subsidies for internal improvements from the Federal coffers; to depending upon the national revenues, rather than upon their own energy and enterprise, for means of developing those resources which it should be the special province of State administration to make available and profitable.

Appropriations for 1-year program

The assistance provided by S. 1, whether loans or grants, should be provided through annual appropriations rather than through backdoor Treasury financing. As now worded, the bill authorizes annual appropriations only for grants.

Backdoor financing programs have already grown to unreasonable dimensions. In mid-1960, the U.S. Treasury reported that it held over $33 billion in securities acquired under congressional authorizations for public debt transactions covering a variety of Federal programs. Cumulative expenditures under backdoor Treasury advances exceeded $114 billion. This is no time and this is no program to increase these excessive amounts, particularly in view of the risky character of the loans to be made under the proposed legislation.

A number of witnesses have testified that the programs to be set up under S. 1 would be essentially experimental. This is all the more reason why loan funds should be made available to the Administrator through annual appropriations which provide for compulsory yearly reviews of program results. Such reviews should give an opportunity for better fiscal management by allowing some congressional control over administrative discretion in the timing as well as in the amount of expenditures. This, combined with a 1-year limitation upon the duration of the program, would place the operations of area redevelopment on the same basis as our foreign aid programs as well as many other Federal activities.

Department of Commerce

The area redevelopment program should be set up as an integral part of the Department of Commerce, and the administrative powers should be vested directly in the Secretary of Commerce. The program should not be set up as what is in effect another independent agency, only vaguely associated with the Department of Commerce. Such a proposal is directly contrary to Reorganization Plan No. 5 of 1950, which transferred to the Secretary of Commerce all powers vested in any official within the Department. This transfer, along with a number of others related to different Departments, was in accordance with the recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

Placing the area redevelopment program squarely within the Department of Commerce would integrate it much more closely with activities presently performed by established agencies. Some Federal aid and assistance to distressed areas is now provided by various agencies. These include the Office of Area Redevelopment in the Department of Commerce, the Bureau of Employment Security in the Labor Department, the Community Facilities Administration of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, and the Small Business Administration. In addition, the Department of Agriculture administers a rural development program and the Department of Defense in its procurement policies is said to give special consideration, when feasible, to areas of labor surplus.

We should note that President Kennedy, in a letter addressed to the Vice President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives on January 25, 1961, recommended that "in my judgment, the Department best equipped to supervise and coordinate the program [of area redevelopment] is the Department of Commerce."

Whatever the case, S. 1 holds no real hope of economic redemption for depressed areas. It is an incorrect approach. It is an ineffective approach. The problem will not be solved by the additional Federal credit and Federal bureaucracy which this bill would authorize.

A. WILLIS ROBERTSON.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF MR. CAPEHART

Throughout the consideration of a so-called depressed areas bill we have been looking upon chronic unemployment and temporary unemployment as two vastly different categories of economic problems.

The bill as voted by the committee will solve neither one.

It will not solve chronic unemployment because the bill fails completely to define "chronic unemployment."

It will not solve temporary unemployment because it is far from broad enough to meet that problem.

The bill, as voted out of the committee, is called by some a "distressed areas bill," but the truth is it is a "distressed bill" and is actually as helpless in meeting its intent as the depressed areas are in meeting their economic problems.

Fails to recognize unemployment causes

S. 1 fails entirely to recognize the difference in causes of chronic, or persistent, unemployment from those of temporary unemployment.

The bill, in fact, uses only the simple guideline of national unemployment, regardless of causes, to determine which cases are chronic and which are temporary. As a result the figures actually tell a false story.

In my own State of Indiana, for example, the so-called depressed areas criteria in May of 1959 listed the following areas as qualifying as "depressed areas":

Evansville and Terre Haute in the "major areas" class, and Connersville, Michigan City-Laporte, Muncie, New Castle, Richmond, and Vincennes in the "smaller areas" category.

Just 2 months before that, in March 1959, the "major area" category included South Bend along with Evansville and Terre Haute, and the "smaller area" group did not include Connersville and Richmond.

Then, in August of 1960, South Bend was again omitted as an "eligible area" in the major class and the "smaller area" group was down to only two areas, Connersville and Vincennes.

Now, the latest Department of Labor figures, January 1961, show that under the same criteria that is in this bill only Evansville is left in the "major area" group and none of the smaller areas are classed as eligible for assistance as "depressed areas."

Under such an eligibility determination it would not be possible for any community in the land to know from one month to another whether it would qualify for assistance under this bill.

If it is to remain that the provisions of the bill are so uncertain then the program under this bill is doomed to failure.

If it is intended to reach communities which go on and off the "eligible" list like a light switch, then the Congress must be prepared to furnish, not millions of dollars, but billions of dollars in the next few years to build factories that are not needed and to complete the biggest fraud on the American working man and woman that has ever been perpetrated upon them.

No program should be approved by this Congress which one month promises to help a community and 2 months later says to that community: "you are not eligible."

A "chronic" and "persistent" unemployment situation is created in a community when the principal source of employment has ceased to exist, for one reason or another.

Complicating the actual unemployment situation in such a "chronic or persistent" area is the fact that no reasonable additional employment is in the foreseeable future due to the lack of other existing industry capable of absorbing the unemployment created by the principal user of the labor force.

In nearly every instance where "chronic and persistent" unemployment exists today there was a dominant industry which, in its full operation, used the major portion of the local labor force.

I think of mining areas as a good example, but there are other types of industry which have dominated employment in certain areas.

Amendment defines "chronic" area

In the hope of bringing this bill into the scope of the intention of its authors, I offered an amendment in subcommittee and again in full committee which defined such a "chronic and persistent" area and I intend offering the amendment on the floor of the Senate.

That amendment sets up three factors which would provide the necessary data for determination of a "chronic or depressed" area.

The initial factor is the establishment of a criteria based on the past employment of the area and the cause for its existing depressed economic situation.

This is done by describing industry-dominated areas as those where a large portion of the labor force has, for many years, been employed in one industry. For the larger areas, with 15,000 or more labor force, the dominant employment percentage is fixed at 20 percent of the area's labor force.

In other words, wherever an industry, which might be one or more factories, has employed at least 20 percent of the eligible labor force in the past 10 years, that community would be placed in the category of larger areas of the industry-dominated criteria.

The smaller areas of the industry-dominated category would be those communities having fewer than 15,000 in the labor force and where a given industry employed, in the past 10 years, at least 25 percent of the labor force.

Next, the formula for defining a "chronic or depressed area" in my amendment includes the criteria of unemployment as set forth in the bill approved by the committee.

The third factor to be considered in drawing this word picture of the type of community we all want to help is the determination of possible future employment. This factor is of extreme importance.

The lack of potential future employment of the community is equally as important as the unemployment of the present. The communities we are thinking about in our effort to be helpful are those to which the first two factors of the definition apply, plus the third criteria that no reasonable probability of substantial future employment opportunities exist, except through assistance of this bill.

When you combine the three factors into a single formula you define a community that has suffered hardship through the loss of its principal employment source, is experiencing a higher-than-average rate of unemployment and has no existing industry capable of absorbing that unemployment.

That is a "chronic or depressed" area that needs the help from this bill, but under the provisions now in the bill that community must compete for a portion of the assistance with areas like Pittsburgh, Detroit, and other metropolitan areas which qualify as "chronic or depressed" areas under the criteria which is now in the bill.

It is my prediction Beckley, W. Va., and other communities in the same class and economic condition will get a very small part of the funds and it costs a lot of money to make jobs.

Following is my amendment:

AN AMENDMENT TO DEPRESSED AREA BILL

SEC. 5. (a) (1) The Secretary of Labor shall from time to time, or upon the request of the Administrator, certify to the Administrator the location of any labor market area within the United States which he finds (on the basis of available labor force data or such special studies as he deems necessary) is sufficiently limited in the size of its labor force and in the character of its economy so as to be dependent on a single industry for its employment opportunities. For the purposes of this subsection, a labor market area shall be deemed dependent on a single industry for its employment opportunities if (A) the area has a labor force of less than 15,000 and at least 25 per centum of that labor force has been employed in one industry during any one of the preceding ten calendar years, or (B) the area has a labor force of 15,000 or more and at least 20 per centum of that labor force has been employed in one industry during any one of the preceding ten calendar years.

(2) The Administrator shall designate as a "redevelopment area" any labor market area, with respect to which a certification is made under paragraph (1) of this subsection, which he determines is an area—

(A) where the rate of unemployment, excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal factors, is currently 6 per centum or more and has averaged at least 6 per centum for the qualifying time periods specified in subparagraph (B) below; and

(B) where the annual average rate of unemployment has been at least—

(i) 50 per centum above the national average for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

(ii) 75 per centum above the national average for two of the preceding three calendar years; or

(iii) 100 per centum above the national average for one of the preceding two calendar years; and

(C) where there exists no reasonable probability of substantial improvement in employment opportunities in the foreseeable future without assistance of the type provided in this Act.

There are many other faults I find with the bill, such as the failure to place the administration of the program under the Secretary of the Department of Commerce; the weak and loosely conceived method of providing for retraining; the lack of protection of Government interest in the loans, and the failure of the bill to take into consideration the Government programs already in operation to give assistance to both rural and industrial areas which are stricken with unemployment or underemployment problems.

However, to complain about these and the many other faults in the bill reported to the Senate would be to complain about the method by which the program would become a failure through complete lack of feasibility. The correction of the administration processes will not correct the absence within the bill of proper definition of the areas to be served.

I voted for many amendments in committee in the hope their adoption would at least correct some of the provisions of the bill which I sincerely believe will be more harmful than helpful. Most of those amendments were not accepted, leaving the bill pretty much in the same loosely-knit condition as when it appeared before the committee originally.

I must predict again, as I did at the opening of this statement, that this bill will not help either chronic or temporary unemployment in its present form and is merely going to be the source of disillusionment for a great many people who need and deserve something better from their Government.

HOMER E. CAPEHART.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF MR. BENNETT

I do not deny the existence of serious chronic unemployment in certain areas, but I am opposed to S. 1. I have taken this position after a careful study of the hearings and of other materials relating to this problem. I am convinced that this bill is fundamentally wrong in its approach. Briefly, I am opposed to this bill because—

- (1) Nothing in this bill will create new jobs. It can only hope to influence the decision to locate jobs in a particular community.
- (2) The problem can be met more effectively under existing programs.
- (3) This program, if adopted, will not be successful.
 - A. The economic inducement is too small.
 - B. Other factors are more appealing.
- (4) This program is discriminatory and impractical.
- (5) This bill threatens our free enterprise system.

1. THIS BILL WILL NOT CREATE NEW JOBS

Empty buildings will not create job opportunities. If so, why are there often both unemployed workers and empty buildings existing together in the same depressed communities? For example, the Massachusetts Department of Commerce reports the following manufacturing space available for sale or lease in areas now listed by the Labor Department as depressed:

	Square feet
Fall River.....	2, 124, 035
Lowell.....	2, 066, 483
New Bedford.....	1, 370, 056
North Adams.....	286, 029

Though it is true that empty building space is an evidence of depressed conditions, it cannot by the same token be argued that providing buildings will create jobs. The empty buildings in these Massachusetts communities are not creating jobs.

Proponents of this legislation might argue that it is new buildings businessmen want, not old buildings. Yet even available new buildings may not attract business. For example, in the following surplus labor communities in Kentucky, relatively new buildings are presently available:

	Square feet
Paducah (built in 1957).....	100, 000
Paintsville (built in 1950).....	23, 000

The following Pennsylvania surplus labor markets have available recently constructed shell buildings, built on speculation:

	Square feet		Square feet
Erie.....	20, 000	Wilkes-Barre.....	50, 000
Scranton.....	100, 000	Hazleton.....	60, 000
Altoona.....	50, 000

The essence of the major provision of this bill is to provide buildings for commercial and industrial enterprises at subsidized Federal financing rates. The view that this will automatically create jobs is either naive, dishonest, or both. Job opportunities are created by the ingenuity of men and the natural growth in our economy.

The late Joseph Schumpeter, in recent years one of Harvard's most famous economists, discussed in his famous book, "The Theory of Economic Development," that the underlying cause of broad economic growth in a society and with it job creation, is the ability to bring about innovation and technological change in products, services, and methods of production. Schumpeter took a broad view of our society, but his ideas also have specific application to the concept of job creation.

Regardless of the availability of plant sites, additional people will not be employed unless there are new ideas, new products, new markets and entrepreneurs who are willing to risk their own personal capital and time and reputation, and that of others, in order to capitalize on these new ideas. Only then will men be hired to apply these new developments. The other alternative to new private job creation comes through normal growth in our population and from the opening up of new markets either at home or abroad.

Assuming that the basic essential conditions are present to create new jobs (and this bill will not provide these), the subsequent prerequisite to make this bill work is to encourage entrepreneurs to locate their operations in particular depressed communities. Can the bill accomplish even this task? In my opinion it cannot, and the reasons for this opinion will become clear in the material that follows.

2. THE PROBLEM CAN BE MET MORE EFFECTIVELY UNDER EXISTING PROGRAMS

Local area development already a vigorous activity.—There are currently more than 14,000 State and local, public and private agencies and committees engaged in the business of attracting industry to specific localities. In addition, 111 Federal programs render services to aid local economic development. In the hearings on S. 1, I inserted in the record material developed by the Committee for Economic Development in a publication entitled "Developing the 'Little' Economies," which represented a survey of these area development programs now in operation in the United States. I will not burden the report with all of these, but, as examples, included in the list are the following:

Type of organization	Number of development organizations
Publicly financed programs:
State planning and development agencies.....	54
State-supported industrial financing authorities.....	4
Municipal and county development agencies.....	299
University bureaus of business research, etc., that have worked in economic development.....	212
Privately financed programs:
Railroads conducting area development activities.....	83
Electric and gas utilities conducting area development activities....	330
Banks conducting area development activities.....	144
Local chambers of commerce and boards of trade.....	4, 842
Local industrial development groups.....	867
Community development corporations.....	1, 952
State chambers of commerce.....	35
Area development associations.....	135
Private consulting firms and research organizations that have worked on subnational economic development problems.....	299
All others.....	4, 980
Total, excluding Federal Government.....	14, 125
Federal Government: U.S. Government programs affecting local economic development.....	111

In 1957, a total of $220 million was spent for area development efforts by the above-listed groups. Of this amount, 59 percent, or $130 million went specifically for industrial development. The objective of these expenditures was to attract new industry to individual communities.

The operations represented by these development groups are intended to get at the heart of the problem by attracting job-making business to a locality. These groups understand the strengths and weaknesses of their communities. They know how to capitalize on these strengths and at the same time are best equipped to solve their weaknesses. The Federal Government can certainly not improve, through the provisions of S. 1, on the good work of these development agencies.

Federal programs now operating to aid local industrial development effort.—As already noted, there are presently 111 Federal programs which offer services to aid local development. For example, in the 85th Congress we passed the Small Business Investment Act, which provides for loans based upon private judgment with a minimum of interference from the Small Business Administration. Section 502 of that act authorizes the SBA to make loans to State and local development companies for use in assisting and attracting new business. These loans may be made for plant construction, conversion, or expansion and the construction of commercial establishments. It is true these loans are made to small business concerns throughout the Nation without regard to whether they are located in depressed areas. But by the same token such areas are not denied these funds.

With respect to the loan programs for rural areas, outlined in section 5(b) of S. 1, in the Department of Agriculture (in cooperation with other Government departments and agencies) the rural development program is designed to promote and encourage the economic development of low-income counties. The program operates through the coordinated efforts of the Department of Agriculture and other departments and agencies in the Government. The activities of the program are directed toward providing leadership and guidance to the local communities in solving their own individual problems. The Executive order setting up this program stated that the end in view is "to provide maximum State, local, and private participation and initiative in identifying and meeting local needs."

It is true that this program does not provide for Federal loans. But if lack of money is a problem, there are several existing possible sources for making financial arrangements.

Also I would like to emphasize that each community has a different problem, and a general Federal lending program aimed at a specific type of inducement cannot have equal application in each area. Lack of money is often not the chief difficulty faced by localities. Instead, each community must be analyzed individually for its strengths and weaknesses and needs.

Section 7 of the bill provides for loans for community facilities such as sewer projects, water treatment, and other public needs. There is absolutely no need for this provision of the bill because these exact same types of loans are made by the existing Community Facilities Administration within the HHFA. There is nothing new in the context of this bill which cannot be done by the present community facility program.

The bill does state that such community facilities loans and grants shall be designed to "improve the opportunities in such areas for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities." But there is nothing under the present program which prohibits community facility loans or grants for exactly this same purpose. Even without the enactment of S. 1, every unit mentioned therein, with the exception of a private organization, can obtain a loan for the construction of public facilities under 42 U.S.C. 1492 through the Community Facilities Administration. The proposed program, therefore, would be a direct duplication of a current Government program.

Section 8 of S. 1 provides for grants for financing community facility projects. This may not duplicate the current law which limits grants for urban planning and for advanced planning of public works, rather than for financing actual construction of the project. But again, loans are available under section 7 of S. 1 for this purpose.

Private capital is available.—Based on a brief analysis that I have made, I can discover no inability to raise money by bonding for public facilities in depressed areas; nor has any real shortage of private capital to finance buildings, or to encourage industries to locate in depressed areas, been demonstrated by any testimony at the hearings.

I am listing below a sampling of a few public facility bond issues which have been made within the last 3 months in depressed areas, all of which were below the 4½-percent rate at which Federal money would be made available under the bill for these same programs. There are undoubtedly many other issues which have been made in depressed areas in recent months. This represents only a quick survey:

City	Date	Purpose	Amount	Maturities	Net interest cost
					Percent
Evansville, Ind.	Jan. 24, 1961	Waterwork district....	$2,400,000	13½-year average..	2.9916
New Bedford, Mass.	Nov. 10, 1960	Water bonds.....	160,000	1961-66.....	2.50
Detroit, Mich.	Dec. 6, 1960	General public improvement.	1,280,000	1963-85.....	3.53
Do.....	do.....	Public lighting.....	1,250,000	do.....	3.53
Do.....	do.....	Sewer.....	3,000,000	do.....	3.52
Port Huron, Mich.	Oct. 31, 1960	Various purposes.....	765,000	1961-70.....	2.89
Johnstown, Pa.	Feb. 16, 1961	Municipal authority sewer (revenue).	5,000,000	1963-86.....	3.9748
Uniontown, Pa.	Nov. 1, 1960		100,000	1963-82.....	3.82
Providence, R.I.	Feb. 15, 1961	Redevelopment.....	5,000,000	13½-year average..	3.28
Do.....	do.....	Public works.....	900,000	10½-year average..	3.28
South Charleston, W. Va.	Feb. 16, 1961	Sewer revenue.....	8,000,000	1962-2001.....	3.674

Private capital for industrial or commercial building facilities can be drawn from many sources. The hearings failed to show that any community could not raise necessary capital when it had a real prospect. I am particularly impressed with what can be done with revenue bonds issued to finance industrial or commercial buildings to be leased to industry. At present, 15 States have laws permitting such issues. I have reliable information that insurance companies are anxious to invest in these revenue bonds. These issues can be made at rates comparable to what the Federal Government would charge under this bill, and these issues have the advantage of being tax exempt.

3. THIS PROGRAM, IF ADOPTED, WILL NOT BE SUCCESSFUL

This bill seeks to entice industry to locate in depressed communities by offering Federal financing for buildings at subsidized rates to private companies or development groups. This is its chief inducement: reduced rent. Just how important is this inducement?

A. The economic inducement is too small

The cost of building occupancy for manufacturing concerns averages about 3 percent of the total cost of production. This includes direct rental payments, depreciation on buildings which are owned, taxes on the building, interest payments on debt, and repair and maintenance expenditures. These estimates were developed from corporation income tax returns for fiscal years 1958 and 1959 as summarized by the Treasury Department in its "Statistics of Income."

Since this bill would offer no aid for taxes or routine maintenance and repairs, we can eliminate these items, and consider only the total annual cost of a manufacturing building which, taken alone, averages no more than 2 percent of the total cost of production. From another point of view, we may consider that the benefit of this bill is in the financing of such buildings and not in the actual cost of the building itself. How important is this?

The Federal money provided by the bill would be available at rates currently in effect on long-term Government bonds at the equivalent maturity plus one-half of 1 percent. This would be about 4¾ percent. Private money can be borrowed at least at the rate of 6½ percent. This means that the Federal loans would be at rates one-third less than private rates.

Even if we assume that financing costs over the life of an industrial mortgage equal 100 percent of the original building cost, the inducement is still extremely small. Take the 2-percent figure, which represents the actual building costs and assume this to be the financing cost. Now we divide that by three, to represent a one-third reduction in financing costs, and we arrive at the final inducement under the bill. We find that the inducement is a net reduction in the costs of production of less than 1 percent, or, to be precise, 0.67 percent.

B, Other factors are more appealing

If we now compare the value of this financial inducement with the appeal of other factors which attract industry to an area, the weakness of this small ratio becomes even more obvious.

In the course of the hearings on S. 1, I asked every State development agency, or equivalent group, organized to attract industry in the respective States, to list in the general order of importance the factors which they consider are effective in attracting business to their State.

I received 47 replies. Of the 47, 4 placed the cost of rent or building occupancy in the middle of the list. Only one placed it as high as fourth. The remaining 42 replies placed cost of rent or building occupancy at or near the bottom of the list and added the comment that this was of lesser importance in comparison with other more vital factors.

It is obvious that the order of the list of factors would vary from business to business and from area to area. But, in general, the following are the factors which command the greatest attention, graded roughly according to priorities given to them by the State development agencies:

1. Markets.
2. Trained and adequate labor force.
3. Availability of raw materials.
4. Good transportation facilities and connections.
5. Low cost fuel and power.
6. Adequate water.
7. Favorable business "climate" including both Government regulation and worker attitudes.
8. Fair tax structure.
9. Available buildings or good building sites.
10. Adequate financial sources.

The last item—availability of capital—does not necessarily mean at subsidized rates.

Most of the money provided by the bill would go for "windfall" payments.—Even the staunchest advocates of this bill admit that the interest advantage for plant construction is not going to be the major factor in determining where a plant is located. Therefore, one fact is readily apparent—of the new plants which go into a depressed area, even if the bill does what it is supposed to do, only a few of those plants will go there because of the Federal interest subsidy. The rest would have gone there anyway—because of the advantages the area has for their industry.

What the percentage would be is anybody's guess. I would think that even assuming a most optimistic claim, only 1 out of every 10 could be said to have located because of the subsidy. But the other nine would qualify for the subsidy, even though it did not influence their decision.

Thus, in perhaps 90 percent of all cases, the Federal money would be nothing but a pure windfall to companies which were going to locate in those areas anyway. In these cases, the taxpayer—and the depressed area—get absolutely no return for this money. Thus, the effective amount of money we have to work with is not $200 million of Federal money for the urban and rural industrial and commercial programs but one-tenth of that, or $20 million. The rest is down the drain.

No matter how much financial inducement the Federal Government offers—even if the Federal Government offered not only to aid the financing of a building, but actually to pay the entire cost of a building and offered it to a company free—I am convinced that the other factors which I have listed would still loom more important in the businessman's eye. Only if all the others of the above factors were equal would his choice of location be significantly influenced by a Federal financial subsidy for building rent.

Even the Federal Government tends to be choosy in locating its operations. The question might be raised as to why the Federal Government did not establish a defense installation at Beckley, W. Va., or Altoona, Pa., both distressed areas. Could it be that there are more important factors to influence such locations than the fact that there is an available surplus labor force in these areas?

If the Federal Government gets into this industrial location business, it will find itself in competition with States and localities offering not only reduced rent, but tax advantages and other special inducements. Without going into the merits of such inducements, it would seem that these far outweigh any financing inducement this bill could offer. In fact, the question might simply be raised, Can the Federal Government under this bill do as much to attract industry as State governments, local governments and local chambers of commerce and development agencies are already doing?

To the extent the bill seeks to provide commercial and industrial buildings for rural areas, as outlined in sections 5(b) and 6 of S. 1, the same criticisms apply.

4. THE LEGISLATION IS DISCRIMINATORY AND IMPRACTICAL

Just how far will the Federal money go under this legislation? Is there not a serious discrimination in favor of a few unemployed?

Testimony was given in the hearings that it requires an investment of approximately $15,000, on the average, to support one job in manufacturing. This is an average of all industries. I am aware that many jobs can be supported on a relatively small investment, but there are others that take huge investments and I have taken the average.

If we take just the urban depressed areas, of which there are 20 major areas and 83 minor areas currently qualifying under the bill, and a total unemployment of approximately 648,000, we can see just how small a part this legislation would play in reemploying these people, even if all other arguments were laid aside and we assumed that this bill would put people back to work.

The bill provides $100 million for urban depressed areas. In manufacturing, the actual investment in buildings is 25 percent, on an average, of the total investment. (This is separate and apart from the cost of production, discussed above.) The latter includes labor costs, the cost of raw materials, etc. This bill will aid only in the investment in buildings. Thus, 25 percent of $15,000 required to support one job is a little less than $4,000. If we call it $4,000, and observe that the Federal Government will provide 65 percent of this amount, or $2,600, and divide this into $100 million, this bill would create a job potential of 38,500 workers in the urban depressed areas.

Assuming all other factors were favorable, and assuming that State and local groups would furnish the remaining 35 percent of the $4,000 necessary for investment in buildings, and also assuming that the businessman loan applicant would be willing to take care of the other three-fourths of the investment needs for machinery, equipment, inventories, and miscellaneous investment items, and also would be willing to assume the risks of the business, how much aid would this bill give?

Relating 38,500 workers to approximately 650,000 unemployed in depressed cities, we discover that only 1 out of every 17 unemployed persons in these areas could expect to be benefited by this bill. Thus, we are discriminating against 16 out of every 17 unemployed in these areas.

But this is not all of the discrimination. The approximately 650,000 unemployed in depressed areas represent only 1 out of 8 of our total unemployed in the Nation. Thus, the bill holds out hopes for only 1 out of every 136 unemployed persons in the United States, assuming all other factors were completely favorable. We can now begin to see the false hopes which will result from this bill.

If we were to cast aside all of these practical considerations and attempt to overcome this discrimination argument by spending enough Federal money to put all of the unemployed back to work (again assuming that merely building plant facilities would do the job, and assuming we make no allowance for frictional unemployment) it would cost on the basis of $15,000 per job, a total of $10 billion, of which the Federal Government would be responsible for $6.5 billion to put only the 650,000 workers in urban depressed areas back to work, and a total of $81 billion, for which Federal responsibility would be $53 billion, to put all of our 5.4 million unemployed back to work, assuming that were our ultimate goal. Of course, it is foolish to even think that our Federal budget could stand such a strain.

Besides, when we relate what this bill proposes to do with what private capital is already doing, we can again categorize this approach as being a little "drop in the bucket." For example, in 1958, the last year for which a full survey was taken, manufacturing concerns spent $9 billion in new plants and equipment, and all nonagricultural business spent $29 billion in new plants and equipment. Of this, $6 billion represented new plant investment. If we take the Federal cost of the urban and rural loan programs, totaling $200 million, and relate this to what private business spent in the recession year of 1958 for new plants, we find that private investors spent 30 times as much in 1 recession year for new buildings as this bill proposes to spend over a 2- or 3-year period. If we include private expenditures for machinery and equipment, as well as for buildings, private expenditures during the 1 year, 1958, exceed the proposal of this bill by 145 times.

To examine these private expenditures in the light of the maximum apportionment of funds which certain depressed area States might expect under this bill is to cast further doubts as to the practicality of this approach. If we relate total unemployment in the major and minor urban areas of each State qualifying for aid under this bill to the U.S. total of 648,400 unemployed in all such areas, and distribute funds on that basis, some of the more severely hit States could expect to receive amounts shown in the following tabulation. Also shown are private expenditures for manufacturing plant and equipment and estimated expenditures for all plant and equipment in the recession year 1958:

5. THE BILL THREATENS OUR FREE ENTERPRISE SYSTEM

Finally, assuming that a need could be proven, and assuming this approach were practical, which has not been demonstrated, the approach under this bill would still be undesirable in our free competitive society.

A basic defect of the approach of this bill is that it runs counter to the precepts of what is still essentially a private market mechanism, operating within a dynamic and growing economy.

The strength of the United States to a great degree is attributable to the fluidity of its resources among areas that can use them most efficiently. Unlike the economies of other continents, the economy of the United States has been able to distribute its resources into their most efficient uses without regard to State boundaries or regional areas. This was always been an essential strength of our political system—that it permitted these adjustments. And this bill would threaten to destroy that adjustment mechanism within our system.

Our economy has grown strong because throughout our history the location of industrial establishments has been related to the basic economic considerations involved—good markets, availability of transportation, the labor supply, the accessibility to raw materials in the area, and the existence of a healthy business climate, etc. To substitute an artificially created, Government-sponsored program to induce industries to locate in areas which are intrinsically unsuited for them, and when these areas are unable to compete on purely economic grounds, is to throw a monkey wrench into the economic machine.

Once Congress establishes the principle that the Federal Government should direct industrial expansion into selected areas, there will be powerful political pressures to fulfill the commitment to these areas.

If initial plant-location inducements do not prove adequate to carry out the commitment, greater inducements will undoubtedly be proposed to Congress. And political pressures to provide them may well be irresistible.

The time to stop a surge of Federal intervention in the field of plant location is before the principle of Federal intervention is established—not after it is established.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSIONS

In summary, S. 1 will not do the jobs its authors intended.

(1) Nothing in this bill will create new jobs. It can only hope to influence the decision to locate jobs in a particular community.

(2) The problem can be met more effectively under existing programs.

(3) This program, if adopted, will not be successful because (a) the economic inducement is too small and (b) other factors are more appealing.

(4) This program is discriminatory and impractical.

(5) This bill threatens our free enterprise system.

The problem in each community is individual and different and grows out of a variety of factors which businessmen will consider in deciding whether or not to locate in a specific area. The businessman is interested in the factors I have already listed. Simply to concentrate on the availability of buildings or the financing of those building, or on community facilities (aid for which is available in other programs) is to strain at a gnat. There are many more important factors to consider. A Federal subsidy to finance a new building or a community facility, which can very likely be provided through local efforts, is a very unimportant contribution, and will not solve the problem.

It is more important to look at the specific problems of the industry whose failure created the depressed area. And this would call for an individual analysis which can be very adequately handled by local and State organizations or the Office of Area Development of the Department of Commerce, or in the case of rural areas, by the rural development program sponsored by the Department of Agriculture. These Government groups, and those engaged in local area development, can give better hope of finding tailored solutions to the particular problems that created unemployment in the first place. This, in the final analysis, is what will give rise to new employment opportunities in depressed areas.

S. 1 will not solve our problems, and I urge the Congress to reject this legislation.

WALLACE F. BENNETT.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF MR. BUSH

S. 1, as amended by the Committee on Banking and Currency, has been substantially improved from its original version and from previous bills of this kind which have been considered in former years.

THE "INDUSTRY PIRATING" PROBLEM

A major defect has been eliminated by the inclusion of strong, effective language to meet the problem of "industry pirating." Amendments drafted by myself and the junior Senator from Maine (Mr. Muskie), and accepted unanimously by the committee, flatly prohibit, without qualification, the use of Federal funds to assist the relocation of a business enterprise from one area to another. They permit such assistance to businesses for purposes of expansion, or for the establishment of a new branch plant, affiliate, or subsidiary only if such assistance will not adversely affect employment in the area of original location. The committee report clearly states an intent to have the Bush-Muskie "antipirating" amendments strictly construed, and cautions the Administrator to guard against any attempts at evasion of their purpose.

GOOD FEATURES OF THE BILL

There are good features which I favor in S. 1. The special provisions for "redevelopment areas" in the urban renewal section of the bill are commendable. The sections providing for occupational training and retraining, and for retraining subsistence payments, may ultimately prove to be the most valuable aids made available to those who have the misfortune to live in areas of chronic, high unemployment. The loan funds—$200 million for industrial and commercial projects in "redevelopment areas" designated under section 5 (a) and (b), and $100 million for public facility loans in such areas—have been established with welcome recognition of the general rule that the United States should not lend money at less than it costs the Treasury to borrow it.

S. 1 is in need of further corrective amendments.

RURAL AREAS

Perhaps the most glaring need is in the definition of so-called rural areas eligible for designation as "redevelopment areas" under section 5(b). As introduced, the criteria for designation virtually guaranteed an overconcentration of such areas in one section of the country. The committee adopted an amendment, offered by the junior Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. Proxmire), which was intended to meet this problem, but fails to fully do so. The Proxmire amendment would require the Administrator to "endeavor to distribute the [redevelopment] projects widely among the several States, so far as is feasible and proper * * *." Under this broad language, no Senator can be assured that at least one such project will be located in a depressed rural area of his own State.

The committee has ignored the fact that even in highly industrialized States there may be depressed rural areas in need of the assistance contemplated by this bill. Such areas may be overlooked because their populations are included in "labor market areas," designated by the Department of Labor, which are ineligible for assistance under either section 5(a) or section 5(b). Yet the farm population of such areas may be in real need of assistance.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT—RURAL AREAS

I have prepared amendments intended to remedy these deficiencies. They would provide that at least one project shall be located in every State in which the Governor thereof certifies to the Administrator a need for such project. Additionally, they would require consideration of the extent to which demonstration "rural development" projects have previously been located in various areas of the United States by the Department of Agriculture, in the formulation of standards for designation of "redevelopment areas" under this subsection.

OTHER NEEDED AMENDMENTS

I share the concern expressed by the senior Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) about the wisdom of making "machinery and equipment" eligible for loans under the bill, and the concern of the senior Senator from Utah (Mr. Bennett), because of what appears to be an intent to substitute a foot-in-the-door trade adjustment palliative for the "peril point" and "escape clause" provisions of the Trade Agreements Act. I will support corrective amendments which I understand they intend to propose.

Additionally, I shall support the recommendations of President Kennedy that administration of the proposed program be placed under the Secretary of Commerce, and that it be financed by appropriations rather than by direct borrowings from the Treasury. Why the New Frontiersmen of our committee have so summarily rejected the counsel of their Chief is beyond my comprehension.

CONCLUSION

Finally, I express grave reservations about the ability of the program contemplated in S. 1 to do the things expected of it by the unemployed and others who live in so-called "depressed areas" of the Nation. The widespread publicity given S. 1 and its predecessor bills and extravagant statements made by some of the backers of these bills, have aroused false hopes in these unfortunate people that a miracle is about to come to pass. Once S. 1 is enacted, they believe, prosperity for their areas is ensured, and their troubles are over. A day of disillusionment is bound to come. It will take months to get the program underway. A relatively few among all the areas which expect it will receive assistance under the bill, and what assistance is given may well prove ineffective in many areas.

This is an experimental program, and should be regarded as such. It must be carefully watched by the Congress, and terminated promptly if the experiment fails. For this reason, I favor a limitation of the authority granted under the bill to a 2-year experimental period, and intend to offer such an amendment on the floor.

PRESCOTT BUSH.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF MR. BEALL

Recognizing the need for providing assistance to those areas of chronic and persistent unemployment, I support the general approach of S. 1.

At the same time, I am concerned that although similar legislation has been before the Congress during the past 6 years, there is still significant disagreement among the proponents with respect to key provisions of the bill.

In the interest of obtaining a workable and an effective program, therefore, I reserve the right to support corrective or modifying amendments on the Senate floor.

J. GLENN BEALL.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF MR. JAVITS

The serious economic problems of certain areas of our Nation, in which exist conditions of substantial and chronic unemployment, have for long resulted in wasted human and physical resources. These assets, which our Nation can ill afford to lose at any time, much less in a time of global economic conflict like the present, have convinced both Republican and Democratic administrations and legislators of the need for an area redevelopment program. There is little conflict as to the basic proposition of the need for assistance to these areas to help them in the development of new employment opportunities and in the retraining of workers. Questions have been raised, however, as to specific features of the various proposals, such as their extent, their effectiveness toward meeting the generally desired goal, and their suitability for Federal action. I believe that S. 1, as reported, generally proposes to meet the vital needs for such a Federal program for depressed areas. I do, however, have certain comments on specific provisions.

INDUSTRY PIRATING

One of the major arguments which had been raised against depressed areas legislation is that it would permit the use of Federal funds to assist industry relocating from one area to another, so that tax revenues raised from all our citizens would be used to relocate industry to one area to the detriment of another. As introduced, S. 1 was somewhat ambiguous in this respect, but the adoption of amendments proposed by Senators Bush and Muskie has resulted in language which forbids the use of funds under this bill for the purpose of assisting business to relocate from one area to another.

In addition, language was added to the bill which bars the use of funds for the purpose of establishing new branches or expanding existing business operations when this will adversely affect employment in the area of original location. These provisions, taken together with the strong language in the committee report regarding their implementation, represent, in my opinion, an equitable satisfactory solution to a serious issue.

There remain, however, two aspects of this bill which I believe have not yet been satisfactorily resolved. These are the provisions permitting the use of funds for the purchase of machinery and equipment, and the present provisions for a rural development program under section 5(b).

MACHINERY AND EQUIPMENT

I do not believe that it is appropriate to use funds under this program for the purchase of machinery and equipment, and believe that the present language in section 6 permitting this should be stricken out. As introduced, the bill provided that funds could be used for machinery and equipment "in exceptional case," a qualitative provision, which did express the congressional intention that the loan for machinery or equipment was to be considered as an extraordinary case, and that it was not to be permitted in the majority of applications. This language was amended to provide for such use "in cases of demonstrated need." In my opinion, the use of funds for this purpose, which was questionable even within the stricter limitations of the original language, has now been extended to include almost any case where the loan would have been granted without any language of limitation whatever. For, assistance of any kind under this program inherently requires demonstrated need, and the loan for machinery and equipment is thus placed in the same class as a loan for construction of a specific building, water facility, or other structure permitted under this program.

I believe that loans for machinery and equipment have no proper place in area redevelopment legislation, which is aimed at assisting industry to meet those costs which are connected with locating new employment opportunities in one area rather than another. It represents an expenditure which industry would have to undertake in any case if it is establishing new production facilities as is contemplated in this bill. A lathe or a drill press, a sewing machine or a printing press, costs the same whether the new factory is to be established in an area of substantial labor surplus or in the heart of a prosperous community which would have to attract new residents to supply it with a labor force. On the other hand, the cost of land, buildings, and similar facilities will vary substantially from one location to another, and the assistance which can be offered to the firm which is willing to locate in the area of chronic economic ills enables it to match costs which might be lower in another community which it may be considering also. This type of assistance appears to have more of a character involving unjustified assistance to one firm in competition with others, than of help to a community desiring to make available new opportunities for economic development.

The strongest argument against such assistance, however, is that it may represent a subterfuge for exactly the type of "industry raiding" or "pirating" which the amendments to other portions of the bill are intended to prevent. For a company whose machinery and equipment are becoming obsolete and which feels the need for major capital expenditures in order to meet the competition in the industry may be tempted to move, or at least to establish branch operations away from its home location, when it can get such assistance for replacing machinery, for which its competitors must pay out of current earnings and on competitive financial terms. True, this bill would not permit relocation for the purpose of securing such assistance, but it does not prevent the establishment of expanded facilities or branches which might concentrate on that aspect of the parent company's operations which involve the replacement of capital goods. Nor is this the sole inequity involved in assisting a specific business to secure machinery and equipment under this program. For, the company which under this program is able to secure new machinery through the lower cost financing provided here, is in a position to secure a competitive advantage over its fellow producers all over the Nation. In a time when capital costs represent an ever greater proportion of production expenses, this could represent a major economic advantage which is unrelated to the purposes of the bill.

In view of the repeated statements by witnesses from the executive branch, from States and localities, and from industry and labor, that the limited funds provided for in this bill can only meet a minor portion of the need in any effective way, I believe that they should not be used for these inappropriate purposes, which would restrict even more the numbers of areas which could receive effective assistance under this program. It is my intention, therefore, to move that the provisions permitting the use of funds for machinery and equipment be stricken from the bill.

A major feature of this bill is its provision of assistance in the form of loan funds to areas containing the greatest proportion of low-income farm families. I believe that such assistance, which is presently available on a more limited scale under the rural redevelopment programs of the Department of Agriculture, might well be more appropriate under legislation providing for an expansion of those existing efforts. However, the Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce testified before the committee that it is their intention that there be no duplication of functions under these programs, and indicated that they would be phased into each other to achieve this goal. My own concern with this aspect of the bill is however directed at three additional points, which are not met by this proposal:

1. The greater potential availability of funds to rural than to industrial redevelopment areas;
2. The failure to take living costs into account in basing eligibility upon local farm income criteria; and
3. The possible lack of suitability for redevelopment under this act of certain rural areas.

Under the provisions of section 5(d), any community, be it rural or urban, low income or middle income, is eligible for assistance if it suffers from substantial and persistent labor surplus over specified extended periods of time. This is as true of a mining town in West Virginia and a textile community in New York State as it is of a cotton-growing county in Alabama or a potato-farming village in Maine. Under the provisions of section 9, there is made available $100 million of the funds provided for in this bill for such areas. In addition to these provisions, section 5(b) provides a second group of communities which are eligible for assistance under this bill, irrespective of the specific rates and extent of unemployment set out in 5(a). Eligible under these provisions for an additional $100 million are communities which are found to contain the highest number and percentage of low-income families, using as a measure the proportion of low-income farm families in the area, as contrasted with the number of such low-income farm families in the United States. Of course, rural areas which meet these criteria might well also be eligible under the criteria of section 5(a), and thus have available to them loans from either fund. Yet a high unemployment industrial community containing few low-income farm families would be limited to access to the first fund only.

The designated criteria based on low-income farm families fails to take into account the fact that a lower income family, residing on a farm which may provide a substantial amount of subsistence production for its occupants, and making their additional purchases in a market area with comparatively low-price levels, may be better off economically than the family of an industrial worker, living in a higher cost community, whose sole source of funds for subsistence of himself and his family must come from earnings. I believe that the use of income as the criteria in this section is a serious flaw.

In addition, the rural redevelopment aspects of the bill fail to take into account the potential suitability of an area for development of the kind which this assistance can provide. It may well be that an area is not suitable for industrial production, despite the presence of a great number of underemployed low-income families, which make the community eligible for assistance under this aspect of the bill. It might well be that the area is not even suitable for the development of nonindustrial employment opportunities, such as recreational facilities, or that small commercial establishments, though set up with the assistance of this program could not operate economically in the area over the long run because of high transportation costs for materials and finished products.

I have set out these considerations to indicate why I also wish to concur in the individual views of Senator Bush on this aspect of the bill, and why I plan to support amendments I consider necessary, directed at these problems, in order to make the rural development aspects of the bill more realistic and to place them in fair balance with the industrial redevelopment functions of this program.

² Major areas are areas included in the Bureau of Employment Security's regular area labor market reporting and classification program. This program covers 150 of the country's leading employment centers. Unemployment and labor force data for these areas are generally available bimonthly.

³ Smaller areas: Areas with a labor force of 15,000 or more which are officially classified as "smaller areas of substantial labor surplus." Data for such areas are generally available semiannually. Information for smaller areas which are not classified, or for areas with a labor force of less than 15,000, is not available in Washington on a consistent basis.

NOTE.—Detail may not add to totals due to rounding.

¹ Annual averages are generally based upon data for 2 reporting months. Data for additional months have been used in computing annual averages when available although such data are not shown in table.

² Data used for these areas are insured unemployment rather than total unemployment rates. These data were compared with U.S. average insured unemployment rate in making eligibility determination.

³ Information not available.

NOTE 1.—Annual average data shown only for areas currently classified as "Areas of Substantial Labor Surplus."

NOTE 2.—Data are generally available only for periods in which smaller areas classified as "Areas of Substantial Labor Surplus."

NOTE 3.—Data compiled from semiannual reports prepared under the regular area labor market reporting and classification programs of the Bureau of Employment Security and affiliated State employment security agencies.

NOTE 4.—A smaller area is defined as an area with a labor force of 15,000 or more which is officially classified as a "Smaller Area of Substantial Labor Surplus" by the Bureau of Employment Security. Data for such areas are generally available on a semiannual basis. Information for smaller areas which are not classified or for areas with a labor force of less than 15,000, is not available in Washington on a consistent basis.

APPENDIX C

(Secretary of Agriculture)

CRITERIA FOR THE IDENTIFICATION OF RURAL "REDEVELOPMENT AREAS"

The Department of Agriculture is especially concerned that efforts be made to improve economic conditions and employment in depressed rural areas that do not qualify under section 5(a). These are the areas described under section 5(b) as being "* * *" among the highest in numbers and percentages of low-income families, and in which there exists a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment."

The Department of Agriculture has general information as to where these areas are and has made studies in a number of them that reveal the existence of serious underemployment and unemployment, low incomes and low levels of living.

The seven criteria suggested by the bill permit designation of the most critical areas, and assignment of priorities among them for participation in area redevelopment. The rural development studies of the Department have used some of these criteria to delineate problem areas. We have found that it is helpful to use more than one criterion because some kinds of problems will be revealed by one criterion and some by another. However, the areas delineated by the different criteria tend to overlap so that the most serious problem areas are characterized by the presence of several problems. In selection of rural development areas we do not think it would be necessary to use all of the criteria suggested in the bill in each area.

The first criterion suggested in the bill is the number of low-income families in each area. Using data now available we believe that it would be unwise to establish a hard-and-fast definition of low income. But in our economy, farm families with net money incomes from all sources under $1,000 certainly have very low incomes. Likewise farm families dependent mainly upon farming who have gross farm product sales under $5,000 are clearly low-income families. We now have data showing the number of commercial farmers in each county in the United States who in 1959 had farm product sales of less than $5,000 and the percent that these are of all commercial farms. (This is the second test proposed in the bill.) These figures give only the income from farming, but by the end of 1961 information will be available from the census that will permit us to identify the areas in which a specified number of rural farm families have net incomes from all sources below specified levels. The ratio of the median incomes of farm families to those of nonfarm families also can be shown. We have made and used analyses of these kinds from the 1950 census. With some simple adjustments we can make year-to-year estimates of these income data to keep them up to date.

The relationship of income levels of families in depressed rural areas to general levels of income in the United States is mentioned as a third test. This is a useful criterion to identify the extent of the income gap between farm and nonfarm families in the areas concerned. Information to identify such areas will be available from the 20 percent sample of the 1960 census.

The fourth criterion refers to current and prospective employment opportunities. Studies have been made by the Department of Agriculture in a few low-income farm areas. These indicate a lack of nearby jobs in nearly all areas studied, but there is inadequate information on labor demands by areas to make a nationwide analysis. However, designation of rural areas for immediate action under a redevelopment program can be done now on the basis of the areas in which labor demand information is available through the Department of Labor and elsewhere.

Availability of manpower for supplemental employment is a fifth criterion proposed in the bill.

Much information is currently available in the Department on number of workers, earnings, employment, and characteristic of the labor force in each of the Nation's counties. The availability of workers in these counties for employment will generally be greatly influenced by the size of their present wages or earnings relative to the wages that would be offered by new industries developing in these areas.

The area studies made by the Department of Agriculture furnish evidence that areas of rural low income usually have a supply of manpower available for fuller employment on the farm or at nonfarm jobs. We have an estimate of the national loss in manpower through underemployment in agriculture. We do not have a similar estimate area by area, but in general, the regional information on income levels gives a good indication of the most serious areas of under used manpower.

The extent of outmigration is an important indicator of areas of low economic growth, and limited employment opportunity. This is the sixth criterion proposed. Rates of outmigration of rural farm people by economic areas was used as an important indicator of need for rural development in the nationwide study made by the Department of Agriculture in 1955. Information on rates of outmigration of rural people and of the population was obtained in the census of 1959 and will be available this year.

The seventh criterion, percent of population receiving some kind of public assistance, might be used as an indicator of extent of distress in local areas but such information would need to be analyzed carefully because of the different standards used among States and localities in the operation of welfare programs. While this criterion would be useful, it would not be necessary to the selection of areas.

MARCH 8, 1961

Reported by Mr. DOUGLAS, with an amendment

[Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the part printed in italic]

A BILL

To establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2 tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3 That this Act may be cited as the "Area Redevelopment
4 Act".

~~DECLARATION OF PURPOSE~~

2 SEC. 2: The Congress declares that the maintenance of
3 the national economy at a high level is vital to the best in-
4 terests of the United States; but that some of our communi-
5 ties are suffering substantial and persistent unemployment
6 and underemployment; that such unemployment and under-
7 employment cause hardship to many individuals and their
8 families and detract from the national welfare by wasting
9 vital human resources; that to overcome this problem the
10 Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, should 11 help areas of substantial and persistent unemployment and
12 underemployment to take effective steps in planning and
13 financing their economic redevelopment; that Federal as-
14 sistance to communities, industries, enterprises, and indi-
15 viduals in areas needing redevelopment should enable such
16 areas to achieve lasting improvement and enhance the do-
17 mestic prosperity by the establishment of stable and diver-
18 sified local economies; and that under the provisions of this
19 Act new employment opportunities should be created by 20 developing and expanding new and existing facilities and
21 resources without substantially reducing employment in other
22 areas of the United States.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 3: In order to carry out the purposes of this Act, there is hereby established, within the executive branch of the Government, an Area Redevelopment Administration. Such Administration shall be under the direction and control of an Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be compensated at the same rate as that prescribed by law for an assistant secretary of an executive department.

ADVISORY BOARD

SEC. 4: (a) To advise the Administrator in the performance of functions authorized by this Act, there is authorized to be created an Area Redevelopment Advisory Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), which shall consist of the following members, all ex officio: the Administrator as Chairman; the Secretaries of Agriculture; Commerce; Defense; Health, Education, and Welfare; Interior; Labor; and Treasury; the Administrators of the General Services Administration, Housing and Home Finance Agency; and Small Business Administration; and the Director of the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization.

1 The Chairman may from time to time invite the partici-
2 pation of officials of other agencies of the executive branch
3 interested in the functions herein authorized. Each member
4 of the Board may designate an officer of his agency to act
5 for him as a member of the Board with respect to any matter
6 there considered.

7 (b) The Administrator shall appoint a National Public
8 Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment which shall 9 consist of twenty-five members and shall be composed of 10 representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and the 11 public in general. From the members appointed to such
12 Committee the Administrator shall designate a Chairman.
13 Such Committee, or any duly established subcommittee
14 thereof, shall from time to time make recommendations to 15 the Administrator relative to the carrying out of his duties
16 under this Act. Such Committee shall hold not less than 17 two meetings during each calendar year.

18 (c) The Administrator is authorized from time to time
19 to call together and confer with representatives of the vari-
20 ous parties in interest from any industry, including agricul-
21 ture, which has been a primary source of high levels of 22 unemployment or underemployment in the several areas
23 designated by the Administrator as redevelopment areas.
24 The Administrator may also call upon representatives of
25 interested governmental departments and agencies, together

1 with representatives of transportation and other industries; to
2 participate in any conference convened under authority of
3 this subsection whenever he determines that such participa-
4 tion would contribute to a solution of the problems creating
5 such unemployment or underemployment. The representa-
6 tives at any such conference shall consider with and may
7 recommend to the Administrator plans and programs to
8 further the objectives of this Act with special reference to 9 the industry with respect to which the conference was 10 convened.

11 REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

12 SEC. 5. (a) The Administrator shall designate as "re-
13 development areas" those areas within the United States in 14 which he determines that there has existed substantial and
15 persistent unemployment for an extended period of time.
16 There shall be included among the areas so designated any
17 area—

18 (1) where the rate of unemployment, excluding un-
19 employment due primarily to temporary or seasonal 20 factors, is currently 6 per centum or more and has
21 averaged at least 6 per centum for the qualifying time
22 periods specified in subparagraph (2) below; and

23 (2) where the annual average rate of unemploy-
24 ment has been at least—

1 ~~(A)~~ 50 per centum above the national average
2 for three of the preceding four calendar years; or
3 ~~(B)~~ 75 per centum above the national average
4 for two of the preceding three calendar years; or
5 ~~(C)~~ 100 per centum above the national aver-
6 age for one of the preceding two years.

7 Any area in which a substantial part of the employ-
8 ment is or most recently was in an industry adversely
9 affected by the reduction of trade barriers under the Trade
10 Agreements Extension Act of 1951, as amended, with
11 respect to which the President has reported to the Adminis-
12 trator under subsection ~~(f)~~ of this section, and meeting the 13 standards of unemployment set forth in this section shall 14 be entitled on application to a priority of consideration by 15 the Administrator for designation as a redevelopment area.

16 ~~(b)~~ The Administrator shall also designate as "re-
17 development areas" those areas ~~(including Indian reserva-~~
18 ~~tions)~~ within the United States which do not meet the 19 requirements set forth in subsection ~~(a)~~ but which he
20 determines are among the highest in numbers and percent-
21 ages of low-income families; and in which there exists a
22 condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or
23 underemployment. In making the designations under this
24 subsection, the Administrator shall consider, among other
25 relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families

1 in the various rural areas of the United States; the proportion
2 that such low-income families are to the total farm families of
3 each of such areas; the relationship of the income levels of
4 the families in each such area to the general levels of income
5 in the United States; the current and prospective employ-
6 ment opportunities in each such area; the availability of
7 manpower in each such area for supplemental employment;
8 the extent of migration out of the area; and the proportion
9 of the population of each such area which has been receiving
10 public assistance from the Federal Government and/or from 11 the State or States in which such area is located or from 12 any municipality therein.

13 (c) In making the determinations provided for in this
14 section, the Administrator shall be guided, but not conclu-
15 sively governed, by pertinent studies made, and information
16 and data collected or compiled, by (1) departments, agen-
17 cies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, (2)
18 State and local governments, (3) universities and land-grant
19 colleges, and (4) private organizations.

20 (d) Upon the request of the Administrator, the Secre-
21 tary of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary
22 of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Interior are respec-
23 tively authorized to conduct such special studies, obtain such
24 information, and compile and furnish to the Administrator
25 such data as the Administrator may deem necessary or

1 proper to enable him to make the determinations provided
2 for in this section. The Administrator shall reimburse, out
3 of any funds appropriated to carry out the purposes of this
4 Act, the foregoing officers for any expenditures incurred by
5 them under this section.

6 ~~(e)~~ As used in this Act, the term "redevelopment area"
7 refers to any area within the United States which has been
8 designated by the Administrator as a redevelopment area
9 and may include one or more States, one or more counties,
10 or one or more municipalities, or a part of a county or 11 municipality.

12 ~~(f)~~ In any case in which the President is required ~~(1)~~
13 under the provisions of subsection 4(a) of the Trade Agree-
14 ments Extension Act of 1951 to transmit a message to the 15 Congress identifying an article with respect to which a trade
16 agreement has caused or threatened to cause serious injury to 17 a domestic industry, or ~~(2)~~ under the provisions of subsec-
18 tion 7(c) of such Act to submit a report to the Committee on 19 Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the 20 Committee on Finance of the Senate stating why he has not 21 made such adjustments in the rates of duties, imposed such 22 quotas, or made such other modifications, as are found and
23 reported by the United States Tariff Commission to be neces-
24 sary to prevent or remedy serious injury to a domestic

1 industry, he shall notify the Administrator and shall send
2 him a copy of such message or report.

3 LOANS AND PARTICIPATIONS

4 SEC. 6. (a) The Administrator is authorized to pur-
5 chase evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (including
6 immediate participations therein) to aid in financing any
7 project within a redevelopment area for the purchase or
8 development of land and facilities (including, in exceptional
9 cases, machinery and equipment) for industrial or commer-
10 cial usage, for the construction of new buildings, for rehabili-
11 tation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, or for the altera-
12 tion, conversion, or enlargement of any existing buildings for 13 industrial or commercial use. Such financial assistance shall 14 not be extended for working capital, or to assist establish-
15 ments relocating from one area to another when such assist-
16 ance will result in substantial detriment to the area of original
17 location by increasing unemployment.

18 (b) Financial assistance under this section shall be on 19 such terms and conditions as the Administrator determines,
20 subject, however, to the following restrictions and limita-
21 tions:

22 (1) The total amount of loans and loan participations
23 (including purchased evidences of indebtedness) outstanding

1 at any one time under this section ~~(A)~~ with respect to
2 projects in redevelopment areas designated under section
3 ~~5(a)~~ shall not exceed $100,000,000 ~~(but not to exceed~~
4 ~~$30,000,000 prior to July 1, 1962)~~, and ~~(B)~~ with respect
5 to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section
6 ~~5(b)~~ shall not exceed $100,000,000 ~~(but not to exceed~~
7 ~~$30,000,000 prior to July 1, 1962)~~;

8 ~~(2)~~ Except as provided in subsection ~~(c)~~, such assist-
9 ance shall be extended only to applicants, both private and
10 public ~~(including Indian tribes)~~, which have been approved
11 for such assistance by an agency or instrumentality of the 12 State or political subdivision thereof in which the project to 13 be financed is located, and which agency or instrumentality
14 is directly concerned with problems of economic develop-
15 ment in such State or subdivision;

16 ~~(3)~~ The project for which financial assistance is sought
17 is reasonably calculated to provide more than a temporary
18 alleviation of unemployment or underemployment within the
19 redevelopment area wherein it is, or will be, located;

20 ~~(4)~~ No such assistance shall be extended hereunder
21 unless the financial assistance applied for is not otherwise
22 available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on
23 reasonable terms;

1 ~~(5)~~ No loans shall be made unless it is determined that
2 an immediate participation is not available;

3 ~~(6)~~ No evidences of indebtedness shall be purchased
4 and no loans shall be made unless it is determined that there
5 is a reasonable assurance of repayment;

6 ~~(7)~~ Subject to section ~~12(5)~~ of this Act, no loan,
7 including renewals or extension thereof, may be made
8 hereunder for a period exceeding twenty-five years and no
9 evidences of indebtedness maturing more than twenty-five
10 years from date of purchase may be purchased hereunder:
11 Provided, That the foregoing restrictions on maturities shall 12 not apply to securities or obligations received by the Ad-
13 ministrator as a claimant in bankruptcy or equitable re-
14 organization or as a creditor in other proceedings attendant
15 upon insolvency of the obligor, or if extension or renewal
16 for additional periods, not to exceed, however, a total of ten
17 years, will aid in the orderly liquidation of such loan or of 18 such evidence of indebtedness;

19 ~~(8)~~ Such loans shall bear interest at a rate equal to the 20 rate of interest paid by the Administrator on funds obtained
21 from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in section 9
22 of this Act, plus one-half of 1 per centum per annum: Pro-
23 vided, That an amount equal to one-fourth of 1 per centum

1 per annum of the outstanding principal amount of any loan
2 made under this section shall be allocated from the pay-
3 ments received by the Administrator in the form of interest
4 on such loan to a sinking fund to cover losses on loans under
5 this section;

6 ~~(9)~~ Such assistance shall not exceed 65 per centum of
7 the aggregate cost to the applicant ~~(excluding all other Fed-~~
8 ~~eral aid in connection with the undertaking)~~ of acquiring or 9 developing land and facilities ~~(including, in exceptional cases,~~
10 ~~machinery and equipment)~~; and of constructing, altering,
11 converting, rehabilitating, or enlarging the building or build-
12 ings of the particular project and shall, among others, be on 13 the following conditions:

14 ~~(A)~~ That other funds are available in an amount which,
15 together with the assistance provided hereunder, shall be
16 sufficient to pay such aggregate cost;

17 ~~(B)~~ That not less than 10 per centum of such aggregate
18 cost be supplied by the State or any agency, instrumentality,
19 or political subdivision thereof, or by a community or area
20 organization which is nongovernmental in character, as
21 equity capital or as a loan;

22 ~~(C)~~ That in extending financial assistance under this
23 section with respect to a redevelopment area, the Adminis-
24 trator shall require that not less than 5 per centum of the

1 aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made
2 shall be supplied by nongovernmental sources;

3 ~~(D)~~ That any Federal financial assistance extended
4 under this section in connection with a particular project
5 shall be repayable only after other loans made in connection
6 with such project and in accordance with this section have
7 been repaid in full. If any Federal financial assistance
8 extended under this section is secured, its security shall be
9 subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing other
10 loans made in connection with the same project.

11 ~~(10)~~ No such assistance shall be extended unless there
12 shall be submitted to and approved by the Administrator an
13 overall program for the economic development of the area
14 and a finding by the State, or any agency, instrumentality,
15 or local political subdivision thereof, that the project for 16 which financial assistance is sought is consistent with such 17 program: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall authorize 18 financial assistance for any project prohibited by laws of 19 the State or local political subdivision in which the project
20 would be located.

21 ~~(e)~~ If there is no agency or instrumentality in any
22 State, or political subdivision thereof, qualified to approve
23 applicants for assistance under this section as provided in 24 paragraph ~~(2)~~ of subsection ~~(b)~~, the Administrator shall,

1 upon determining that any area in such State is a redevelop-
2 ment area, appoint a local redevelopment committee (here-
3 inafter referred to as a "local committee") to be composed
4 of not less than seven residents of such area who, as nearly
5 as possible, are representative of labor, commercial, indus-
6 trial, and agricultural groups, and of the residents generally
7 of such area. In appointing any such local committee, the 8 Administrator may include therein members of any existing
9 local redevelopment committees. Financial assistance under
10 this section in connection with projects located in a rede-
11 velopment area, for which a local committee has been ap-
12 pointed under this section, shall be extended only to appli-
13 cants, both private and public (including Indian tribes),
14 which have been approved by such local committee.

15 (d) Of the funds authorized to be raised under section 9
16 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited
17 in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of 18 making loans under this section with respect to projects in 19 redevelopment areas designated under section 5(a), and not
20 more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving
21 fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans
22 under this section with respect to projects in redevelopment
23 areas designated under section 5(b).

LOANS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

SEC. 7. (a) Upon the application of any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public organization or association representing any redevelopment area or part thereof, the Administrator is authorized to make loans to assist in financing the purchase or development of land for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within any redevelopment area, if he finds that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelopment area wherein such project is, or will be, located, and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities;

(2) the funds requested for such project are not otherwise available on reasonable terms;

(3) the amount of the loan plus the amount of other available funds for such projects are adequate to insure the completion thereof;

(4) there is a reasonable expectation of repayment;
and

1 ~~(5)~~ such area has an approved economic develop-
2 ment programs provided in section 6~~(b)~~~~(10)~~ and
3 the project for which financial assistance is sought is
4 consistent with such program.

5 ~~(b)~~ No loan under this section shall be for an amount
6 in excess of 65 per centum of the aggregate cost of the proj-
7 ect for which such loan is made. Subject to section 12~~(5)~~,
8 the maturity date of any such loan shall be not later than 9 forty years after the date such loan is made. Any such loan
10 shall bear interest at a rate equal to the rate of interest paid
11 by the Administrator on funds obtained from the Secretary
12 of the Treasury as provided in section 9 of this Act, plus
13 one-quarter of 1 per centum per annum.

14 ~~(c)~~ In making any loan under this section, the Ad-
15 ministrator shall require that not less than 10 per centum of 16 the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made
17 shall be supplied by the State ~~(including any political sub-~~
18 division thereof) within which such project is to be located
19 as equity capital, or as a loan. In determining the amount
20 of participation required under this subsection with respect
21 to any particular project, the Administrator shall give con-
22 sideration to the financial condition of the State or local
23 government, and to the per capita income of the residents

1 of the redevelopment area, within which such project is to
2 be located.

3 (d) Any loan made under this section in connection
4 with a particular project shall be repayable only after other
5 loans made in connection with such project and in accord-
6 ance with this section have been repaid in full. If any loan
7 made under this section is secured, its security shall be
8 subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing other
9 loans made in connection with the same project.

10 (e) No financial assistance shall be extended under this
11 section with respect to any public facility which would com-
12 pete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering
13 a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regula-
14 tion by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory
15 body determines that in the area to be served by the public
16 facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended
17 there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into 18 consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the
19 existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing 20 facilities or through an expansion which it is prepared to 21 undertake.

22 (f) Of the funds authorized to be raised under section

1 9 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited
2 in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of
3 making loans under this section: Provided, That not more
4 than $30,000,000 shall be deposited in such fund prior to
5 July 1, 1962.

6 GRANTS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

7 SEC. 8. (a) The Administrator may conduct studies of
8 needs in the various redevelopment areas throughout the
9 United States for, and the probable cost of, land acquisition
10 or development for public facility usage, and the construction,
11 rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of use-
12 ful public facilities within such areas, and may receive pro-
13 posals from any State, or political subdivision thereof, In-
14 dian tribe, or private or public organization or association
15 representing any redevelopment area, or part thereof, relat-
16 ing to land acquisition or development for public facility
17 usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expan-
18 sion, or improvement of public facilities within any such area.
19 Any such proposal shall contain plans showing the project
20 proposed to be undertaken, the cost thereof, and the con-
21 tributions proposed to be made to such cost by the entity
22 making the proposal. The Administrator, in consultation
23 with such entity, is authorized to modify all or any part of 24 such proposal.

25 (b) The Administrator, pursuant to a proposal received

1 by him under this section, may make grants to any State, or
 2 political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public
 3 organization or association representing any redevelopment
 4 area, or part thereof, for land acquisition or development for
 5 public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation,
 6 alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities
 7 within a redevelopment area, if he finds that—

8 (1) the project for which financial assistance is
 9 sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation
 10 of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelop-
 11 ment area wherein such project is, or will be, located,
 12 and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area
 13 for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial
 14 or commercial plants or facilities;

15 (2) the entity requesting the grant proposes to
 16 contribute to the cost of the project for which such grant
 17 is requested in proportion to its ability so to contribute;
 18 and

19 (3) the project for which a grant is requested will 20 fulfill a pressing need of the area, or part thereof, in 21 which it is, or will be, located, and there is little proba-
 22 bility that such project can be undertaken without the 23 assistance of a grant under this section.

24 The amount of any grant under this section for any such
 25 project shall not exceed the difference between the funds

1 which can be practicably obtained from other sources (in-
2 cluding a loan under section 7 of this Act) for such project,
3 and the amount which is necessary to insure the completion
4 thereof.

5 (c) The Administrator shall by regulation provide for 6 the supervision of carrying out of projects with respect to 7 which grants are made under this section so as to insure that 8 Federal funds are not wasted or dissipated.

9 (d) No financial assistance shall be extended under 10 this section with respect to any public facility which would 11 compete with an existing privately owned public utility
12 rendering a service to the public at rates or charges subject
13 to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless the State
14 regulatory body determines that in the area to be served
15 by the public facility for which the financial assistance is to 16 be extended there is a need for an increase in such service
17 (taking into consideration reasonably foreseeable future
18 needs) which the existing public utility is not able to meet
19 through its existing facilities or through an expansion which 20 it is prepared to undertake.

21 (e) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated
22 not to exceed $75,000,000 for the purpose of making grants
23 under this section: Provided, That not exceed $10,000,-
24 000 shall be appropriated for such purpose prior to July 1, 25 1962.

FUNDS FOR LOANS

1 SEC. 9. To obtain funds for loans under this Act, the
2 Administrator may, with the approval of the President, issue
3 and have outstanding at any one time notes and obligations
4 for purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury in an amount
5 not to exceed $300,000,000: Provided, That the amount
6 of such notes and obligations which are outstanding prior to
7 July 1, 1962, shall not exceed $90,000,000. Such notes
8 or other obligations shall be in such forms and denomina-
9 tions, have such maturities, and be subject to such terms and
10 conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator with 11 the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall bear
12 interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treas-
13 ury, but such rate shall not be greater than the current 14 average yields on outstanding marketable obligations of 15 the United States of comparable maturities as of the last
16 day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or
17 other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is au-
18 thorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obli-
19 gations issued under this section and for such purpose is 20 authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds
21 from the sale of any securities issued under the Second
22 Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which 23 securities may be issued under such Act are extended to 24 include any purchase of such notes and other obligations.

1 The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of
2 the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this
3 section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the
4 Secretary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations
5 shall be treated in every respect as public debt transactions
6 of the United States.

7 INFORMATION

8 SEC. 10. The Administrator shall aid redevelopment
9 areas by furnishing to interested individuals, communities,
10 industries, and enterprises within such areas any assistance,
11 technical information, market research, or other forms of 12 assistance, information, or advice which are obtainable from 13 the various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of 14 the Federal Government and which would be useful in allevi-
15 ating conditions of excessive unemployment or underemploy-
16 ment within such areas. The Administrator shall furnish the 17 procurement divisions of the various departments, agencies,
18 and other instrumentalities of the Federal Government with
19 a list containing the names and addresses of business firms
20 which are located in redevelopment areas and which are 21 desirous of obtaining Government contracts for the furnish-
22 ing of supplies or services, and designating the supplies and
23 services such firms are engaged in providing.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 11. In carrying out his duties under this Act, the Administrator is authorized to provide technical assistance to areas which he has designated as redevelopment areas under this Act. Such assistance shall include studies evaluating the needs of, and developing potentialities for, economic growth of such areas. Such assistance may be provided by the Administrator through members of his staff or through the employment of private individuals, partnerships, firms, corporations, or suitable institutions, under contracts entered into for such purpose. Appropriations are hereby authorized for the purposes of this section in an amount not to exceed $4,500,000 annually.

POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR

SEC. 12. In performing his duties under this Act, the Administrator is authorized to—

10 the purposes of this Act; and each department, bureau,
11 agency, board, commission, office, establishment, or in-
12 strumentality is authorized to furnish such information,
13 suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Ad-
14 ministrator;

15 (4) under regulations prescribed by him, assign
16 or sell at public or private sale, or otherwise dispose of 17 for cash or credit, in his discretion and upon such terms
18 and conditions and for such consideration as he shall
19 determine to be reasonable, any evidence of debt, con-
20 tract, claim, personal property, or security assigned to
21 or held by him in connection with the payment of loans
22 made under this Act, and collect or compromise all
23 obligations assigned to or held by him in connection
24 with the payment of such loans until such time as such obligations may be referred to the Attorney General for suit or collection;

~~(5)~~ further extend the maturity of or renew any loan made under this Act, beyond the periods stated in such loan or in this Act, for additional periods not to exceed ten years, if such extension or renewal will aid in the orderly liquidation of such loan;

~~(7)~~ pursue to final collection, by way of compromise or other administrative action, prior to reference to the Attorney General, all claims against third parties assigned to him in connection with loans made under this Act. This shall include authority to obtain deficiency judgments or otherwise in the case of mortgages assigned to the Administrator. Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (41 U.S.C. 5), shall not apply to any contract of hazard insurance or

1 to any purchase or contract for services or supplies on
2 account of property obtained by the Administrator as a
3 result of loans made under this Act if the premium there-
4 for or the amount thereof does not exceed $1,000. The
5 power to convey and to execute, in the name of the 6 Administrator, deeds of conveyance, deeds of release,
7 assignments and satisfactions of mortgages, and any
8 other written instrument relating to real or personal
9 property or any interest therein acquired by the Admin-
10 istrator pursuant to the provisions of this Act may be
11 exercised by the Administrator or by any officer or agent
12 appointed by him for that purpose without the execution
13 of any express delegation of power or power of attorney;
14 ~~(8)~~ acquire, in any lawful manner, any property
15 ~~(real, personal, or mixed, tangible or intangible)~~, when-
16 ever deemed necessary or appropriate to the conduct of 17 the activities authorized in sections 6 and 7 of this Act;
18 ~~(9)~~ in addition to any powers, functions, privileges,
19 and immunities otherwise vested in him, take any and
20 all actions, including the procurement of the services of
21 attorneys by contract, determined by him to be neces-
22 sary or desirable in making, servicing, compromising,

4 graphic reporting services, by contract or appointment,
5 and in such cases such service shall be without regard to
6 the civil service and classification laws; and, except in
7 the case of stenographic reporting services by organiza-
8 tions, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised
9 Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5); any individual so employed
10 may be compensated at a rate not in excess of $75 per
11 diem; and, while such individual is away from his home
12 or regular place of business, he may be allowed trans-
13 portation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of 14 subsistence and other expenses; and

15 (11) establish such rules, regulations, and proce-
16 dures as he may deem appropriate in carrying out the 17 provisions of this Act.

18 TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

19 SEC. 13. Whenever the Administrator shall determine
20 that employment conditions within any area previously desig-
21 nated by him as a redevelopment area have changed to such
22 an extent that such area is no longer eligible for such desig-
23 nation under section 5 of this Act, no further assistance shall 24 be granted under this Act with respect to such area and,
25 for the purposes of this Act, such area shall not be considered

1 a redevelopment area: Provided, That nothing contained
 2 herein shall ~~(1)~~ prevent any such area from again being
 3 designated a redevelopment area under section 5 of this Act
 4 if the Administrator determines it to be eligible under such
 5 section, or ~~(2)~~ affect the validity of any contracts or under-
 6 takings with respect to such area which were entered into
 7 pursuant to this Act prior to a determination by the Admin-
 8 istrator that such area no longer qualifies as a redevelop-
 9 ment area. The Administrator shall keep the departments
 10 and agencies of the Federal Government, and interested
 11 State or local agencies, advised at all times of any changes
 12 made hereunder with respect to the designation of any area.

13 URBAN RENEWAL

14 SEC. 14. Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, 15 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new 16 section:

17 "REDEVELOPMENT AREAS UNDER THE AREA

18 REDEVELOPMENT ACT

19 "SEC. 113. (a) When the Area Redevelopment Admin-
 20 istrator certifies to the Administrator ~~(1)~~ that any county,
 21 city, or other municipality (in this section referred to as a
 22 'municipality') is situated in an area designated under sec-
 23 tion 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act as a redevelopment
 24 area, and ~~(2)~~ that there is a reasonable probability that with 25 assistance provided under such Act and other undertakings

1 the area will be able to achieve more than temporary im-
2 provement in its economic development, the Administrator
3 is authorized to provide financial assistance to a local public
4 agency in any such municipality under this title and the pro-
5 visions of this section.

6 “(b) The Administrator may provide such financial
7 assistance under this section without regard to the require-
8 ments or limitations of section 110(c) that the project area
9 be clearly predominantly residential in character or that it
10 be redeveloped for predominantly residential uses; but no
11 such assistance shall be provided in any area if such Admin-
12 istrator determines that it will assist in relocating business
13 operations from one area to another when such assistance
14 will result in substantial detriment to the area of original
15 location by increasing unemployment.

16 “(c) Financial assistance under this section may be
17 provided for any project involving a project area including
18 primarily industrial or commercial structures suitable for 19 rehabilitation under the urban renewal plan for the area.

20 “(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title,
21 a contract for financial assistance under this section may 22 include provisions permitting the disposition of any land in 23 the project area designated under the urban renewal plan

 4 under this section shall be made at not less than its fair
 5 value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan:
 6 And provided further, That the purchasers from or lessees
 7 of such public agency or corporation, and their assignees,
 8 shall be required to assume the obligations imposed under
 9 section 105(b).

10 “(c) Following the execution of any contract for finan-
 11 cial assistance under this section with respect to any project,
 12 the Administrator may exercise the authority vested in him
 13 under this section for the completion of such projects, not-
 14 withstanding any determination made after the execution of 15 such contract that the area in which the project is located
 16 may no longer be a redevelopment area under the Area
 17 Redevelopment Act.”

 16 such States, as agents of the United States, to make weekly
 17 retraining payments to unemployed individuals residing 18 within such redevelopment areas who are not entitled to 19 unemployment compensation (either because their unem-

(b) Departments and agencies of the Federal Government shall exercise their powers, duties, and functions in such manner as will assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act. This Act shall be supplemental to any existing authority, and nothing herein shall be deemed to be restrictive of any existing powers, duties, and functions of any other department or agency of the Federal Government.

SEC. 25. (a) Each recipient of assistance under section 6 or 7 of this Act shall keep such records as the Administrator shall prescribe, including records which fully disclose the amount and the disposition by such recipient of the proceeds of such assistance; the total cost of the project or undertaking in connection with which such assistance is given or used; and the amount and nature of that portion of the cost of the project or undertaking supplied by other sources; and such other records as will facilitate an effective audit.

10 That this Act may be cited as the "Area Redevelopment
11 Act".

12 DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

13 SEC. 2. The Congress declares that the maintenance of 14 the national economy at a high level is vital to the best in-
15 terests of the United States, but that some of our communi-
16 ties are suffering substantial and persistent unemployment
17 and underemployment; that such unemployment and under-
18 employment cause hardship to many individuals and their
19 families and detract from the national welfare by wasting 20 vital human resources; that to overcome this problem the 21 Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, should 22 help areas of substantial and persistent unemployment and
23 underemployment to take effective steps in planning and 24 financing their economic redevelopment; that Federal as-
25 sistance to communities, industries, enterprises, and indi-

1 viduals in areas needing redevelopment should enable such
2 areas to achieve lasting improvement and enhance the do-
3 mestic prosperity by the establishment of stable and diver-
4 sified local economies and improved local living conditions;
5 and that under the provisions of this Act new employment
6 opportunities should be created by developing and expanding
7 new and existing facilities and resources rather than merely 8 transferring jobs from one community to another.

9 AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

10 SEC. 3. In order to carry out the purposes of this Act,
11 there is hereby established in the Department of Commerce
12 an Area Redevelopment Administration. Such Administra-
13 tion shall be under the direction and control of an Administra-
14 tor (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") who 15 shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice
16 and consent of the Senate, and shall be compensated at the 17 same rate as that prescribed by law for an assistant secretary
18 of an executive department.

19 ADVISORY POLICY BOARD

20 SEC. 4. (a) To advise the Administrator in the per-
21 formance of functions authorized by this Act, there is author-
22 ized to be created an Area Redevelopment Advisory Policy
23 Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), which shall 24 consist of the following members, all ex officio: the Secretary
25 of Commerce as Chairman; the Secretaries of Agriculture;

1 Health, Education, and Welfare; Interior; Labor; and 2 Treasury; and the Administrators of the Housing and Home
3 Finance Agency and the Small Business Administration.

4 The Chairman may from time to time invite the partici-
5 pation of officials of other agencies of the executive branch
6 interested in the functions herein authorized. Each member
7 of the Board may designate an officer of his agency to act
8 for him as a member of the Board with respect to any matter
9 there considered.

10 (b) The Secretary of Commerce shall appoint a National 11 Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment which 12 shall consist of twenty-five members and shall be composed of 13 representatives of labor, management, agriculture, State and 14 local governments, and the public in general. From the 15 members appointed to such Committee the Secretary of Com-
16 merce shall designate a Chairman. Such Committee, or any 17 duly established subcommittee thereof, shall from time to time
18 make recommendations to the Secretary relative to the carry-
19 ing out of his duties under this Act. Such Committee shall 20 hold not less than two meetings during each calendar year.

21 (c) The Administrator is authorized from time to time
22 to call together and confer with any persons, including repre-
23 sentatives of labor, management, agriculture, and govern-
24 ment, who can assist in meeting the problems of unemployment

1 or underemployment in the several areas designated by the 2 Administrator as redevelopment areas.

3 REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

4 SEC. 5. (a) The Administrator shall designate as "re-
5 development areas" those areas within the United States in 6 which he determines, upon the basis of standards generally
7 comparable with those set forth in subparagraphs (1) and (2)
8 below, that there has existed substantial and persistent un-
9 employment for an extended period of time. There shall be 10 included among the areas so designated any area—

11 (1) where the rate of unemployment, excluding un-
12 employment due primarily to temporary or seasonal 13 factors, is currently 6 per centum or more and has
14 averaged at least 6 per centum for the qualifying time
15 periods specified in subparagraph (2) below; and

16 (2) where the annual average rate of unemploy-
17 ment has been at least—

18 (A) 50 per centum above the national average
19 for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

20 (B) 75 per centum above the national average
21 for two of the preceding three calendar years, or

22 (C) 100 per centum above the national aver-
23 age for one of the preceding two years.

24 The Secretary of Labor shall find the facts and provide the 25 data to be used by the Administrator in making the determina-

1 tions required by this subsection. Any area in which a
2 substantial part of the employment is or most recently was 3 in an industry adversely affected by the reduction of trade
4 barriers under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as 5 amended, with respect to which the President has reported to 6 the Congress under section 4(a) or 7(c) of the Trade Agree-
7 ments Extension Act of 1951, as amended, and meeting the 8 standards of unemployment set forth in this section shall be 9 entitled on application to special consideration by the Admin-
10 istrator for designation as a redevelopment area.

11 (b) The Administrator shall also designate as "re-
12 development areas" those areas (including Indian reserva-
13 tions) within the United States which do not meet the 14 requirements set forth in subsection (a) but which he
15 determines are among the highest in numbers and percent-
16 ages of low-income families, and in which there exists a
17 condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or 18 underemployment. In making the designations under this
19 subsection and before making any loans as the result of desig-
20 nations under this subsection, the Administrator shall, by 21 regulation, prescribe detailed standards upon which the desig-
22 nations under this subsection shall be based. In the formula-
23 tion of such standards the Administrator shall consider,
24 among other relevant factors, the number of low-income farm
25 families in the various rural areas of the United States, the

1 proportion that such low-income families are to the total farm
2 families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income
3 levels of the families in each such area to the general levels of 4 income in the United States, the current and prospective
5 employment opportunities in each such area, the availability
6 of manpower in each such area for supplemental employment,
7 the extent of migration out of the area, and the proportion
8 of the population of each such area which has been receiving
9 public assistance from the Federal Government and/or from 10 the State or States in which such area is located or from any 11 municipality therein. In making the designations under this 12 subsection, the Administrator shall endeavor to distribute the 13 projects widely among the several States, so far as is feasible
14 and proper, in order that actual experience with this program
15 may be had in as many States and in as many areas and 16 under as many different circumstances as possible. In mak-
17 ing these determinations, the Administrator shall be guided,
18 but not conclusively governed, by pertinent studies made, and 19 information and data collected or compiled, by (1) depart-
20 ments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Govern-
21 ment, (2) State and local governments, (3) universities and 22 land-grant colleges, and (4) private organizations.

23 (c) Upon the request of the Administrator, the Secre-
24 tary of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary
25 of Commerce, the Secretary of the Interior, and such other

1 heads of agencies as may be appropriate, are authorized
2 to conduct such special studies, obtain such information,
3 and compile and furnish to the Administrator such data as 4 the Administrator may deem necessary or proper to enable 5 him to make the determinations provided for in subsection
6 (b) of this section. The Administrator shall reimburse
7 when appropriate, out of any funds appropriated to carry 8 out the purposes of this Act, the foregoing officers for any 9 expenditures incurred by them under this section.

10 (d) As used in this Act, the term "redevelopment area"
11 refers to any area within the United States which has 12 been designated by the Administrator as a redevelopment
13 area and may include one or more States, one or more coun-
14 ties, or one or more municipalities, or a part of a county or 15 municipality.

16 LOANS AND PARTICIPATIONS

17 SEC. 6. (a) The Administrator is authorized to pur-
18 chase evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (including 19 participations therein) to aid in financing any project within 20 a redevelopment area for the purchase or development of 21 land and facilities (including machinery and equipment in 22 cases of demonstrated need) for industrial or commercial
23 usage, including the construction of new buildings, the re-
24 habilitation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, and the 25 alteration, conversion, or enlargement of existing buildings.

1 Such financial assistance shall not be extended (1) for work-
2 ing capital, or (2) to assist establishments relocating from 3 one area to another. The limitation set forth in clause (2)
4 above shall not be construed to prohibit assistance for the ex-
5 pansion of an existing business operation from its original
6 location or for the establishment of a new branch affiliate, or 7 subsidiary: Provided, That such assistance will not sub-
8 stantially decrease employment in the area of original location.

9 (b) Financial assistance under this section shall be on
10 such terms and conditions as the Administrator determines,
11 subject, however, to the following restrictions and limita-
12 tions:

13 (1) The total amount of loans and loan participations
14 (including purchased evidences of indebtedness) outstanding
15 at any one time under this section (A) with respect to 16 projects in redevelopment areas designated under section
17 5(a) shall not exceed $100,000,000 and (B) with respect
18 to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section
19 5(b) shall not exceed $100,000,000;

20 (2) Such assistance shall be extended only to applicants,
21 both private and public (including Indian tribes), which 22 have been approved for such assistance by an agency or 23 instrumentality of the State or political subdivision thereof
24 in which the project to be financed is located, and which

1 agency or instrumentality is directly concerned with problems
2 of economic development in such State or subdivision;

3 (3) The project for which financial assistance is sought
4 is reasonably calculated to provide more than a temporary
5 alleviation of unemployment or underemployment within the
6 redevelopment area wherein it is, or will be, located;

7 (4) No such assistance shall be extended hereunder
8 unless the financial assistance applied for is not otherwise
9 available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on
10 reasonable terms;

11 (5) The Administrator shall not make any loan without 12 a participation unless he determines that the loan cannot be 13 made on a participation basis;

14 (6) No evidences of indebtedness shall be purchased
15 and no loans shall be made unless it is determined that there
16 is a reasonable assurance of repayment;

17 (7) Subject to section 12(5) of this Act, no loan,
18 including renewals or extension thereof, may be made
19 hereunder for a period exceeding twenty-five years and no
20 evidences of indebtedness maturing more than twenty-five
21 years from date of purchase may be purchased hereunder:
22 Provided, That the foregoing restrictions on maturities
23 shall not apply to securities or obligations received by the 24 Administrator as a claimant in bankruptcy or equitable re-

1 organization or as a creditor in other proceedings attendant
2 upon insolvency of the obligor;

3 (8) Such loans shall bear interest at a rate equal to the
4 rate of interest paid by the Administrator on funds obtained
5 from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in section 9
6 of this Act, plus one-half of 1 per centum per annum to 7 cover administrative expenses and to provide for losses on 8 loans under this section;

9 (9) Such assistance shall not exceed 65 per centum of
10 the aggregate cost to the applicant (excluding all other Fed-
11 eral aid in connection with the undertaking) of acquiring or 12 developing land and facilities (including, in cases of demon-13 strated need, machinery and equipment), and of constructing,
14 altering, converting, rehabilitating, or enlarging the building
15 or buildings of the particular project and shall, among others,
16 be on the following conditions:

17 (A) That other funds are available in an amount which,
18 together with the assistance provided hereunder, shall be
19 sufficient to pay such aggregate cost;

20 (B) That not less than 10 per centum of such aggregate
21 cost be supplied by the State or any agency, instrumentality,
22 or political subdivision thereof, or by a community or area
23 organization which is nongovernmental in character, as
24 equity capital or as a loan;

25 (C) That in extending financial assistance under this

1 section with respect to a redevelopment area, the Adminis-
2 trator shall require that not less than 5 per centum of the
3 aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made
4 shall be supplied by nongovernmental sources; and

5 (D) That to the extent the Administrator finds such 6 action necessary to encourage financial participation in a
7 particular project by other lenders and investors any Fed-
8 eral financial assistance extended under this section may 9 be repayable only after other loans made in connection with 10 such project and in accordance with this section have been 11 repaid in full, and the security, if any, for such Federal 12 financial assistance may be subordinate and inferior to the 13 lien or liens securing other loans made in connection with 14 the same project;

15 (10) No such assistance shall be extended unless there
16 shall be submitted to and approved by the Administrator an
17 overall program for the economic development of the area
18 and a finding by the State, or any agency, instrumentality,
19 or local political subdivision thereof, that the project for which 20 financial assistance is sought is consistent with such program:
21 Provided, That nothing in this Act shall authorize financial 22 assistance for any project prohibited by laws of the State
23 or local political subdivision in which the project would be 24 located.

25 (c) Of the funds authorized to be raised under section

1 9 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited
 2 in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of
 3 making loans under this section with respect to projects in 4 redevelopment areas designated under section 5(a), and 5 not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving
 6 fund which shall be used for the purpose of making
 7 loans under this section with respect to projects in redevelopment
 8 areas designated under section 5(b).

11 SEC. 7. (a) Upon the application of any State, or 12 political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or public or 13 private nonprofit organization or association representing 14 any redevelopment area or part thereof, the Administrator
 15 is authorized to make loans to assist in financing the purchase 16 or development of land for public facility usage, and the 17 construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement
 18 of public facilities within any redevelopment area,
 19 if he finds that such facilities will serve primarily industrial 20 or commercial needs and that—

21 (1) the project for which financial assistance is
 22 sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation
 23 of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelopment
 24 area wherein such project is, or will be, located,
 25 and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area

1 for the successful establishment or expansion of indus-
2 trial or commercial plants or facilities;

3 (2) the funds requested for such project are not
4 otherwise available on reasonable terms;

5 (3) the amount of the loan plus the amount of
6 other available funds for such projects are adequate to
7 insure the completion thereof;

8 (4) there is a reasonable expectation of repayment;
9 and

10 (5) such area has an approved economic develop-
11 ment program as provided in section 6(b)(10) and
12 the project for which financial assistance is sought is 13 consistent with such program.

14 (b) No loan under this section shall be for an amount
15 in excess of 65 per centum of the aggregate cost of the proj-
16 ect for which such loan is made. Subject to section 12(5),
17 the maturity date of any such loan shall be not later than 18 forty years after the date such loan is made. Any such 19 loan shall bear interest at a rate equal to the rate of interest
20 paid by the Administrator on funds obtained from the Secre-
21 tary of the Treasury as provided in section 9 of this Act, plus
22 one-quarter of 1 per centum per annum.

23 (c) In making any loan under this section, the Ad-
24 ministrator shall require that not less than 10 per centum of 25 the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made

1 shall be supplied by the State (including any political sub-
2 division thereof) within which such project is to be located
3 as equity capital, or as a loan. In determining the amount
4 of participation required under this subsection with respect
5 to any particular project, the Administrator shall give con-
6 sideration to the financial condition of the State or local
7 government, and to the per capita income of the residents
8 of the redevelopment area, within which such project is to 9 be located.

10 (d) To the extent the Administrator finds such action
11 necessary to encourage financial participation in a particular 12 project by other lenders and investors, any Federal financial 13 assistance extended under this section may be repayable only 14 after other loans made in connection with such project and in 15 accordance with this section have been repaid in full, and the 16 security, if any, for such Federal financial assistance may be 17 subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing other
18 loans made in connection with the same project.

19 (e) No financial assistance shall be extended under this
20 section with respect to any public facility which would com-
21 pete with an existing privately owned public utility render-
22 ing a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regu-
23 lation by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory
24 body determines that in the area to be served by the public
25 facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended

1 there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into
2 consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the
3 existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing
4 facilities or through an expansion which it agrees to under-
5 take.

6 (f) Of the funds authorized to be raised under section
7 9 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited
8 in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of 9 making loans under this section.

10 PUBLIC FACILITY GRANTS FOR INDUSTRIAL OR COMMER-
11 CIAL PURPOSES

12 SEC. 8. (a) The Administrator may conduct studies of 13 needs in the various redevelopment areas throughout the
14 United States for, and the probable cost of, land acquisition
15 or development for public facility usage in serving industrial 16 or commercial needs, and the construction, rehabilitation,
17 alteration, expansion, or improvement of useful public
18 facilities to serve such needs within such areas, and 19 may receive proposals from any State, or political sub-
20 division thereof, Indian tribe, or public or private
21 nonprofit organization or association representing any re-
22 development area, or part thereof, relating to land acquisition
23 or development for such public facility usage, and the con-
24 struction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improve-
25 ment of such public facilities within any such area. Any

1 such proposal shall contain plans showing the project pro-
2 posed to be undertaken, the cost thereof, and the contributions
3 proposed to be made to such cost by the entity making the 4 proposal. The Administrator, in consultation with such 5 entity, is authorized to modify all or any part of such 6 proposal.

7 (b) The Administrator, pursuant to a proposal received
8 by him under this section, may make grants to any State, or 9 political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or public or private
10 nonprofit organization or association representing any re-
11 development area, or part thereof, for land acquisition or de-
12 velopment for public facility usage, and the construction, re-
13 habilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public
14 facilities within a redevelopment area, if he finds that such 15 facilities will serve primarily industrial or commercial needs
16 and that—

17 (1) the project for which financial assistance is
18 sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation
19 of unemployment or underemployment in the redevel-
20 opment area wherein such project is, or will be, located,
21 and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area
22 for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial
23 or commercial plants or facilities;

24 (2) the entity requesting the grant proposes to

1 contribute to the cost of the project for which such grant
2 is requested in proportion to its ability so to contribute;

3 (3) the project for which a grant is requested will
4 fulfill a pressing need of the area, or part thereof, in
5 which it is, or will be, located, and there is little proba-
6 bility that such project can be undertaken without the
7 assistance of a grant under this section; and

8 (4) the area for which a project is to be undertaken
9 has an approved economic development program as pro-
10 vided in section 6(b)(10) and such project is consistent
11 with such program.

12 The amount of any grant under this section for any such
13 project shall not exceed the difference between the funds
14 which can be practicably obtained from other sources (in-
15 cluding a loan under section 7 of this Act) for such project,
16 and the amount which is necessary to insure the completion
17 thereof.

18 (c) The Administrator shall by regulation provide for 19 the supervision of projects with respect to which grants are 20 made under this section so as to insure that Federal funds
21 are not wasted or dissipated.

22 (d) No financial assistance shall be extended under
23 this section with respect to any public facility which would
24 compete with an existing privately owned public utility

1 rendering a service to the public at rates or charges subject
2 to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless the State
3 regulatory body determines that in the area to be served
4 by the public facility for which the financial assistance is to
5 be extended there is a need for an increase in such service
6 (taking into consideration reasonably foreseeable future
7 needs) which the existing public utility is not able to meet
8 through its existing facilities or through an expansion which 9 it agrees to undertake.

10 (e) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated
11 not to exceed $75,000,000 for the purpose of making grants
12 under this section.

13 FUNDS FOR LOANS

14 SEC. 9. (a) To obtain funds for loans under this Act, the 15 Administrator may, with the approval of the President, issue
16 and have outstanding at any one time notes and obligations
17 for purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury in an amount
18 not to exceed $300,000,000. Such notes or other obligations
19 shall be in such forms and denominations, have such matur-
20 ities, and be subject to such terms and conditions as may be 21 prescribed by the Administrator with the approval of the 22 Secretary of the Treasury, and shall bear interest at a rate
23 determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but such rate
24 shall not be greater than the current average yields on out-
25 standing marketable obligations of the United States of com-

1 parable maturities as of the last day of the month preceding
2 the issuance of such notes or other obligations. The Secretary
3 of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any 4 notes and other obligations issued under this section and for 5 such purpose is authorized to use as a public debt transaction
6 the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the 7 Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for 8 which securities may be issued under such Act are extended to 9 include any purchase of such notes and other obligations.
10 The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of 11 the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this
12 section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Sec-
13 retary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations shall 14 be treated in every respect as public debt transactions of the 15 United States.

16 (b) In the performance of and with respect to the func-
17 tions, powers, and duties vested in him by sections 6 and 7 of 18 this Act, the Administrator shall—

19 (1) prepare annually and submit a budget program
20 in accordance with the provisions of sections 102, 103,
21 and 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act, as 22 amended; and

23 (2) determine the character of and the necessity for 24 obligations and expenditures and the manner in which 25 they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, subject to pro- visions of law specifically applicable to Government corporations.

SEC. 10. Subject to section 24, the Administrator shall aid redevelopment areas and other areas by furnishing to interested individuals, communities, industries, and enterprises within such areas any assistance, technical information, market research, or other forms of assistance, information, or advice which are obtainable from the various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government and which would be useful in alleviating or preventing conditions of excessive unemployment or underemployment within such areas. The Administrator shall furnish the procurement divisions of the various departments, agencies, and other instrumentalities of the Federal Government with a list containing the names and addresses of business firms which are located in redevelopment areas and which are desirous of obtaining Government contracts for the furnishing of supplies or services, and designating the supplies and services such firms are engaged in providing.

 3 which he finds have substantial need for such assistance.
 4 Such assistance shall include studies evaluating the needs

8 (8) acquire, in any lawful manner, any property

23 TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

24 SEC. 13. Whenever the Administrator shall determine
25 that employment conditions within any area previously desig-

1 nated by him as a redevelopment area have changed to such
 2 an extent that such area is no longer eligible for such desig-

 4 be granted under this Act with respect to such area and,
 5 for the purposes of this Act, such area shall not be considered
 6 a redevelopment area: Provided, That nothing contained
 7 herein shall (1) prevent any such area from again being
 8 designated a redevelopment area under section 5 of this Act
 9 if the Administrator determines it to be eligible under such 10 section, or (2) affect the validity of any contracts or under-
 11 takings with respect to such area which were entered into 12 pursuant to this Act prior to a determination by the Admin-

18 URBAN RENEWAL

19 SEC. 14. Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as 20 amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the 21 following new section:

22 "REDEVELOPMENT AREAS UNDER THE AREA

23 REDEVELOPMENT ACT

24 "SEC. 113. (a) Whenever the Area Redevelopment
 25 Administrator certifies to the Administrator (1) that any 26 county, city, or other municipality (in this section referred

1 to as a 'municipality') is situated in an area designated
2 under section 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act as a re-
3 development area, and (2) that there is a reasonable proba-
4 bility that with assistance provided under such Act and other
5 undertakings the area will be able to achieve more than 6 temporary improvement in its economy, the Administrator is 7 authorized to provide financial assistance to a local public
8 agency in any such municipality under this title and the pro-
9 visions of this section.

10 “(b) Subject to the provisions of subsection (e) of this 11 section, the Administrator may provide such financial 12 assistance under this section without regard to the requirement
13 or limitations of section 110(c) that the project area be 14 predominantly residential in character or be redeveloped for 15 predominantly residential uses under the urban renewal plan,
16 and without regard to any of the limitations of that section
17 on the undertaking of projects for predominantly nonresi-
18 dential uses.

19 “(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title,
20 a contract for financial assistance under this section may 21 include provisions permitting the disposition of any land in
22 the project area designated under the urban renewal plan
23 for industrial or commercial uses to any public agency or
24 nonprofit corporation for subsequent disposition as promptly
25 as practicable by such public agency or corporation for the

1 redevelopment of the land in accordance with the urban re-
2 newal plan: Provided, That any disposition of such land to 3 such public agency or corporation under this section shall be 4 made at its fair value for uses in accordance with the urban
5 renewal plan: And provided further, That only the purchasers
6 from or lessees of such public agency or corporation, and their 7 assignees, shall be required to assume the obligations relating 8 to the commencement of improvements imposed under section
9 105(b) hereof.

10 “(d) Following the execution of any contract for finan-
11 cial assistance under this section with respect to any project,
12 the Administrator may exercise the authority vested in him
13 under this section as well as other provisions of this title for 14 the completion of such projects, notwithstanding any determi-
15 nation made after the execution of such contract that the area
16 in which the project is located is no longer a redevelopment
17 area under the Area Redevelopment Act.

18 “(e) The aggregate amount of capital grants which may 19 be contracted for under this title with respect to projects for 20 the redevelopment of urban renewal areas for predominantly 21 nonresidential uses, under the second proviso of the fifth
22 sentence of section 110(c), may be increased by an amount 23 not to exceed 10 per centum of the aggregate amount of new 24 grant contract authority provided after September 23, 1959,
25 whenever the Administrator determines (1) that an increase

1 in such amount is necessary in order to provide financial
 2 assistance under this section, and (2) that such assistance
 3 is not otherwise available because of the limitation contained
 4 in such proviso.”

5 URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

6 SEC. 15. (a) Paragraph (3) of section 701(a) of the 7 Housing Act of 1954 is amended by inserting after “counties
 8 which” the following: “(A) are situated in areas designated
 9 by the Area Redevelopment Administrator under section
 10 5(a) of the Area Redevelopment Act as redevelopment areas
 11 or (B)”.

12 (b) Section 701(b) of such Act is amended by adding 13 before the period at the end of the first sentence a colon and 14 the following: “Provided, That a grant may be made under 15 clause (A) of paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of this sec-
 16 tion for not more than 75 per centum of such estimated cost”.

 23 of any redevelopment area.

24 (b) When a redevelopment area has an approved eco-
 25 nomic development program as provided in section 6(b)

1 (10), the Secretary of Labor, in consultation with the Ad-
2 ministrator, shall determine the occupational training or re-
3 training needs of unemployed and underemployed individuals
4 residing in the redevelopment area. The Secretary of Labor
5 shall notify the Secretary of Health, Education, and Wel-
6 fare of the occupational training or retraining requirements
7 of the area, and shall provide for the orderly selection and re-
8 ferral of those unemployed or underemployed individuals
9 residing in the area who can reasonably be expected to obtain
10 employment as a result of the skill they will acquire in the 11 training which is to be made available, and shall make appro-
12 priate provision for such supervision by the appropriate
13 agency as is necessary to the successful operation of any train-
14 ing program established under this section. The Secretary
15 of Labor shall cooperate with the Secretary of Health, Educa-
16 tion, and Welfare and with existing State and local agencies
17 and officials in charge of existing programs relating to voca-
18 tional training and retraining for the purpose of assuring 19 that the facilities and services of such agencies are made fully 20 available to such individuals.

21 (c) Whenever the Secretary of Labor finds that addi-
22 tional facilities or services are needed in the area to meet the 23 occupational training or retraining needs of such individuals,
24 he shall so advise the Secretary of Health, Education, and
25 Welfare. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare

1 shall provide assistance, including financial assistance when

7 consultation with such agency, provide for the same by agree-
8 ment or contract with public or private educational insti-

10 (d) The Secretary of Labor shall arrange to provide

18 SEC. 17. (a) The Secretary of Labor in consultation
19 with the Administrator may, on behalf of the United States,
20 enter into agreements with States in which redevelopment
21 areas are located, under which the Secretary of Labor shall 22 make payments to such States either in advance or by way of 18 unemployment compensation under title XV of the Social 19 Security Act or such Federal or State law, this paragraph 20 shall not apply.

21 (c) Any agreement under this section may contain pro-

25 Social Security Act) as will promote effective administration,

2. HOUSING. Both Houses received the President's message on housing, including rural housing, in which he recommends the establishment of a Department of Housing and Urban Affairs (H. Doc. 102) (pp. 3408-11). The message includes the following statement on rural housing:

"Rural housing problems require special attention.

"Almost a fifth of the occupied houses in the rural areas of America are so dilapidated that they must be replaced. Hundreds of thousands of other rural homes are far below the level of comfort and convenience considered adequate in our Nation. Both new houses and major repairs, remodeling, and modernization of existing houses are needed throughout our farm and small-town communities. For example, only one-third of our farm homes have adequate plumbing. A principal factor contributing to this situation is the lack of adequate credit in rural sections.

"(A) I therefore recommend that the unused balance of farm housing loan authority of the Secretary of Agriculture due to expire June 30, 1961, be extended for an additional 5 years.

"(B) In addition, I have directed the Secretary of Agriculture, in co-operation with the Administrators of the HHFA and the VA to develop procedures to assure adequate credit for farm and other housing in rural communities.

"(C) Finally, because the existing requirement that every farm home improvement loan be supported by a property mortgage has too often resulted in unnecessary hardship, I recommend legislation permitting farm home improvement loans to be secured either by mortgages or by other acceptable forms of security."

17. LANDS. H. R. 5407, by Rep. Harding, to authorize civil actions for the review of administrative determinations as to the use of lands of the United States business community. A key factor in creating a favorable climate for small business has been the Small Business Administration, established in 1953 upon recommendation of President Eisenhower. Among the accomplishments are:

1. SBA loans to nearly 22,000 firms totaling more than $1 billion to date.

2. More than $14 million in SBA loans has gone to State and local development companies to finance shopping centers for small business concerns.

3. Disaster loans by SBA have amounted to nearly $109.5 million.

4. Investment capital of $161 million has been made available through SBA licensing and financial assistance to 168 small business investment companies.

SBA also provides a one-stop service for Government procurement information; has aided in the standardization and simplification of Federal purchasing activities; has induced other Federal agencies to set aside some $5.8 billion in Federal contracts exclusively for small business bidding; has helped the Government save more than $10 million through a special certification program; has distributed business management and technical publications at the rate of 1.7 million copies annually; and has provided management counseling service to the small business community at the rate of 800 cases per month.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The major accomplishments in U.S. foreign policy under the Republican administration can be outlined in two parts as follows:

A. To promote and maintain peace throughout the world, the United States—

1. Formed mutual security arrangements with 40 countries which are not simply military alliances but are a framework of consultative processes that are steadily improving the collaboration of the free nations.

2. Developed NATO into an effective military and political instrument enabling the Atlantic Community to thwart Soviet efforts to dominate Western Europe.

3. Created the Southwest Asia Treaty Organization.

4. Created the Anzus Treaty, which has strengthened the ties between the United States, Australia, and New Zealand.

5. Established the principle of renunciation of force, as at the time of the Suez episode in 1956. At the same time, established the U.S. position against the use of force by other nations as in Lebanon when U.S. Marines relieved the emergency, and in the Far East when we stood by our allies in the face of threatened Communist aggression against the offshore islands.

6. Brought the Korean war to an end.

7. Participated in the Geneva Conference of 1954 which ended the hostilities in Indochina.

8. Concluded the Austrian Peace Treaty which liberated Austria.

9. Stood firm on West Berlin, maintaining its freedom in the face of Communist threats and actions.

10. Has taken the lead in strengthening the United Nations.

B. In the field of worldwide economic growth, the United States took the following actions—

1. Strongly supported the reciprocal trade agreements program.

2. Established the U.S. Development Loan Fund. In 1958-60, a total of $1.65 billion was appropriated to this fund.

3. Under the Eisenhower investment guarantee program, provided insurance against noncommercial risks for many loans in foreign countries. To date, 40 nations have signed agreements under this program.

4. At Presidential request, substantially increased U.S. subscriptions to the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

5. Undertook the establishment of an International Development Association, as an affiliate of the World Bank, to mobilize free world resources to supply financing on flexible terms to the less-developed countries.

6. Undertook reconstruction of the Organization for European Economic Cooperation, with 18 European countries joining with Canada and the United States to permit more effective cooperation in promoting sound economic growth in the free world and to mobilize the resources of its industrial members to help the newly developing lands.

7. Took the lead in establishing a $1 billion Inter-American Bank for economic development loans to Latin America.

8. Joined with the Latin American states in the Act of Bogotá (1960) to assist in large-scale attack on improving living standards in Latin America. The U.S. share has been authorized as $500 million.

9. Initiated the idea of the establishment of an Arab regional development financing program in the Middle East with U.S. support and cooperation as the keystone.

10. Initiated action leading to the International Food for Peace Conference, held in 1959.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The 8 years of the Republican administration were marked by constructive efforts to stabilize the dollar, balance the Federal budget, correct the balance-of-payments deficit, plan for tax revision and simplification, and effectively manage the Federal debt.

The administration achieved budget surpluses in 3 of the past 6 fiscal years. The budget for fiscal 1961 is in balance.

In September 1959, the administration launched a concerted multifacet effort to correct the balance-of-payments problem, thus bolstering sound fiscal and monetary policies already being pursued.

The largest tax cut in U.S. history occurred in 1954, amounting to $7.4 billion per year. Largest item in the tax reduction program was a cut of $3 billion in individual income taxes. Primary emphasis was on reduction of individual income taxes in the lowest and middle income brackets.

Tax revisions supported by the Republican administration eased the burden of working mothers, parents helping to pay their children's ways through school, retired persons, families with heavy medical expenses, farmers in need of new equipment, people with sickness and accident policies, persons with nonrelative dependents, farmers engaged in conservation projects, and many other groups.

Other tax law revisions rearranged the tax burden to make it easier for the economy to move forward. These changes included more liberal depreciation allowances and a partial relief from the double taxation of dividends.

The Technical Amendments Act of 1958 strengthened the revenue system by closing loopholes and foreclosing unintended benefits.

The Small Business Tax Revision Act of 1958 provided substantial relief for small businesses, including more liberal loss deductions, more liberal depreciation allowances, and an option for certain small business corporations to be taxed as partnerships.

Introduction of new forms simplified the tax reporting of millions of individual taxpayers.

The Life Insurance Company Income Tax Act of 1959, incorporated suggestions by the Treasury Department, provided a long-range solution to the problem of developing a permanent and equitable method for taxing life insurance firms.

Debt management policies of the Treasury have backstopped the administration's goal of promoting high employment, increased production and a stable dollar.

Legislation requested by the Treasury Department in the 85th Congress would have removed the interest ceilings on long-term Government securities while providing other reforms in debt management operations. The legislation finally approved by Congress allowed the Treasury to hike the yields on savings bonds, resulting in increased holdings of these securities by the public.

The Treasury Department played a leading role in carrying out President Eisenhower's recommendation that resources of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund be increased to meet changing world conditions.

The Treasury also had a principal part in establishment of an Inter-American Development Bank, with the 21 American Republics as members.

Other Treasury actions have helped Latin American countries to keep their currencies in orderly relation to the dollar.

Through management improvements, the Treasury was able to reduce its civilian personnel from 87,714 in November 1952 to 76,998 in November 1960, an economy of 12 percent. This was accomplished despite an increased workload in most Treasury bureaus—a 50-percent increase in checks issued, a 25-percent hike in persons clearing customs, a gain of more than 100 percent in the issuance of Treasury securities.

During the first full fiscal year of the Republican administration, almost $21 million was saved as a result of immediate economy measures.

Treasury Department management improvement efforts over the past 8 years have resulted in total annual savings of $75 million.

Customs clearance has been greatly speeded up, as "supermarket" inspection counters have been set up to handle an ever-growing traffic volume.

In fiscal 1960, the Internal Revenue Service marked its best year on record, collecting more than $91 billion, handling more than 94 million returns and, through its enforcement processes, adding more than $2 billion to the Treasury coffers.

The efficiency with which Treasury enforcement agencies have carried out their assignments is indicated by the fact that the Secret Service, during the Republican administration, scored 98.4 percent on convictions. During this same period, some $6,780,000 in counterfeit money was confiscated.

Narcotics and customs agents, dispatched to Europe, the Middle East, the Far East, and Latin America, were responsible for developing a new measure of cooperation between the United States and other countries to curb narcotics traffic. As a result of these efforts, world supplies of illicit drugs have been substantially reduced.

The Coast Guard has been raised to peak peacetime efficiency to carry out American policy in international relations and to meet the explosive growth in the number of small boats using navigable waters in the United States.

Backup strength in event of a national emergency has been provided by the strong Coast Guard Reserve that came into being during the Republican administration.

To meet the ever-growing training needs of Treasury law enforcement agencies, the Treasury Law Enforcement School has expanded its curriculum and facilities.

Treasury Department efforts have been responsible in part for the increased effectiveness of Interpol, the world police organization.

ACHIEVEMENTS IN VETERANS' AFFAIRS

In the last 8 years, the Veterans' Administration was drastically reorganized.

A. It resulted in—

1. Employment cut 50 percent in Washington headquarters.

2. Broad career development plan installed.

3. Installation of automatic data processing, resulting in decrease in annual cost of servicing insurance policies from $5.67 in fiscal 1953 to $3.88 in fiscal 1960; with a decrease in the number of persons employed from 10,300 in fiscal 1953 to 3,800 in fiscal 1960.

4. Hospital administration improved with work standards established.

5. Correspondence humanized.

B. Medical program:

1. In 1959, the President approved authorized capacity of 125,000 hospital beds for the VA, the first time the Administrator was given freedom to manage and direct the hospital bed program based on veterans' needs.

2. In the past 8 years, bed capacity increased 14 percent from 105,000 to about 120,000. Number of veterans hospitalized in any 1 day in VA hospitals increased about 16 percent.

3. Thirteen new VA hospitals opened between fiscal 1954 and fiscal 1960.

4. A 12-year $900 million program developed and approved to modernize the VA hospital system.

5. Racial segregation ended.

6. Medical research expanded and increased from $5,106,000 in 1953 to over $18 million in 1960.

7. Tuberculosis patients are now admitted immediately, in contrast to 1953 when the number waiting for admittance was over 2,600.

8. Large-scale cooperative studies were made, and application of new drugs in mental illness resulted in steady rise in turnover rate of psychiatric patients, with the VA able to admit to its hospitals more than 41,000 psychiatric patients.

9. Some 81 orthopedic and prosthetic appliance clinic teams have been established in selected field stations with the result that thousands of amputee veteran problem cases have been solved.

10. Old soldiers homes no longer are just custodial, but a new program, called the restoration and rehabilitation center, is being developed as a link between hospital and community in order to restore the soldier to his home after a period of training. A pilot plant is planned for 1961.

C. New pension law:

1. First major revision in pension law since 1933 was made, with new modernized system of graduated scale of payments giving the greatest aid to those in greatest need.

2. Widows of World War II and Korean war veterans were made eligible for pensions on same basis as widows of veterans of World War I.

D. Compensation payments:

1. Payments increased by 30 percent for those with 100-percent disability, and 16 percent for those with 50 percent disability.

2. Widows of men dying in service, or as a result of wounds and diseases suffered in service, received 16-percent increases in payments.

E. Employment of the physically handicapped:

1. VA specialists published studies on occupations of epileptic veterans, blinded and paraplegic veterans. Studies resulted in employment of the handicapped by Government agencies, colleges, and foreign nations.

2. In fiscal 1960 VA employed 1,249 disabled veterans, more than 28 percent of all such disabled people employed by the Government during that year.

F. The problems of the aging veteran:

1. In 1958 a division was established in VA for medical research in aging which is coordinating with those of other Federal agencies and local governments through participation in the White House Conference on Aging.

G. Veterans housing loans:

1. During the last 8 years, the VA, through its loan-guarantee program, underwrote 2,740,000 loans to veterans.

H. Education and training:

1. Approximately 2,780,000 veterans have received training since 1953; 99,000 more have required vocational training because of disabilities; more than 217,000 received training in engineering; 77,000 have been trained in medicine and related fields; some 52,000 were trained in physical and natural sciences; more than 860,000 have been trained in a skilled trade.

2. The 1956 legislation enacted to provide educational assistance to orphans of war veterans resulted in a total of 19,000 taking advantage of the act.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, when he is prepared to offer the resolution, it will receive speedy consideration.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, is morning business concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business?

AREA REDEVELOPMENT

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the March 2, 1961, issue of the Reporter magazine contained a useful and perceptive analysis of the need for the area redevelopment legislation which we will consider this afternoon. It was written by Mr. Sar A. Levitan, specialist in labor economics and relations and industrial development in the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress. I think Mr. Levitan's fine article will be helpful to us in our deliberations on S. 1, the area redevelopment bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POVERTY IN AMERICA: WHAT WILL CONGRESS DO?

By Sar A. Levitan

A school superintendent from West Virginia testified recently before a congressional committee that children in his district often come to school without breakfast because there is no food at home. The only full meal that they have is the hot lunch provided by the schools, and the children even save part of their lunch to share with members of their family. An eastern Kentucky Congressman told of hundreds of children in his district failing to attend school because they lack adequate clothing and shoes.

The presidential election campaign provided our national leaders with ample opportunity to go out and as Lyndon Johnson put it, "taste, smell, and hear" the misery that haunts dozens of communities. This has prepared the way for action. President Kennedy is committed to giving depressed-area legislation the most important domestic priority. Secretary of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg says: "We are conscious that unemployment is not only a statistic * * * it's a human problem affecting the lives of men, women, and children."

WHY DEPRESSED AREAS?

A major factor accounting for depressed conditions in most of the urban communities has been a lack of industrial diversification. Dependence upon one industry can be fatal. Technological changes, reversal in consumer demand, shifts in plant location, and depletion of resources can strip these communities of their job sources almost overnight or else strangle them slowly.

Profound technological changes resulting in greatly increased productivity in coal mining, accompanied by a decline in the Nation's demand for coal, have wrought economic havoc in the bituminous mining areas of Pennsylvania, eastern Kentucky, West Virginia, and southern Illinois. The American homeowner's switch from the coal stoker to the oil or gas furnace has slashed demand for anthracite and left miners idle in Scranton, the Nation's anthracite center. Some 150 miles to the west, in Altoona, where the production and maintenance of steam locomotives was a major source of employment, the triumph of the diesel engine—now so complete that last year the railroads consumed less than 2 million tons of coal (as against 132 million tons in 1944)—has created a gaping employment hole in the city. The decline in coal consumption by the railroads meant a loss of some 50,000 jobs for bituminous coal miners at their present rates of production.

Examples like these can be multiplied at will. In hundreds of communities in the United States, only one or two companies provide more than half of the manufacturing jobs. This is not to say that every one of them faces high unemployment. Many of the companies can easily adjust production to changes in demand for a given product or commodity. However, these areas are prime candidates for distress even when the economy as a whole is making out well.

Let us take the experience of Sanford, Maine, as an example of a community's depending upon one employer for a large percentage of its total employment. A mill producing woolen goods was its economic base. It closed in 1954. Since then more than one out of every eight workers in the city has remained unemployed. Efforts by business, labor, and civic leaders to attract new industry have been as unceasing as they have been unsuccessful.

THE LIMITS OF SELF-HELP

From Sanford, Maine, to Detroit, Mich.; from a one-mill textile town to a major industrial complex, the same factors are at work. Automation and dispersal of production has left a 10th of Detroit's workers unemployed during the past 3 years. More recently they have shared this experience with the major steel-producing areas in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. Indeed, unless demand for steel revives markedly, the industrial heart of the Nation may become scarred with areas of chronic unemployment.

The official count is kept by the U.S. Department of Labor. It now classifies 20 major cities, equal to one out of every seven major labor-market areas—cities with a population of 50,000 or more—as having substantial and persistent labor surplus. ("Persistent" is the word that carries the sting here.) Some 80 smaller centers are listed too. Altogether about a hundred cities, scattered among almost half the States of the Union and with a total labor force of more than 6 million, are now experiencing continued high unemployment. Average unemployment in these cities exceeds 10 percent; in some it is 20 percent. In the past 3 years the number of these distressed areas has increased steadily.

How about rural distress? On small and marginal farms there always is some work. But such partial employment wastes human resources and is a thin disguise for unemployment. Depletion of resources, uneconomic size of farm units, inability to keep pace with technological advances, inadequate off-farm employment opportunities, and inadequate educational and vocational training—these in the general framework of an overextended farm economy are among the causes of rural distress. The Nation's 300 rural counties of lowest income have a total population of 6 million. Per capita income in these counties stagnates at about one-fourth of the national average.

All in all, more than a tenth of the American people live in chronic labor-surplus areas.

Practically all the distressed industrial communities and many of the low-income rural areas have tried to attract new industry and broaden their economic base. They are motivated by one objective—the creation of new jobs. Experience has shown, however, that once a community becomes prey to chronic unemployment, "Operation Bootstrap" rarely works. Outside help is crucial. For example, in Hazleton, Luzerne County, Pa., a depressed anthracite town, the civic leaders raised $6 million which helped create 3,000 new jobs. Yet one out of every seven workers in Hazleton is still jobless. "Outside assistance which would accelerate the Hazleton program seems warranted," a Commerce Department study, concluded in 1959 in typically guarded bureaucratese.

Theoretically, moving on to greener pastures may seem a solution. In practice, however, it is of limited use. Experience shows that workers, particularly older ones, have strong roots in their communities; distressed or not, they are at home. Migration to new areas is difficult for them, often impractical. Their skills, no longer wanted in their own communities, are equally useless in seeking jobs elsewhere. Workers who do venture forth and find work often are the first victims of a downturn in business. Their precarious hold on the new environment gone, they tend to return home, aggravating anew the unemployment and relief problems in the depressed areas. And of course in the last few years, with unemployment on the rise throughout the country, job opportunities for workers from such areas in more prosperous communities have declined sharply.

Besides, such migration involves a host of problems. The uprooted worker and his family increase pressure on housing, schools, churches, and recreational facilities in the new area, while facilities in the old place, poor as they are, remain under utilized and are often abandoned. Workers willing to pack up and go often find it impossible to sell their homes at all, let alone obtain a fair price. Whatever migration does occur only serves to further darken the horizon for those who stay behind.

THE DOUGLAS BILL

It was Senator PAUL H. DOUGLAS who in 1955 introduced the first bill to aid chronic labor-surplus areas and thus fired the opening shot in what has turned out to be a long and tedious series of legislative engagements. The basic purpose of the legislation has never varied; it is to create jobs in distressed areas. The ingredients are essentially these:

Self-analysis: A community's development organization must have comprehensive knowledge about its current and potential resources, both physical and human. Armed with an inventory of its resources, a community can discuss its advantages with a prospective entrepreneur on a specific and factual basis, and can indicate the kind of industries the local industrial development committee should try to attract. Frequently, communities need guidance and aid in assessing their potential. The Douglas bill would provide such assistance.

Supply of capital: Lack of capital is a major obstacle to the recovery of labor-surplus areas. Testimony presented before the Douglas subcommittee over the past 5 years, filling more than 3,900 closely printed pages, provides ample evidence that traditional lending institutions in depressed areas are less venturesome than their counterparts in expanding communities.

Douglas would have the Federal Government provide prospective employers with part of the needed long-term capital at low interest rates, the balance to be furnished by State and local government sources, and, of course, by the entrepreneur himself.

Public facilities: Distressed areas often lack facilities without which industry simply will not bite (water, power, roads, schools, etc.). A frequent reason is the deteriorated tax base and chronic low income of the citizenry. To improve facilities, the Douglas bill would provide for the creation of a separate fund from which communities could obtain credit or, in extreme cases, grants, depending upon the ability of the community and the State to contribute.

Training: In low-income rural areas, industrial skills have never been developed. In others, the market for given skills has vanished. Douglas's answer is to allocate additional Federal funds to chronic labor-surplus areas for financing wider vocational training and retraining. This would be a new departure only in its scale and direction, for the Federal Government has participated in vocational training programs since the First World War. The shape of specific programs would be determined by the needs of new or potential industries that might locate in the community.

Unemployed workers undergoing training who are not already receiving unemployment-insurance benefits would receive subsistence payments equal to the average unemployment benefits in their States. The payments would be limited to 16 weeks; and until its effectiveness was proved, the program would be attempted on a limited experimental basis only.

These, in brief, are the major components of the Douglas program, a veteran of congressional hearings and votes and of Presidential vetoes. Its proponents find it desirable from a humanitarian point of view and recommend it for sound economic reasons. Economic recession has a snowballing effect; declining activity in one area spreads to other areas. As for the costs of rehabilitating a depressed area, according to Douglas's supporters they would be more than offset by decreasing expenditures for unemployment and relief outlays, and by an increased tax base resulting from improved economic conditions.

THE DEBATE

But there are many voices in opposition to the proposed legislation. Some see in it an extension of the welfare state and undue interference with free-market forces. A more sophisticated economic argument is that aid from Washington would not resolve the complex economic factors that create chronic labor-surplus areas in the first place. On the contrary, a Federal program that encourages people to remain in a community that has lost the economic base to support them will not only fail to help these localities but will compound their social and economic difficulties.

To the assertion that the legislation is merely an extension of the principles of the Employment Act of 1946, which requires the Government to establish an environment conducive to maximum employment and production, opponents retort that requiring Federal expenditures for the establishment of jobs in selected areas is the first step in a program that would require the Federal Government to provide jobs to persons seeking work anywhere.

But the battle has by no means been fought on lofty philosophical grounds alone. More immediate practical factors have played an important role. By its very nature the legislation would extend help only to selected areas. Some Congressmen simply refuse to vote for legislation that may encourage potential employers to locate in areas other than their own. In a period of economic slack and rising unemployment, this may have been a decisive consideration. Certainly, such pressure from back home has been exerted on many a supporter of the Douglas bill.

Other critics have suggested that the Douglas measure would encourage established industry in more prosperous communities to relocate in the areas favored by the legislation, in order to get at the pork barrel. This is the runaway-shop argument. The Douglas bill tackles it by denying assistance to farms that relocate in distressed areas if thereby they substantially reduce employment elsewhere. The opposition replies that under this provision an employer could still, with Federal aid, establish a branch in a distressed area and then transfer his activities to the new community. Perhaps he could. But it is difficult to argue both this point and the ineffectiveness of the whole effort.

That the majority of southern Congressmen have voted against the area redevelopment legislation, although many of their districts would qualify for assistance, is less strange than it may seem at first glance. Their animosity is made up of one party general hostility to Federal welfare legislation and one part shrewd economics. Many of them believe that the combination of low wages and rich natural resources will stimulate expansion of industry in the South without Federal aid. They may have felt, therefore, that Federal legislation to entice industry into distressed areas would not necessarily work in favor of the South in the long run, since industry of its own accord would choose the low-income southern areas for new plants.

WHAT DOES IT COST?

It has been suggested by some proponents of aid to depressed areas that the Douglas program is entirely too skimpy; that the proposed grants for the development of public facilities are totally inadequate for developing roads, assuring industrial water supply, and constructing sewers, and improved public facilities, all of which are essential for the sound economic development of the Appalachian region and other more or less undeveloped areas. It is therefore doubted whether the Douglas program would effectively aid the distressed areas in West Virginia or eastern Kentucky. A more comprehensive program may be needed in such areas.

The extent to which the price tag of the Douglas legislation has been a real or pretended block to its passage is not clear. Certainly there has been a great deal of misinformation and misunderstanding about the true cost. The bill would authorize a total of $389.5 million in loans and grants. Opponents have, however, failed to distinguish between the loans and the grants. Of the total funds required, $300 million would be paid out as loans and only a maximum of $90 million would be made available during the first year after the legislation was passed.

The interest rate charged would be in excess of what the Federal Government pays for borrowed funds; a further charge would be allocated to a sinking fund to make up for defaulted loans. Some 30 years of experience with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (created by President Hoover), housing loans, and loans to small business show that few loans are defaulted.

The annual expenditures that Douglas favors would include $4.5 million for technical assistance and $10 million for subsistence payments to workers and costs of administering the program. In addition, the bill provides $75 million for investments to develop public facilities in the most seriously depressed areas—but this would be a one-shot affair; and only $10 million of this amount could be spent during the first year.

But the initial expenditures have been called misleading. Opposition forces see in the Douglas bill the proverbial camel's nose. To HOWARD W. SMITH, chairman of the House Rules Committee, the Douglas bill is "a pipe dream"; to him it would be utterly unrealistic to expect that the funds sought by DOUGLAS would achieve their purpose. Above all, the opposition fears that once established, the bill would lead to further expenditures, harder to beat down.

This may have been the underlying factor accounting for the adamant position of the Eisenhower administration. In 1955, the President's annual Economic Report viewed adjustment problems of depressed areas as a local matter. A year later, as concern for the fate of these areas mounted, President Eisenhower's economic advisers conceded that "the fact of distressed communities is a matter of national as well as local concern." This concern found expression in an administration-sponsored bill that would have provided for a $50-million loan fund and just $1.5 million for technical assistance. By 1960, before the presidential election, the Eisenhower administration had raised the ante to a $75-million revolving fund for loans and $5 million in annual expenditures for technical assistance and vocational training. Yet it persisted in opposing the "frills" in the Douglas proposal that would make loans and grants for public facilities and provide subsistence payments to persons undergoing training.

Concern expressed by both the presidential candidates and by members of both Senate and House produced a 1960 version of the 1955 bill. In it, the appropriations DOUGLAS had originally proposed were trimmed by more than a third, but the basic approach and programs were left unchanged. The Senate accepted the House bill. But even this bill proved unacceptable to President Eisenhower, and he vetoed it—just as he had a similar bill in 1958. Under his leadership, the minority opposing the bill was large enough to sustain the Presidential veto.

Things have moved fast since November 8. During the campaign, Senator Kennedy omitted no occasion to call for an effective program of aid to depressed areas. There was never any doubt that if elected he would honor that promise.

Senator DOUGLAS was asked to head a special task force to prepare an immediate program. The importance President Kennedy attaches to the depressed areas is obvious; he singled out the formation of the Douglas task force for public announcement. In accepting the appointment, Senator DOUGLAS indicated that he intends to move without delay: "There is a time for study and contemplation, and there is a time for action. I believe strongly that the time for action is now." Three weeks later DOUGLAS had delivered his program to the then President-elect, and when the 87th Congress convened he lost little time in reintroducing the $389.5 million area redevelopment bill he had favored all along. Because of its importance to the Democratic leadership, it was given the coveted number S. 1. Senate hearings were held even before the inauguration. President Kennedy's first Executive order—an order to increase and improve the food rations distributed to some 4 million needy persons—indicates the extent of his concern better than any campaign speech could.

THE FIRST STEP

The last time around, the area redevelopment bill passed the 86th Congress by a narrow margin before it was vetoed. Since then, 25 Democratic Representatives who voted for the bill have lost their seats to Republicans, many of whom will no doubt oppose the bill. But it is unlikely that the conservatives in the 87th Congress will be sufficiently strengthened to block it, particularly in view of the fact that the majority of the enlarged House Rules Committee now favors the bill. To assertions that the proposed legislation is too skimpy, Senator DOUGLAS replies with a Chinese proverb: "A thousand mile journey begins with a single step." With strong Presidential backing now assured, the odds are that the country is about to take that all-important first step.

ACCEPTANCE OF BID BY GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, last week I made a statement on the floor of the Senate pointing out what I believed to have been an injustice perpetrated upon a Toledo furniture manufacturing company in the consideration of a bid which that company made to provide material for the General Services Administration.

The Government advertised for bids. The company submitted a bid in accordance with the advertisement. When the bids were to be opened, the Government declared that the opening would be delayed. Subsequently the bids were opened and the Government did not act in making an award.

Between the time the bids were received and the time an award was intended to be made, the Government changed the definition of what is supposed to be a "small business." Under the change in the definition, a business enterprise of St. Louis, Mo., which was "big business" and which was disqualified, became qualified for consideration. That St. Louis firm submitted a bid. It was ineligible when the bid was submitted. It was ineligible when the bids were opened. But after there was a delay—whether it was an artificial delay stimulated purposely I am not prepared to say—the St. Louis firm became qualified and became the low bidder.

I took the position last week that in my opinion that was a bad method of doing business. When there is a declaration that the test of qualification should be made on the day a bid is awarded and not on the day the bid is received, that creates an incentive for manipulation and chicanery.

What I wish to point out today is that the Small Business Administration has taken exception to the ruling made that the eligibility shall be determined not on the day the bid is received, but on the day the award is made.

I commend the Small Business Administration for its sagacity and for its recognition of the complications which follow when under a supposed ruling it is declared that the rules can be changed in the middle of the game.

I hope that the Comptroller will recognize his mistake and declare this situation to be in accordance with what is rationality and justice.

ADMISSION OF COMMUNIST CHINA TO UNITED NATIONS

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, the time is fast approaching for President Kennedy to take a firm stand against United Nations membership for Communist China and against United States recognition of the Peiping Government.

I applaud President Kennedy's statement at his press conference yesterday that "we are not prepared to surrender" in order to achieve a relaxation of tension between the Communist Chinese regime and the United States. I am hopeful he will follow through by a clear, unequivocal reaffirmation of our country's opposition to permitting an outlaw nation—Red China—to occupy a seat in the very body that declared it an aggressor.

Such a statement by our Government is urgently needed now to bolster the faltering resolve of some of those governments which have heretofore supported the United States position on this issue. Only today the Washington Post and Times Herald reported that 11 British commonwealth nations will support admission of Communist China, as will India and Britain. The news account said these nations reached a very wide agreement on how to bring the Chinese Communists into the United Nations.

Our Ambassador to the United Nations, Adlai Stevenson, is reported to have advised President Kennedy that the United Nations will vote to admit Red China this fall.

It appears to me there is a widespread campaign to brainwash the American people into believing the admission of Communist China is inevitable and there is nothing the United States can do about it.

Unless President Kennedy promptly and vigorously announces America's opposition and unless our foreign policy officials begin an all-out buttonhole campaign of United Nations delegates, a bandwagon movement may begin which he will be unable to stop later.

Mr. President, the unspoken corollary to the new drive to seat Communist China is a move to oust the delegation from free China. Also unspoken, but undoubtedly a prime factor in this drive, is mounting pressure to increase trade and commerce with Communist China. It will be a sorry day for the United Nations if that body abandons its long-standing and eminently correct moral position on Communist China in order to make way for more trade.

I gravely fear a new Munich is in the making, and I call on President Kennedy to use every means at his command to prevent it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Post article be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ELEVEN NATIONS BACK PEIPING FOR U.N.

(By Arthur Veysey, Chicago Tribune Press Service)

LONDON, March 8.—With India's Premier Jawaharlal Nehru in the lead with Britain's Prime Minister Harold Macmillan in the rear, Communist China today gained strong support from 11 commonwealth nations for its admission into the United Nations.

The question of Red China came up at both sessions of the first day of the 10th commonwealth conference.

To Nehru's opening argument that it is right for the Peiping government to represent China rather than the government of Chiang Kai-shek on Formosa, Britain's Macmillan closed the day with the argument on the western front, and so hastened the downfall of Germany in the Kaiser's war. It was crossing the Meuse, and driving forward, when halted by the armistice of November 11.

Demobilized in April of 1919 and made merely a number in the files of the War Department, the 1st Army was resurrected in 1933, and in 1935 commenced that series of field Army maneuvers which began our modernized military training. With its small headquarters it supervised the training of troops on the North Atlantic seaboard for half a decade, and then took over the conduct of those mobile, peacetime Army maneuvers in the Carolinas and in Virginia, which created and instilled in the troops those modern, mobile tactical doctrines by which the war against Hitler was won.

An army is not entirely a fixed organization. It is a collection of corps, which in turn are collections of combat divisions, each supplemented by certain special types of troops. These corps and divisions may be, and sometimes are, shifted according to events. But the army headquarters is the heart of the organization—the headquarters itself and a certain number of attached army troops. It has a broad zone of action, not narrow like the arrows of divisions piercing an enemy front. The army feels in a broad way the sense of overall maneuver on campaign, and at the same time feels intimately the fierceness of the fighting. It knows both the effort and the thought which go to make up the battle.

On October 20, 1943, 1st U.S. Army headquarters was established in Bristol, England, under the command of Gen. Omar N. Bradley, on the grounds and in the buildings of Clifton College. The staff came from four separate sources. Of the 361 officers on its staff the following June, 37 came from the former headquarters of the old 1st Army on Governor's Island in New York Harbor, 38 came from North Africa and Sicily where they had served with conspicuous success in combat with General Bradley on the staff of the II Army Corps, 100 were especially assigned just prior to sailing from New York, and 186 joined during the preparation period in Britain. Young men seasoned by battle, older men with broad experience at high level staff jobs, others especially selected were welded during the winter into a planning, operating and supervising team, with a minimum of formality and a maximum of fluid cooperation.

On the morning of June 6, 1944, 1st Army headquarters was off the Normandy beaches as some of its divisions made the first penetration of the Atlantic Wall. Between midnight and dawn the 1st Army dropped the 82d and 101st Airborne Divisions onto the Cherbourg Peninsula—an operation in which I was fortunate enough to participate with the 82d—and beginning at 6:30 a.m. sent infantry divisions ashore onto the hostile shores of Omaha Beach and Utah Beach. On Omaha the going was tough from the very beginning on the fire-swept sands, and for many days progress was made only by inching forward from hedgerow to hedgerow. On Utah, the troops were better off. A quick-running tide fortunately swept the landing craft free from the best defended beaches to more lightly held stretches. Along the Calvados and Cotentin beaches the 1st Army was indeed the 1st U.S. Army in France. At the cost of much confusion and many casualties, the airborne troops stirred up the inland area so much, that the landing divisions on Utah had comparatively faster going. By June 18, the peninsula was cut, our divisions swiftly changed direction, advanced northward on Cherbourg, and captured that important seaport on June 26. Then the real skill of our motorized army was demonstrated. By a quick move, troops which had just taken Cherbourg changed direction 180 degrees and drove south to set up a new line. For nearly a month, it was tough fighting amid the hedgerows. However, reserve troops were pouring in, supplies were building up, and the positions were improved.

Then on July 25, 1944, with the help of tremendous carpet bombing by the 8th U.S. Air Force, the 1st Army penetrated the German lines with great power on a narrow front near St. Lo and—pouring its armored troops through—made the first major breakthrough of the German lines in Western Europe. The 1st Army was the first out of the beachhead. Prisoners were taken by the thousands. The 1st Army had now gotten more room to maneuver and made the most of it. By the end of the month, there was enough ground gained, enough strength pushed forward, and enough supplies built up, to support the employment of the 3d Army. So, on August 1, 1944, 1st Army's 18 divisions were divided between the 1st Army and the 3d Army. General Hodges succeeded General Bradley in command of the 1st Army, and Gen. George S. Patton took over the 3d Army, with General Bradley taking command of the 12th Army Group over both armies.

Swinging like a scythe against the flank of the German lines, 1st Army held open with part of its force a gateway for the 3d Army to race into the Loire Valley and down the Brittany Peninsula. Other units of 1st Army reached around east and northeast. German troops counterattacked at Mortain to try to cut off the racing lead units. 1st Army, however, checked the thrust against its gateway. At the same time it kept curling around the Germans, reaching ever eastward and then even north, hammering the almost encircled enemy against the advancing British. In the process, 1st Army, for all practical purposes, destroyed the entire German 7th Army. The way to the Seine was open, and 1st Army hurled two of its divisions forward to Paris to liberate that great old city. Motorized soldiers of 4th Infantry Division set up a temporary headquarters and wrote their unit's name on paving blocks in front of the famous Cathedral of Notre Dame. It was August 25.

The 1st Army was the first into Paris.

The 1st Army was rolling and could not be stopped. It turned to the east and northeast, pursuing the fleeing Germans before it. By September 2, spearheads of the 9th Infantry Division and of the 3d Armored Division crossed the Belgian frontier and next day occupied the famous city of Mons. In 1 month since breaking out of the Normandy area, the 1st Army had covered over 150 miles to Paris, and an additional 60 miles to Mons across World War I battlefields, at a speed undreamed of in the old days of trench-to-trench advances, past Chateau-Thierry and the Marne, past Laon and the Somme. The quick northward move into Mons put the 3d Armored and the 1st Infantry Divisions across the retreat route of an entire German corps. Thus was created what was called the "Mons Pocket," where more than 25,000 Germans were taken prisoner. Onward the 1st Army advance continued to drive against the rapidly retreating Germans, through Charleroi, through Namur and Liege, across the Meuse, into and through the Ardennes, through Luxembourg, until on September 11 reconnaissance elements of the 5th Armored Division—then with the 1st Army—pierced the Siegfried Line over the frontier.

The 1st Army was the first into Germany. 1st Army had moved fast across France and Belgium, so fast that gas and food supplies were running low. For one short period captured German rations had to be used to supplement 1st Army's meager food supply. At his frontier, the enemy rallied to his permanent defenses, his pillboxes and his dragon's teeth. Yet the 1st Army fought forward here, even though slowly. In September the 2d Armored Division was pounding into Liege. In October the 1st Infantry Division took the great and historic city of Aachen, where once stood the throne of Charlemagne; others pushed and pried through the Hurtgen Forest, a nightmare which those who were there will never forget. 1st Army was now covering a front of 114 miles. On the front, at a spot held only weakly because the 1st Army's main strength was being used to fight forward elsewhere, the Germans struck in mid-December and penetrated very deeply. They were checked after 2 weeks of furious battle, marked by quick shifts of troops made to block them away from Liege, in a new demonstration of the mobility the 1st Army used half a year before when shifting quickly south in Normandy to face St. Lo. This was the famous Battle of the Bulge.

By early February the 1st Army had fought the Germans out of the salient. Absorbing the hardest blows of Germany's newly raised army, the 1st hit back and chewed them up. There in the Ardennes, Germany lost her freshest troops and lost the war. In February, in conjunction with the 3d Army on the right and the 9th Army on the left, the 1st Army advanced out of the mountains and onto the open plains of the Rhineland. On March 7, one of 1st Army's armored units on the right front reached the Rhine just north of Coblenz and opened eyes in wild surprise. The railroad bridge at Remagen had not been destroyed. Over that bridge sped the men of the 9th Armored Division.

The 1st Army was the first to cross the Rhine:

Higher headquarters had not planned it that way. The crossing was to have been made on the lower reaches of the river. 1st Army, however, poured more and more troops over and expanded slowly into the hilly country beyond for nearly 2 weeks. Ten days later the bridge fell into the river, but pontoon bridges were in. The buildup grew. By the end of the month, 1st Army had a good buildup east of the river and had struck east and then north to make contact with 9th Army. In this eastward thrust, 1st Army helped encircle more than 300,000 Germans in what was called the Ruhr pocket. With hardly a pause, while two of 1st Army's corps were mopping up the Ruhr, the other two of 1st Army's corps were pounding eastward through Germany, heading for Halle and Dessau and for Leipzig, and clearing up the Harz mountains. On April 22, 1st Army was on the Mulde River, the stopline. Then patrols were sent forward. Three days later, one of these, from the 69th Infantry Division, met soldiers of the Soviet Army on the girders of a blownup bridge at Torgau.

The 1st Army was the first to meet up with the Russians:

That is, briefly, the story of the 1st U.S. Army in Europe during World War II. After the German surrender, during the first week in May, the divisions were released from 1st Army. Headquarters of the 1st Army then packed and started back to the United States; and, in accordance with the choice of the high command moved to the Philippines to begin planning for the invasion of Japan. The team which had done so well from Britain to Normandy, from Normandy to the Rhine, from the Rhine to the Elbe, was not only a seasoned staff of capable officers, but it was a well coordinated group under a quiet, unflustered, and able commander. They had been especially selected for this new task, a task which never materialized because the war in the Pacific ended soon after arrival there. It did, however, perform one little military function even after its arrival in the Philippines. The staff negotiated and General Hodges accepted the surrender of some 15,000 Japanese, who had been cut off in a pocket located near a town on the island of Luzon where the 1st Army had set up its command post.

Thus ends this saga of the famous fighting 1st U.S. Army and its World War II accomplishments. I would like to call your attention to what happened to all of the members of this great staff who managed the 1st Army so effectively, but this is too much of a task to undertake here. I shall only be able to give you the location and status of life of a few. Gen. Courtney H. Hodges is retired, as I have previously said, and is living on Saddle Tree Road, Shavano Park, San Antonio, Tex. Lt. Gen. William B. Kean, who then was a major general and Chief of Staff, is now retired and living in Clearwater, Fla. Maj. Gen. Samuel Myers, then a colonel and the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations, is still on active duty as Assistant Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics, Department of the Army. Col. Charles F. HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 102)

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I send to the desk a message to the Congress of the United States from the President, which I understand is now being read in the House. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the appropriate committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message from the President was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(For text of President's message see House proceedings for today.)

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, S. 993, be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to consider Calendar No. 63, S. 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—the majority leader announced yesterday that he would make this unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to state that it is the understanding of the Chair that the unfinished business is not before the Senate, and will not be before the Senate, in the absence of a motion, before 2 o'clock.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I was going to make a further unanimous-consent request, if there is no objection, that the rule be waived and that no motion be made at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I shall not object to the unanimous-consent request. However, it should be brought to the attention of the Senate that the report on the depressed areas bill, which is the subject of this request, was not filed until this morning in its printed form. It was not made available to the membership of the Senate until this morning.

This is not the first time during this session—certainly not the first time in Senate sessions generally—that the Members of this body have been requested to engage in debate on and consideration of measures as to which reports have not been seasonably filed. This is the second or third instance since we convened on January 3. Lest it ripen into a practice and a regularly approved procedure, I wish to say that the Senator from Nebraska will be constrained to make objection on future occasions when similar instances occur.

This is supposed to be a deliberative body. We are supposed to follow a procedure whereby some semblance of full information will be disseminated to the membership as a result of committee action, committee official action as well as the hearings themselves.

For the first time, so far as I recall, 30 minutes ago there came to my consciousness the idea that there was a report and that there were hearings on the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HRUSKA. However, I appreciate the position of the majority leader in the instant case. I wish to facilitate consideration, and I do not wish to obstruct having timely consideration given to the passage of the feed grains bill. I understand further that action on the bill would not be in order until the other body has acted.

For that reason I do not object. But I do wish to say that on future occasions the Senator from Nebraska may be constrained to insist upon a more literal compliance with the rule.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nebraska for his graciousness, his courtesy, and his understanding. He has a valid point. I hope that what we are doing today will be the exception rather than the rule and, so far as the leadership is concerned, I believe we can assure the Senator from Nebraska that, insofar as we can, we will see that his suggested policy is pursued. But in view of the unusual circumstances affecting the feed grains bill at this time, we thought that this procedure would be proper but we would follow it only if no Senator objected to operating on that basis. I thank the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. We are fully aware of the difficulty which confronts the majority leader because the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry preferred not to press for action on the bill in the Senate until the House had completed its action. Action is taking longer in the House than was anticipated, but I gather, judging from the amount of interest in the amendments before the House, it might take the better part of the afternoon.

I believe the distinguished Senator from Nebraska makes a most valid point, and for the minority I can assure him that the present procedure will not ripen into a habit. But we would like to cooperate with the majority leader to the full. So if this measure is before us for discussion, I suppose discussion of the depressed areas bill can begin. I am hopeful, of course, that there will be no undue effort to press for or hasten action, because it is a most important bill.

There are a number of substitutes, and I do not wish to see the discussion concluded, particularly in view of the possibility that during the weekend period a good many Senators on both sides of the aisle may be out of the city. However, for discussion purposes, the bill could be considered.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. First, I agree with everything that the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], has just said.

I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The bill that is proposed to be considered is a very important one, and I would be inclined to object to its present consideration until the rules are complied with, unless there is some assurance that no effort will be made to dispose of the bill supposedly with expedition, but perhaps with too much haste and with lack of full consideration.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I assure the Senator from Ohio that the rule is being complied with and that we do not intend to push or shove the bill through. We hope to have ample debate on it. The reason for bringing it up for consideration at this time is the unusual circumstances affecting the status of the feed grains bill in the House.

Mr. LAUSCHE. There are so many bills of great importance that will be coming before this session of Congress, many of them establishing new avenues of approach on the part of the Government, that I am inclined to join with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HRUSKA] in suggesting that time ought to be available for Senators to read the reports, at least in a cursory way, and to read the testimony to the extent that they may wish to do so.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to permit me to make an observation?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I was advised, whether correctly or incorrectly, that this morning 22 Senate committees were meeting at the same hour. Trying to distribute the membership among all the committees that are meeting becomes quite a chore, and I discover now that I must fend a little to make sure that a minority Member is in attendance in the Chamber. So when my distinguished friend from Ohio speaks about the workload that is in a state of incubation, he was never more correct. I presume that there will be a great surge of legislation, to the point where one might seriously develop legislative indigestion. I hope it will not happen. I am sure my even-tempered and distinguished friend from Montana will sympathize with our difficulties and not push us too much, although we know that he has a problem. There is a timetable, and the administration, of course, wants to get action.

As I said this morning rather jocularly, I am reminded a little of the country doctor in a horse and buggy racing down the roadside. A friend shouted to him, saying, "Hey, Doc, why such a hurry?"

The doctor replied, "I got to get out there before the patient gets well." [Laughter.]

So I understand everyone wants to get the program going before the patient gets well. From the observations I gather from administration leaders, we have turned the corner. The patient is getting well and, as I observed yesterday, I was thoroughly heartened by the fact that both "Liz" Taylor and the economy have improved. That is cause for jubilation and congratulation.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I assume that the Senator from Illinois will indulge me if I carry on my discussion with the Senator from Montana, and that he will not expect me to give confirmation to what he has said. He will not expect that confirmation at this time, will he?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, I would love it, because then I would repeat it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAUSCHE. I do not think I shall give it. But I have assurance from the Senator from Montana that there will be no effort to hurry this measure through.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator from Ohio has my assurance.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Could not the distinguished Senator from Ohio here and now tell me that he fully concurs in what I have said?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I do not believe we should get into a discussion of turning corners, two cars in every garage, or two chickens in every pot. I think we should get on with the business at hand, and the watchword should be quality and not quantity.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I am happy and proud to learn that there are some Senators who are interested in the report the committee has filed. It was filed yesterday afternoon, but, of course, the printed copies were not available until 11 o'clock this morning, and naturally Senators have not had an opportunity to read it. It is a 76-page report, and the chairman, unfortunately, did not find himself in agreement with the majority of the committee in reporting the bill. He has filed individual views, and he would like to have Senators read those views.

All that has been proposed is that since we cannot conveniently go ahead today with the feed grains bill, we could debate the proposed Area Redevelopment Act. Then we could probably lay it aside tomorrow for consideration of the feed grains bill, if the House finishes its action, as we expect it to do today, and probably we would actually vote not before Tuesday or Wednesday of next week. The chairman hopes that the vote will not come until next week, because this is an important measure. The report should be studied by every Senator. Unemployment is a serious problem, but in the opinion of the chairman of the committee, the bill is not the solution for it.

We have the majority report. We have the recommendations of the President on the proposed legislation, and naturally we bring the bill before the Senate. It should be debated. I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. METCALF in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the title of the bill.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, S. 1, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this Act may be cited as the "Area Redevelopment Act".

DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The Congress declares that the maintenance of the national economy at a high level is vital to the best interests of the United States, but that some of our communities are suffering substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment; that such unemployment and underemployment cause hardship to many individuals and their families and detract from the national welfare by wasting vital human resources; that to overcome this problem the Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, should help areas of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment to take effective steps in planning and financing their economic redevelopment; that Federal assistance to communities, industries, enterprises, and individuals in areas needing redevelopment should enable such areas to achieve lasting improvement and enhance the domestic prosperity by the establishment of stable and diversified local economies and improved local living conditions; and that under the provisions of this Act new employment opportunities should be created by developing and expanding new and existing facilities and resources rather than merely transferring jobs from one community to another.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 3. In order to carry out the purposes of this Act, there is hereby established in the Department of Commerce an Area Redevelopment Administration. Such Administration shall be under the direction and control of an Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be compensated at the same rate as that prescribed by law for an assistant secretary of an executive department.

ADVISORY POLICY BOARD

SEC. 4. (a) To advise the Administrator in the performance of functions authorized by this Act, there is authorized to be created an Area Redevelopment Advisory Policy Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), which shall consist of the following members, all ex officio: the Secretary of Commerce as Chairman; the Secretaries of Agriculture; Health, Education, and Welfare; Interior; Labor; and Treasury; and the Administrators of the Housing and Home Finance Agency and the Small Business Administration.

The Chairman may from time to time invite the participation of officials of other agencies of the executive branch interested in the functions herein authorized. Each member of the Board may designate an officer of his agency to act for him as a member of the Board with respect to any matter there considered.

(b) The Secretary of Commerce shall appoint a National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment which shall consist of twenty-five members and shall be composed of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, State and local governments, and the public in general. From the members appointed to such Committee the Secretary of Commerce shall designate a Chairman. Such Committee, or any duly established subcommittee thereof, shall from time to time make recommendations to the Secretary relative to the carrying out of his duties under this Act. Such Committee shall hold not less than two meetings during each calendar year.

(c) The Administrator is authorized from time to time to call together and confer with any persons, including representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and government, who can assist in meeting the problems of unemployment or underemployment in the several areas designated by the Administrator as redevelopment areas.

REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

SEC. 5. (a) The Administrator shall designate as "redevelopment areas" those areas within the United States in which he determines, upon the basis of standards generally comparable with those set forth in subparagraphs (1) and (2) below, that there has existed substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended period of time. There shall be included among the areas so designated any area—

(1) where the rate of unemployment, excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal factors, is currently 6 per centum or more and has averaged at least 6 per centum for the qualifying time periods specified in subparagraph (2) below; and

(2) where the annual average rate of unemployment has been at least—

(A) 50 per centum above the national average for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

(B) 75 per centum above the national average for two of the preceding three calendar years, or

(C) 100 per centum above the national average for one of the preceding two years.

The Secretary of Labor shall find the facts and provide the data to be used by the Administrator in making the determinations required by this subsection. Any area in which a substantial part of the employment is or most recently was in an industry adversely affected by the reduction of trade barriers under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, with respect to which the President has reported to the Congress under section 4(a) or 7(c) of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951, as amended, and meeting the standards of unemployment set forth in this section shall be entitled on application to special consideration by the Administrator for designation as a redevelopment area.

(b) The Administrator shall also designate as "redevelopment areas" those areas (including Indian reservations) within the United States which do not meet the requirements set forth in subsection (a) but which he determines are among the highest in numbers and percentages of low-income families, and in which there exists a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment. In making the designations under this subsection and before making any loans as the result of designations under this subsection, the Administrator shall, by regulation, prescribe detailed standards upon which the designations under this subsection shall be based. In the formulation of such standards the Administrator shall consider, among other relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families in the various rural areas of the United States, the proportion that such low-income families are to the total farm families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of the families in each such area to the general levels of income in the United States, the current and prospective employment opportunities in each such area, the availability of manpower in each such area for supplemental employment, the extent of migration out of the area, and the proportion of the population of each such area which has been receiving public assistance from the Federal Government and/or from the State or States in which such area is located or from any municipality therein. In making the designations under this subsection, the Administrator shall endeavor to distribute the projects widely among the several States, so far as is feasible and proper, in order that actual experience with this program may be had in as many States and in as many areas and under as many different circumstances as possible. In making these determinations, the Administrator shall be guided, but not conclusively governed, by pertinent studies made, and information and data collected or compiled, by (1) departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, (2) State and local governments, (3) universities and land-grant colleges, and (4) private organizations.

(c) Upon the request of the Administrator, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Interior, and such other heads of agencies as may be appropriate, are authorized to conduct such special studies, obtain such information, and compile and furnish to the Administrator such data as the Administrator may deem necessary or proper to enable him to make the determinations provided for in subsection (b) of this section. The Administrator shall reimburse when appropriate, out of any funds appropriated to carry out the purposes of this Act, the foregoing officers for any expenditures incurred by them under this section.

(d) As used in this Act, the term "redevelopment area" refers to any area within the United States which has been designated by the Administrator as a redevelopment area and may include one or more States, one or more counties, or one or more municipalities, or a part of a county or municipality.

LOANS AND PARTICIPATIONS

SEC. 6. (a) The Administrator is authorized to purchase evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (including participations therein) to aid in financing any project within a redevelopment area for the purchase or development of land and facilities (including machinery and equipment in cases of demonstrated need) for industrial or commercial usage, including the construction of new buildings, the rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, and the alteration, conversion, or enlargement of existing buildings. Such financial assistance shall not be extended (1) for working capital, or (2) to assist establishments relocating from one area to another. The limitation set forth in clause (2) above shall not be construed to prohibit assistance for the expansion of an existing business operation from its original location or for the establishment of a new branch affiliate, or subsidiary: Provided, That such assistance will not substantially decrease employment in the area of original location.

(b) Financial assistance under this section shall be on such terms and conditions as the Administrator determines, subject, however, to the following restrictions and limitations:

(1) The total amount of loans and loan participations (including purchased evidences of indebtedness) outstanding at any one time under this section (A) with respect to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(a) shall not exceed $100,000,000 and (B) with respect to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(b) shall not exceed $100,000,000;

(2) Such assistance shall be extended only to applicants, both private and public (including Indian tribes), which have been approved for such assistance by an agency or instrumentality of the State or political subdivision thereof in which the project to be financed is located, and which agency or instrumentality is directly concerned with problems of economic development in such State or subdivision;

(3) The project for which financial assistance is sought is reasonably calculated to provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment within the redevelopment area wherein it is, or will be, located;

(4) No such assistance shall be extended hereunder unless the financial assistance applied for is not otherwise available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on reasonable terms;

(5) The Administrator shall not make any loan without a participation unless he determines that the loan cannot be made on a participation basis;

(6) No evidences of indebtedness shall be purchased and no loans shall be made unless it is determined that there is a reasonable assurance of repayment;

(7) Subject to section 12(5) of this Act, no loans, including renewals or extension thereof, may be made hereunder for a period exceeding twenty-five years and no evidences of indebtedness maturing more than twenty-five years from date of purchase may be purchased hereunder: Provided, That the foregoing restrictions on maturities shall not apply to securities or obligations received by the Administrator as a claimant in bankruptcy or equitable reorganization or as a creditor in other proceedings attendant upon insolvency of the obligor;

(8) Such loans shall bear interest at a rate equal to the rate of interest paid by the Administrator on funds obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in section 9 of this Act, plus one-half of 1 per centum per annum to cover administrative expenses and to provide for losses on loans under this section;

(9) Such assistance shall not exceed 65 per centum of the aggregate cost to the applicant (excluding all other Federal aid in connection with the undertaking) of acquiring or developing land and facilities (including, in cases of demonstrated need, machinery and equipment), and of constructing, altering, converting, rehabilitating, or enlarging the building or buildings of the particular project and shall, among others, be on the following conditions:

(A) That other funds are available in an amount which, together with the assistance provided hereunder, shall be sufficient to pay such aggregate cost;

(B) That not less than 10 per centum of such aggregate cost be supplied by the State or any agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision thereof, or by a community or area organization which is nongovernmental in character, as equity capital or as a loan;

(C) That in extending financial assistance under this section with respect to a redevelopment area, the Administrator shall require that not less than 5 per centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made shall be supplied by nongovernmental sources; and

(D) That to the extent the Administrator finds such action necessary to encourage financial participation in a particular project by other lenders and investors any Federal financial assistance extended under this section may be repayable only after other loans made in connection with such project and in accordance with this section have been repaid in full, and the security, if any, for such Federal financial assistance may be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing other loans made in connection with the same project;

(10) No such assistance shall be extended unless there shall be submitted to and approved by the Administrator an overall program for the economic development of the area and a finding by the State, or any agency, instrumentality, or local political subdivision thereof, that the project for which financial assistance is sought is consistent with such program: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall authorize financial assistance for any project prohibited by laws of the State or local political subdivision in which the project would be located.

(c) Of the funds authorized to be raised under section 9 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans under this section with respect to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(a), and not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans under this section with respect to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(b).

PUBLIC FACILITY LOANS FOR INDUSTRIAL OR COMMERCIAL PURPOSES

SEC. 7. (a) Upon the application of any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or public or private nonprofit organization or association representing any redevelopment area or part thereof, the Administrator is authorized to make loans to assist in financing the purchase or development of land for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within any redevelopment area, if he finds that such facilities will serve primarily industrial or commercial needs and that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelopment area wherein such project is, or will be, located, and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities;

(2) the funds requested for such project are not otherwise available on reasonable terms;

(3) the amount of the loan plus the amount of other available funds for such projects are adequate to insure the completion thereof;

(4) there is a reasonable expectation of repayment; and

(5) such area has an approved economic development program as provided in section 6(b)(10) and the project for which financial assistance is sought is consistent with such program.

(b) No loan under this section shall be for an amount in excess of 65 per centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made. Subject to section 12(5), the maturity date of any such loan shall be not later than forty years after the date such loan is made. Any such loan shall bear interest at a rate equal to the rate of interest paid by the Administrator on funds obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in section 9 of this Act, plus one-quarter of 1 per centum per annum.

(c) In making any loan under this section, the Administrator shall require that not less than 10 per centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made shall be supplied by the State (including any political subdivision thereof) within which such project is to be located as equity capital, or as a loan. In determining the amount of participation required under this subsection with respect to any particular project, the Administrator shall give consideration to the financial condition of the State or local government, and to the per capita income of the residents of the redevelopment area, within which such project is to be located.

(d) To the extent the Administrator finds such action necessary to encourage financial participation in a particular project by other lenders and investors, any Federal financial assistance extended under this section may be repayable only after other loans made in connection with such project and in accordance with this section have been repaid in full, and the security, if any, for such Federal financial assistance may be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing other loans made in connection with the same project.

(e) No financial assistance shall be extended under this section with respect to any public facility which would compete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory body determines that in the area to be served by the public facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing facilities or through an expansion which it agrees to undertake.

(f) Of the funds authorized to be raised under section 9 of this Act, not more than $100,000,000 shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans under this section.

PUBLIC FACILITY GRANTS FOR INDUSTRIAL OR COMMERCIAL PURPOSES

SEC. 8. (a) The Administrator may conduct studies of needs in the various redevelopment areas throughout the United States for, and the probable cost of, land acquisition or development for public facility usage in serving industrial or commercial needs, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of useful public facilities to serve such needs within such areas, and may receive proposals from any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or public or private nonprofit organization or association representing any redevelopment area, or part thereof, relating to land acquisition or development for such public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of such public facilities within any such area. Any such proposal shall contain plans showing the project proposed to be undertaken, the cost thereof, and the contributions proposed to be made to such cost by the entity making the proposal. The Administrator, in consultation with such entity, is authorized to modify all or any part of such proposal.

(b) The Administrator, pursuant to a proposal received by him under this section, may make grants to any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or public or private nonprofit organization or association representing any redevelopment area, or part thereof, for land acquisition or development for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within a redevelopment area, if he finds that such facilities will serve primarily industrial or commercial needs and that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelopment area wherein such project is, or will be, located, and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities;

(2) the entity requesting the grant proposes to contribute to the cost of the project for which such grant is requested in proportion to its ability so to contribute;

(3) the project for which a grant is requested will fulfill a pressing need of the area, or part thereof, in which it is, or will be, located, and there is little probability that such project can be undertaken without the assistance of a grant under this section; and

(4) the area for which a project is to be undertaken has an approved economic development program as provided in section 6(b)(10) and such project is consistent with such program.

The amount of any grant under this section for any such project shall not exceed the difference between the funds which can be practicably obtained from other sources (including a loan under section 7 of this Act) for such project, and the amount which is necessary to insure the completion thereof.

(c) The Administrator shall by regulation provide for the supervision of projects with respect to which grants are made under this section so as to insure that Federal funds are not wasted or dissipated.

(d) No financial assistance shall be extended under this section with respect to any public facility which would compete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory body determines that in the area to be served by the public facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing facilities or through an expansion which it agrees to undertake.

(e) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $75,000,000 for the purpose of making grants under this section.

FUNDS FOR LOANS

SEC. 9. (a) To obtain funds for loans under this Act, the Administrator may, with the approval of the President, issue and have outstanding at any one time notes and obligations for purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury in an amount not to exceed $300,000,000. Such notes or other obligations shall be in such forms and denominations, have such maturities, and be subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but such rate shall not be greater than the current average yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obligations issued under this section and for such purpose is authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such Act are extended to include any purchase of such notes and other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations shall be treated in every respect as public debt transactions of the United States.

(b) In the performance of and with respect to the functions, powers, and duties vested in him by sections 6 and 7 of this Act, the Administrator shall—

(1) prepare annually and submit a budget program in accordance with the provisions of sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended; and

(2) determine the character of and the necessity for obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, subject to provisions of law specifically applicable to Government corporations.

INFORMATION

SEC. 10. Subject to section 24, the Administrator shall aid redevelopment areas and other areas by furnishing to interested individuals, communities, industries, and enterprises within such areas any assistance, technical information, market research, or other forms of assistance, information, or advice which are obtainable from the various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government and which would be useful in alleviating or preventing conditions of excessive unemployment or underemployment within such areas. The Administrator shall furnish the procurement divisions of the various departments, agencies, and other instrumentalities of the Federal Government with a list containing the names and addresses of business firms which are located in redevelopment areas and which are desirous of obtaining Government contracts for the furnishing of supplies or services, and designating the supplies and services such firms are engaged in providing.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 11. Subject to section 24, in carrying out his duties under this Act the Administrator is authorized to provide technical assistance which would be useful in alleviating or preventing conditions of excessive unemployment or underemployment (1) to areas which he has designated as redevelopment areas under this Act, and (2) to other areas which he finds have substantial need for such assistance. Such assistance shall include studies evaluating the needs of, and developing potentialities for, economic growth of such areas. Such assistance may be provided by the Administrator through members of his staff or through the employment of private individuals, partnerships, firms, corporations, or suitable institutions, under contracts entered into for such purposes. Appropriations are hereby authorized for the purposes of this section in an amount not to exceed $4,500,000 annually.

POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR

SEC. 12. In performing his duties under this Act, the Administrator is authorized to—

(1) adopt, alter, and use a seal, which shall be judicially noticed; and subject to the civil service and classification laws, select, employ, appoint, and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, and define their authority and duties, provide bonds for them in such amounts as the Administrator shall determine, and pay the costs of qualification of certain of them as notaries public;

(2) hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, and take such testimony, as he may deem advisable;

(3) request directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics needed to carry out the purposes of this Act; and each department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment, or instrumentality is authorized to furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Administrator;

(4) under regulations prescribed by him, assign or sell at public or private sale, or otherwise dispose of for cash or credit, in his discretion and upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as he shall determine to be reasonable, any evidence of debt, contract, claim, personal property, or security assigned to or held by him in connection with the payment of loans made under this Act, and collect or compromise all obligations assigned to or held by him in connection with the payment of such loans until such time as such obligations may be referred to the Attorney General for suit or collection;

(5) further extend the maturity of or renew any loan made under this Act, beyond the periods stated in such loan or in this Act, for additional periods not to exceed ten years, if such extension or renewal will aid in the orderly liquidation of such loan;

(6) deal with, complete, renovate, improve, modernize, insure, rent, or sell for cash or credit, upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as he shall determine to be reasonable, any real or personal property conveyed to, or otherwise acquired by, him in connection with the payment of loans made under this Act;

(7) pursue to final collection, by way of compromise or other administrative action, prior to reference to the Attorney General, all claims against third parties assigned to him in connection with loans made under this Act. This shall include authority to obtain deficiency judgments or otherwise in the case of mortgages assigned to the Administrator. Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (41 U.S.C. 5), shall not apply to any contract of hazard insurance or to any purchase or contract for services or supplies on account of property obtained by the Administrator as a result of loans made under this Act if the premium therefor or the amount thereof does not exceed $1,000. The power to convey and to execute, in the name of the Administrator, deeds of conveyance, deeds of release, assignments and satisfactions of mortgages, and any other written instrument relating to real or personal property or any interest therein acquired by the Administrator pursuant to the provisions of this Act may be exercised by the Administrator or by any officer or agent appointed by him for that purpose without the execution of any express delegation of power or power of attorney;

(8) acquire, in any lawful manner, any property (real, personal, or mixed, tangible or intangible), whenever deemed necessary or appropriate to the conduct of the activities authorized in sections 6 and 7 of this Act;

(9) in addition to any powers, functions, privileges, and immunities otherwise vested in him, take any and all actions, including the procurement of the services of attorneys by contract, determined by him to be necessary or desirable in making, servicing, compromising, modifying, liquidating, or otherwise administratively dealing with or realizing on loans made under this Act;

(10) to such an extent as he finds necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, procure the temporary (not in excess of six months) service of experts or consultants or organizations thereof, including stenographic reporting services, by contract or appointment, and in such cases such service shall be without regard to the civil service and classification laws, and, except in the case of stenographic reporting services by organizations, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5); any individual so employed may be compensated at a rate not in excess of $75 per diem, and, while such individual is away from his home or regular place of business, he may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses;

(11) sue and be sued in any court of record of a State having general jurisdiction or in any United States district court, and jurisdiction is conferred upon such district court to determine such controversies without regard to the amount in controversy; but no attachment, injunction, garnishment, or other similar process, mesne or final, shall be issued against the Administrator or his property. Nothing herein shall be construed to except the activities under this Act from the application of sections 507(b) and 2679 of title 28, United States Code, and of section 367 of the Revised Statutes (5 U.S.C. 316); and

(12) establish such rules, regulations, and procedures as he may deem appropriate in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

SEC. 13. Whenever the Administrator shall determine that employment conditions within any area previously designated by him as a redevelopment area have changed to such an extent that such area is no longer eligible for such designation under section 5 of this Act, no further assistance shall be granted under this Act with respect to such area and, for the purposes of this Act, such area shall not be considered a redevelopment area: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall (1) prevent any such area from again being designated a redevelopment area under section 5 of this Act if the Administrator determines it to be eligible under such section, or (2) affect the validity of any contracts or undertakings with respect to such area which were entered into pursuant to this Act prior to a determination by the Administrator that such area no longer qualifies as a redevelopment area. The Administrator shall keep the departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and interested State or local agencies, advised at all times of any changes made hereunder with respect to the designation of any area.

URBAN RENEWAL

SEC. 14. Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"REDEVELOPMENT AREAS UNDER THE AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

"SEC. 113. (a) Whenever the Area Redevelopment Administrator certifies to the Administrator (1) that any county, city, or other municipality (in this section referred to as a 'municipality') is situated in an area designated under section 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act as a redevelopment area, and (2) that there is a reasonable probability that with assistance provided under such Act and other undertakings the area will be able to achieve more than temporary improvement in its economy, the Administrator is authorized to provide financial assistance to a local public agency in any such municipality under this title and the provisions of this section.

"(b) Subject to the provisions of subsection (e) of this section, the Administrator may provide such financial assistance under this section without regard to the requirement or limitations of section 110(c) that the project area be predominantly residential in character or be redeveloped for predominantly residential uses under the urban renewal plan, and without regard to any of the limitations of that section on the undertaking of projects for predominantly non-residential uses.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a contract for financial assistance under this section may include provisions permitting the disposition of any land in the project area designated under the urban renewal plan for industrial or commercial uses to any public agency or non-profit corporation for subsequent disposition as promptly as practicable by such public agency or corporation for the redevelopment of the land in accordance with the urban renewal plan: Provided, That any disposition of such land to such public agency or corporation under this section shall be made at its fair value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan: And provided further, That only the purchasers from or lessees of such public agency or corporation, and their assignees, shall be required to assume the obligations relating to the commencement of improvements imposed under section 105(b) hereof.

"(d) Following the execution of any contract for financial assistance under this section with respect to any project, the Administrator may exercise the authority vested in him under this section as well as other provisions of this title for the completion of such projects, notwithstanding any determination made after the execution of such contract that the area in which the project is located is no longer a redevelopment area under the Area Redevelopment Act.

"(e) The aggregate amount of capital grants which may be contracted for under this title with respect to projects for the redevelopment of urban renewal areas for predominantly nonresidential uses, under the second proviso of the fifth sentence of section 110(c), may be increased by an amount not to exceed 10 per centum of the aggregate amount of new grant contract authority provided after September 23, 1959, whenever the Administrator determines (1) that an increase in such amount is necessary in order to provide financial assistance under this section, and (2) that such assistance is not otherwise available because of the limitation contained in such proviso."

URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

SEC. 15. (a) Paragraph (3) of section 701(a) of the Housing Act of 1954 is amended by inserting after "counties which" the following: "(A) are situated in areas designated by the Area Redevelopment Administrator under section 5(a) of the Area Redevelopment Act as redevelopment areas or (B)".

(b) Section 701(b) of such Act is amended by adding before the period at the end of the first sentence a colon and the following: "Provided, That a grant may be made under clause (A) of paragraph (3) of subsection

(a) of this section for not more than 75 per centum of such estimated cost".

OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING

SEC. 16. (a) The Secretary of Labor is authorized, upon request and whenever he determines such studies are needed, to undertake, or to provide assistance to others for studies of the size, characteristics, skills, adaptability, occupational potentialities, and related aspects of the labor force of any redevelopment area.

(b) When a redevelopment area has an approved economic development program as provided in section 6(b)(10), the Secretary of Labor, in consultation with the Administrator, shall determine the occupational training or retraining needs of unemployed and underemployed individuals residing in the redevelopment area. The Secretary of Labor shall notify the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare of the occupational training or retraining requirements of the area, and shall provide for the orderly selection and referral of those unemployed or underemployed individuals residing in the area who can reasonably be expected to obtain employment as a result of the skill they will acquire in the training which is to be made available, and shall make appropriate provision for such supervision by the appropriate agency as is necessary to the successful operation of any training program established under this section. The Secretary of Labor shall cooperate with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and with existing State and local agencies and officials in charge of existing programs relating to vocational training and retraining for the purpose of assuring that the facilities and services of such agencies are made fully available to such individuals.

(c) Whenever the Secretary of Labor finds that additional facilities or services are needed in the area to meet the occupational training or retraining needs of such individuals, he shall so advise the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall provide assistance, including financial assistance when necessary, to the appropriate State vocational educational agency in the provision of such additional facilities or services. If the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare finds that the State vocational educational agency is unable to provide the facilities and services needed, he may, after consultation with such agency, provide for the same by agreement or contract with public or private educational institutions.

(d) The Secretary of Labor shall arrange to provide any necessary technical assistance for setting up apprenticeships, and to promote journeyman and other on-the-job training.

(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, not in excess of $4,500,000 annually, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

RETRAINING SUBSISTENCE PAYMENTS

SEC. 17. (a) The Secretary of Labor in consultation with the Administrator may, on behalf of the United States, enter into agreements with States in which redevelopment areas are located, under which the Secretary of Labor shall make payments to such States either in advance or by way of reimbursement for the purpose of enabling such States, as agents of the United States, to make weekly retraining payments to unemployed or underemployed individuals residing within such redevelopment areas who are certified by the Secretary of Labor to be undergoing occupational training or retraining under section 16 of this Act. Such payments shall be made only for the period the individual is receiving occupational training or retraining under section 16 of this Act, but not in any event to exceed sixteen weeks, and the amounts of such payments shall be equal to the amount of the average weekly unemployment compensation payment payable in the State making such payments.

(b) No weekly retraining payment shall be made to any person otherwise eligible who, with respect to the week for which such payment would be made, has received or is seeking unemployment compensation under title XV of the Social Security Act or any other Federal or any State unemployment compensation law, but if the appropriate State or Federal agency finally determines that a person denied weekly training benefits because of this paragraph is not entitled to unemployment compensation under title XV of the Social Security Act or such Federal or State law, this paragraph shall not apply.

(c) Any agreement under this section may contain provisions (including, so far as may be appropriate, provisions authorized or made applicable with respect to agreements concluded by the Secretary of Labor pursuant to title XV of the Social Security Act) as will promote effective administration, protect the United States against loss, and insure the proper application of payments made to the State under such agreement. Except as may be provided in such agreements, or in the rules and regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (d) of this section, determinations by any duly designated officer or agency as to the eligibility of individuals for weekly retraining payments under this section shall be final and conclusive for any purpose and not subject to review by any court or any other officer.

(d) The Secretary of Labor and the Administrator shall jointly prescribe such rules and regulations as they may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, not in excess of $10,000,000 annually, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

No loan shall be made by the Administrator under this Act to any business enterprise unless the owners, partners, or officers of such business enterprise (1) certify to the Administrator the names of any attorneys, agents, or other persons engaged by or on behalf of such business enterprise for the purpose of expediting applications made to the Administrator for assistance of any sort, and the fees paid or to be paid to any such person; and (2) execute an agreement binding any such business enterprise, for a period of two years after any assistance is rendered by the Administrator to such business enterprise, to refrain from employing, tendering any office or employment to, or retaining for professional services, any person who, on the date such assistance or any part thereof was rendered or within one year prior thereto, shall have served as an officer, attorney, agent, or employee, occupying a position or engaging in activities which the Administrator shall have determined involve discretion with respect to the granting of assistance under this Act.

SEC. 21. All laborers and mechanics employed by contractors or subcontractors on projects assisted by the Administrator under this Act and undertaken by public applicants shall be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing on similar construction in the locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Davis-Bacon Act, as amended (40 U.S.C. 276a-276a-5), and every such employee shall receive compensation at a rate not less than one and one-half times his basic rate of pay for all hours worked in any workweek in excess of eight hours in any workday or forty hours in the workweek, as the case may be. The Administrator shall not approve any project involving the contribution of Federal funds without first obtaining adequate assurance that these labor standards will be maintained upon the construction work. The Secretary of Labor shall have, with respect to the labor standards specified in this provision, the authority and functions set forth in Reorganization Plan Numbered 14 of 1950 (15 F.R. 3176; 64 Stat. 1267; 5 U.S.C. 1332-15), and section 2 of the Act of June 13, 1934, as amended (40 U.S.C. 276c).

SEC. 22. The Administrator shall make comprehensive and detailed semiannual reports to the Congress of his operations under this Act for each six-month period of each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1962. Such reports shall be printed and shall be transmitted to the Congress not later than January 3 and June 30 of each year following the fiscal year with respect to which such reports are made. Such reports shall show, among other things, (1) the total number of unemployed persons in redevelopment areas, (2) the total principal amount of loans under this Act which are outstanding, the aggregate expenditures incurred by the Government in providing grants and other forms of assistance under this Act, and the administrative expenses incurred by the Government in providing assistance under this Act, (3) the number of applications for assistance under this Act which are pending and the total amount of assistance requested in such applications, (4) the number of industrial or commercial enterprises which have commenced or expanded operations in redevelopment areas as a result of assistance under this Act, the total asset value of such enterprises, and a description of each such enterprise in terms of whether it is a wholly new business enterprise, an enterprise which has moved from another area, or a branch of an existing business enterprise located elsewhere, (5) the total number of jobs created in each economically distressed area as a result of assistance extended under this Act, (6) the sum obtained by dividing the total amount of Federal assistance extended under this Act (including the administrative expenses incurred by the Government in extending such assistance) by the number of jobs created as a result of such assistance, (7) the number and size of Government contracts for the furnishing of supplies and services placed with business enterprises located in redevelopment areas, and (8) the amount and duration of employment resulting from such contracts. Upon the request of the Administrator, the various departments and agencies of the Government engaged in the procurement of supplies and services shall furnish to the Administrator such information as may be necessary for the purposes of clauses (7) and (8) above.

APPROPRIATION

SEC. 23. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

USE OF OTHER FACILITIES

SEC. 24. (a) The Administrator may, to the extent practicable and with their consent, use the available services and facilities of other agencies and instrumentalities of the Federal Government on a reimbursable basis. The Administrator shall exercise the authority contained in the preceding sentence whenever such exercise will avoid the duplication of existing staffs and facilities.

(b) Departments and agencies of the Federal Government shall exercise their powers, duties, and functions in such manner as will assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act. This Act shall be supplemental to any existing authority, and nothing herein shall be deemed to be restrictive of any existing powers, duties, and functions of any other department or agency of the Federal Government.

(c) Funds authorized to be appropriated under this Act may be transferred, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, between departments and agencies of the Government, if such funds are used for the purposes for which they are specifically authorized and appropriated.

as amended, to be placed in such grades: Provided, That not to exceed one such position may be placed in such grades under this subsection, to be assigned to the agencies by the Administrator, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

DELEGATION OF FUNCTIONS

SEC. 25. The Administrator, with the approval of the President, is authorized to delegate to the heads of other departments or agencies of the Government such functions, powers, and duties which are conferred upon him by this Act as he deems appropriate, and to authorize the redelegation of such functions, powers, and duties by the heads of such departments or agencies.

RECORDS AND AUDIT

SEC. 26. (a) Each recipient of assistance under section 6 or 7 of this Act shall keep as the Administrator shall prescribe, including records which fully disclose the amount and the disposition by such recipient of the proceeds of such assistance, the total cost of the project or undertaking in connection with which such assistance is given or used, and the amount and nature of that portion of the cost of the project or undertaking supplied by other sources, and such other records as will facilitate an effective audit.

(b) The Administrator and the Comptroller General of the United States, or any of their duly authorized representatives, shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of the recipient that are pertinent to assistance received under section 6 or 7 of this Act.

REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATION OF ACT

SEC. 27. The Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, shall, after the expiration of two years after the date of enactment of this Act, make a full and complete study and investigation of the administration of this Act. The committee shall report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date following the conclusion of its study and investigation, the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 28. As used in this Act, the term "State" means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico; and the term "United States" refers to the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, earlier in the day the chairman of the committee sent word to the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], who reported the bill to the Senate on behalf of the committee, that, since he was the distinguished author of the bill, the chairman would be very glad to yield to him to open the debate. But, as the little exchange between Senators has already disclosed, it was not contemplated that debate on the bill would start before the end of the normal morning hour—2 o'clock. So the distinguished Senator from Illinois, the patron of the bill, is not present, and the chairman will open briefly, giving an explanation of why he voted in committee against the report of the committee, and why he is still opposed to it.

Mr. President, I am opposed to S. 1, the area redevelopment bill. The additional Federal credit and the additional Federal bureaucracy authorized by this bill are not the answer to the problem of depressed areas. Thus, S. 1 will give false hope to those who look to it for economic salvation. It will use ineffectively the $394 million in Federal outlays permitted under it.

If legislation like S. 1 is to be enacted—however inappropriate and ineffective it may be—a number of major improvements should be incorporated in the bill. The power to administer the program should be vested directly in the Secretary of Commerce. It should not be placed in what is essentially another new independent agency only loosely associated with the Department of Commerce. All funds should be made available through annual appropriations with no recourse to back-door Treasury financing. But even if these amendments were made to S. 1, the bill would still be basically unsound.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Senator from Virginia has mentioned that there may be involved in the pending bill back-door financing. What is the fact with respect to whether the bill follows what is the normal course which is generally applied in connection with financing?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The bill provides that the grants and ordinary expenditures shall follow the constitutional provision that money shall be appropriated by an appropriation bill. That provision is in the Constitution. However, that provision applies only to $94 million out of $394 million. The other $300 million would come from back-door financing, through a pipeline to the Treasury. The new agency would say to the Treasury, "Let me have this money. Here is my certificate, my note." The Treasury would ask, "When will you repay it?"

The agency would reply, "We don't know. When we get it."

Mr. LAUSCHE. The new agency would have authority to go to the Treasury and, through the delivery of a certificate of indebtedness, procure the money?

Mr. ROBERTSON. By presenting its I O U.

Mr. LAUSCHE. It would procure the money?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes; the money would come out of the Treasury, just as if we had appropriated it. However, the money would not be in the budget. It would be added to the deficit, if the Treasury did not have the money in hand.

Mr. LAUSCHE. $94 million of it would be dealt with in the normal fashion. What items in the bill does that amount cover?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator will find a breakdown of the amounts on page 10 of the committee report. The breakdown shows the grants and other expenditures as consisting of several items: First, $75 million for public facilities for industrial or commercial purposes—that refers to the bringing in of factories, where it is necessary to fix streets and sewers and lights, and so on; second, $4,500,000 for technical assistance each year; third, retraining subsistence payments of $10 million each year; and last, occupational training of $4,500,000 a year.

These are the amounts that would be appropriated.

The chairman of the committee, the junior Senator from Virginia, at an appropriate time will offer an amendment requiring that everything be provided for by annual appropriation. The amendment has been sent to the desk. The distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], who at one time was chairman of the committee, will offer an amendment to put jurisdiction over the program under the Department of Commerce, and not create a new and what could be a very expensive bureaucracy.

Mr. LAUSCHE. What was the reason assigned for dealing with $94 million of the requested total sum in the normal manner, and $300 million of it through back-door financing?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Well, the reason was not very frankly expressed. The real reason is that those who favor the program do not want an independent committee passing judgment on it, because they fear that the Appropriations Committee may hold it up or may cut down the amount. When they get started with the program, the proponents want to be able to have a freewheeling program.

Mr. LAUSCHE. For my information, will the Senator from Virginia describe how the program would become a freewheeling program, when it is financed through back-door financing instead of making the administrators of the program come before the regular committees of Congress for consideration of requests for money?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Congress would be passing a bill creating a new agency with power to borrow from the Treasury up to $300 million, on the issuance by that agency of its I O U's, and delivering those I O U's to the Treasury. In that way it becomes a freewheeling spending program. When the agency is established it can go to the Treasury and say to the Treasury, "Here is my I O U. Let me have $100 million." Or it can ask for $200 million or $300 million. In that way it is a freewheeling agency spending up to $300 million.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Is it correct to say that it could continue in that way without annual supervision by the appropriate committees of Congress?

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is absolutely correct. In the opinion of the chairman of the committee this program should be limited to one or two years, and I expect an amendment to accomplish that will be offered. We limit foreign aid to 1 year, so that we can look at it from year to year. The proposed programs have been before the Congress for 6 years and have never been adopted, because we have found that there are inherent weaknesses in such a proposed program that we should not get into. Some people have been afraid that if we get into this sort of thing it might mean the end of private enterprise, because it would put the Government into the business of determining by the use of Federal funds where industries should be located. That subject has been argued back and forth for 6 years.

The bill passed the Senate last year by a narrow majority. Now we have it before us again. As the Senator from Virginia will explain in the course of his remarks, he believes that this approach is ineffectual and unconstitutional, and certainly undesirable. Furthermore, such a program should be placed directly under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Commerce. The Secretary of Commerce testified that the Department had 45 employees trained and ready to go ahead with the program if it is placed in his Department. Furthermore, the junior Senator from Virginia believes that this ought to be a year-to-year program, so that we could take a look at it from time to time.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Does the Senator from Virginia have at hand at the present time the amount of back-door authorizations which have been built up through the years?

Mr. ROBERTSON. It is my recollection that we have built up $56 billion dollars of spending in that way in recent years. It has been $114 billion all told. However, $33 billion was outstanding on June 30, 1960. That is the amount that has never been acted upon by the Appropriations Committees, as I consider that the Constitution requires, and as the rules of the House and the Senate contemplated when they created the Appropriations Committees.

It used to be the practice for each committee to handle its own appropriations. Then it was found that a committee would be prejudiced for a certain proposition or would be prejudiced against something. Therefore the rules were changed to provide that it was first necessary to get an authorization, and then it was made necessary for a fair and impartial committee to say whether money for a project should be appropriated.

Mr. LAUSCHE. When the Appropriations Committees were established, it was contemplated that they would be the central agencies through which all financing would have to be screened, and that the Appropriations Committees would take a look at the whole cloth, to determine how that cloth should be divided, and to make certain that an equitable allocation was made of the money. Is that correct?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes. That is correct. Not only that, but the committees were to do it every year. They would not say, "Here is $400 million or $500 million or $600 million, and we cannot put our hands on it until you spend all of that money."

Mr. LAUSCHE. Where there has not been the service of this central agency, the Appropriations Committees, all that is nullified when back-door financing is indulged in. Is that correct?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Absolutely.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Back-door financing is usually motivated by the purpose of avoiding the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Committee on Appropriations is sidestepped under the pleasing camouflage that what is sought is a loan, not an appropriation. The bill provides a revolving fund, and the presumption is that the money will be repaid. The argument is that we are not appropriating; we are going outside the budget to let someone borrow money because he says, "Here is my I O U. I will repay you." But everyone knows that that is a subterfuge for getting money from the Treasury in violation of the Constitution. It is an effort to get money without the safeguards which Congress contemplated when it took from each of the committees having legislative jurisdiction the power to handle its own appropriation bill and established in each House a new, separate, and distinct committee for that purpose. The House Committee on Appropriations has 50 members. It is the largest and most powerful group in the House.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I thank the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I thank the Senator from Ohio for his questions.

AN INCORRECT APPROACH

For one thing, S. 1 is an incorrect approach to the economic facts of life. We should remember that as our economy expands, some communities inevitably fall behind the national rate of growth. Over a period of time, these localities—particularly depressed areas—may seem to be less and less well off. This may be so even though in some cases a large share of the local labor force is employed and even though local standards of living continue to advance.

It is obvious that whatever our national level of prosperity may be, approximately one-half of all areas will be below average at any one time or over any given length of time. As long as below-average communities improve no faster than the Nation grows, they will always appear to be comparatively depressed, no matter how much progress they have made. S. 1, therefore, cannot eliminate a problem which, like the poor, will always be with us in some measure.

The proponents of S. 1 claim that the bill will channel economic activity into depressed areas to a greater degree than would otherwise occur. In other words, growth would be directed away from its natural course to benefit a relatively small number of areas at the expense of all others. Federal direction of economic growth would be implemented chiefly through the availability of $200 million of Federal credit for long-term loans toward commercial and industrial facilities, and $100 million for loans and $75 million for grants toward public facilities serving commercial and industrial establishments. Besides this, $10 million would be authorized for retraining subsistence payments, $4.5 million for technical assistance, and another $4.5 million for occupational training.

As I said to the distinguished Senator from Ohio, the figures appear on page 10 of the committee report.

The precedent established by these provisions could, in my opinion, ultimately lead to Federal control over all industrial location or relocation in every community. To the degree that Federal control under this bill would channel economic expansion away from its normal path, we will pay a price in terms of a reduced rate of overall economic growth and a lower average per capita income for the Nation as a whole.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Was there any discussion before the committee concerning the factors which usually induce industry to settle in a community?

Mr. ROBERTSON. There was much discussion of that subject. I call attention to the printed hearings, which comprise 880 pages. There was, as I shall point out later, a difference of opinion as to what causes growth and employment. There was a theory that low production costs would give employment, and the bill is geared to that theory. However, it was pointed out that in some areas, especially in New England, the existing empty factories do not attract industry and provide jobs. It is the profit motive which will give employment. That is why I say the bill ignores the most fundamental principle, namely, the profit motive, regardless of the cost. If an industry can make a profit in a certain area, that is where the industry will go, and that is where it will remain.

Mr. LAUSCHE. While I was the chief executive of Ohio, my efforts were directed substantially to attracting new industries to our State. My experience was that these factors were normally considered by those who were seeking sites for business: First, closeness to the consuming market; second, closeness to the supply of crude materials; third, location in a community which insured adequate legal protection of property and person.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is an important factor.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Fourth, a reasonable tax rate; fifth, an adequate supply of water and power; sixth, the availability of adequate transportation facilities—water, rail, and, increasingly important, air; seventh, a healthful living environment.

Whenever there was not a proximity of consumers or raw materials or a condition indicating adequate protection of life and property, industries would not settle in the place to which they were invited.

I should like to have the Senator's comment.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator from Ohio is eminently correct. He has enumerated factors which could be summarized in the phrase "favorable business climate." A favorable business climate is one which offers the necessary raw materials and facilities; closeness to markets; protection from hoodlums; and what might be called the protection of the law.

In addition, such a climate provides a chance for an industry to make a profit, and not have all the profit taxed away. It offers him a reasonable certainty that various types of outlaw strikes will not ruin the industry's chances for success.

I call the Senator's attention to an excellent statement on page 283 of the hearings. It was made by Mr. Robert P. Lee, vice president of the Connecticut Light & Power Co. Mr. Lee serves as manager of his company's area development department. He enumerated the factors which the bill ignored and indicated why, in his opinion, it would not solve the problem of either temporary or chronic unemployment.

There are two types of unemployment. One is chronic unemployment, such as exists in the bituminous coalfields of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and southwest Virginia. The miners in those areas have been priced out of the market. Instead of the previous 500,000 miners, 200,000 now produce all the coal that can be sold. The other 300,000 have no employment, and they do not have any immediate prospects of employment. They have been in that situation for 4 or 5 years, and the condition is getting worse. That is chronic unemployment.

Temporary unemployment is the kind which exists seasonally in Atlantic City, Detroit, and similar areas. One area depends on tourists; the other on the manufacture of automobiles.

If the money provided in the bill is distributed according to where there is the most urgent temporary unemployment, it could all go—every dollar of it—to a few large cities, and still it would not accomplish anything.

Mr. Robert P. Lee, representing the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, at page 283 of the hearings quoted the following paragraph from the report of the Kennedy task force on area redevelopment:

Changes in consumer demand, depletion of resources, changes in defense procurement or in location of defense facilities, decentralization of production, lack of industrial diversification, and technological change are the most important causes of depressed economic conditions in the labor surplus areas.

The witness himself went on to say:

None of the provisions in the bills before you for loans and grants undertake correction or alleviation of the causes cited.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Does not that raise the question of whether it is possible, merely by legislative fiat or legislative declaration, to establish conditions that are not naturally in existence in a community that desires to attract industry?

Mr. ROBERTSON. This bill ignores, first, our history, which clearly proves that our great economic development and our wonderful wealth are built on the system of private enterprise. If anyone has any question about that, all he has to do is look today at Western Germany. Of all the nations in the world, after we gave Western Germany some operating capital, that nation made the best use of the available funds, by doing what the old Jewish prophet said after the return from captivity in Babylon; he said, "Our walls were rebuilt because the people had a mind to work." That is still true; it is necessary to have a mind to work, and also to have capital.

The best way to get capital is to obtain it from private sources—to pool one's resources, and then, perhaps, obtain a loan from a financial institution. A second way to get capital is to borrow it, as we authorize under sections 501 and 502 of the Small Business Act. Under these sections, State and local development corporations can obtain capital from the Small Business Administration.

But the poorest way to get capital is the way provided in this bill. As the Senator from Ohio has said, the Government cannot, by legislative fiat, cause the establishment of a factory for the manufacture of a certain product, merely by making funds available and then saying, "Here is the money that is needed in order to establish the factory. Now take the money and get busy."

Mr. LAUSCHE. My point is that although we could pass legions of laws stating that a particular factory shall succeed, yet if the factory is not close to the consuming market, it will be at a great disadvantage.

Likewise, we could say by law that a certain factory shall succeed; but if it is not close to the necessary raw materials, it is also at a great disadvantage.

Certainly we cannot, merely by legislative declaration, change what is an undesirable atmosphere for the establishment of a business into one that is desirable.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator from Ohio is, of course, correct, in general, although, insofar as closeness to market is concerned, a nylon hose factory is, relatively, closer to the market than is a producer of bituminous coal or cross-ties. The point is that the location must be close enough to make possible efficient delivery.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Of course, because the item of transportation becomes important.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I call attention to the remarks of the Senator from Utah [Mr. BENNETT] on page 671 of the hearings; and I now read part of that statement:

Senator BENNETT. In spite of all these public inducements, some industries chose to locate in areas where there is no rent or tax inducement. This suggests that there are other nonfinancial inducements and advantages that may outpull all of these. I am sure having previously been in North Carolina that you will agree to that, and certainly we in Utah think that is right.

I think the experience in Pennsylvania is very interesting. When Mr. Batt was here with us, or Mr. Davlin, he told us that out of 500 industries that had been induced to locate in Pennsylvania in the last 4½ years only 140, or 28 percent, had located in distressed areas, in spite of the fact that they could have had presumably some of these economic financing advantages.

I would like to put into the record, rather than to ask the Secretary to try and guess, the information I have gathered regarding these other factors. I sent a wire to every State, to their industrial development organization or to the appropriate group that handles this problem and I asked them to list for me the advantages which they offered to industry and what they considered to be the order of priority. I got 47 replies, and 42 of the replies rated reduced rent or financial assistance in building very low; 4 of the 47 rated it in the middle of the list, and only 1 rated it as high as fourth in the list of inducements.

Yet that is the major inducement provided in this bill.

Mr. LAUSCHE. In connection with the bill, Senator BENNETT sent out those inquiries, did he?

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is correct, and the replies are to be found beginning at page 769 of the hearings.

It is very interesting—and I am sure the Senator from Ohio will also find them informative—to read the individual views of the Senator from Utah, which are printed in connection with our report. Senator BENNETT is a successful businessman and a past president of the National Association of Manufacturers. He is a good economist, an able businessman, and a very efficient and effective Senator.

Mr. President, Senate bill 1 is based on the fallacious proposition that business is attracted by low-cost opportunities for production, rather than by high-profit opportunities for distribution. We know, however, that the basic incentive for private enterprise is just the opposite. And yet S. 1, in an effort to reduce production costs—particularly occupancy expenses, which ordinarily are a minor share of total operating outlays—endeavors to resolve all our difficulties by offering Federal loans and grants for industrial and commercial facilities and for related public facilities to any eligible private or public applicant. Federal credit would be made available, under the terms of S. 1, in several hundred areas, including Detroit, Pittsburgh, Atlantic City and San Juan.

THE WRONG TIME

Mr. President, this is no time to enact the wrong kind of legislation. Nationwide unemployment in February reached 5.7 million persons, the highest in two decades. If Federal action is taken now to relieve the unemployment situation, it should be directed toward stimulating a higher general level of production and distribution, rather than channeled toward alleviating unemployment within a comparatively few localities. In this connection, it should be recalled that unemployment in the 103 industrialized areas eligible for assistance under S. 1 represents only 11 percent of total unemployment throughout the Nation.

Earlier this week, the Secretary of the Treasury testified, before the Joint Economic Committee, that a substantial budget deficit would be likely in the fiscal year 1961. The deficit would largely reflect the fact that corporate profits may be as much as $3 billion lower than estimated. Personal income may also fall somewhat short of earlier forecasts.

Any additional legislation, such as S. 1, which would authorize expenditures to unbalance the budget even further, should be considered with the utmost care. Funds should be applied where their results would be greatest. They should not be expended solely in areas which qualify under S. 1 for aid merely by their inability to keep pace with the national rate of economic growth.

AN INEFFECTIVE APPROACH

Not only does S. 1 incorporate the wrong approach at the wrong time; it also is likely to use ineffectively whatever aid is extended.

Consider the case of loans for commercial and industrial facilities. The bill would provide $200 million for commercial and industrial loans over a period of years. Even so, this large Federal outlay would be equivalent to less than 2 percent of total expenditures for new plant and equipment in all manufacturing industries throughout the Nation in a single year. Only last year, such expenditures came to $14.5 billion; this year, $14.1 billion in expenditures are anticipated. These data, of course, exclude any outlays for commercial facilities and equipment.

VAGUE ELIGIBILITY STANDARDS

Because S. 1 incorporates such vague standards of eligibility for aid, assistance extended under it might often be misdirected. According to the mandatory unemployment tests included in the bill, the Administrator of the proposed legislation would have to designate at least 103 industrialized communities as eligible for assistance. Besides these communities, several hundred other localities—including rural areas—would undoubtedly be eligible, although they cannot so far be identified under the loosely worded provisions of the bill.

S. 1 does not indicate how Federal assistance should be allocated among eligible areas. No limit is placed on the amount of loans or grants that could be made to any one project or within any one State. Of the 648,400 unemployed persons in the 103 eligible industrialized areas in January, approximately one-third were in the two cities of Detroit and Pittsburgh. Would Detroit and Pittsburgh then get one-third of all Federal assistance? If Federal aid were spread equally among the 103 eligible areas, each area would receive less than $4 million, regardless of the reasons why its unemployment rate was high and regardless of its potentialities for redevelopment. These cases suggest some of the difficulties inherent in administering the proposed legislation.

RELIEF MAY BE ONLY TEMPORARY

While few, if any, areas would receive substantial assistance under S. 1, there is no guarantee that such aid would be translated into lasting employment benefits. The provisions of the bill require that—

The project for which financial assistance is sought is reasonably calculated to provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment within the redevelopment area wherein such project is, or will be, located.

In view of the fluctuations in employment and unemployment which occur during business cycles—particularly within depressed areas—what permanent alleviation could this bill truly promise?

No immediate relief, however temporary, would be in sight. Many months would pass before aid could be extended through bureaucratic channels, and then incorporated in commercial, industrial, and related public facilities and evidenced by additional employment, if any. Meanwhile, no new blue-collar jobs would be created through S. 1. Many areas originally eligible for assistance might well work themselves out of their difficulties before financial aid was received under the proposed legislation.

UNDERMINES LOCAL INITIATIVE

S. 1 fails to provide for the most effective use of whatever Federal aid could be extended. No mandatory State or local government participation is required toward grants for public facilities, nor are any State or local government funds called for, to help pay for technical assistance. No State or local government aid is necessary to finance the retraining subsistence payments, which might better be classified either as outright Federal aid to education or as unemployment relief underwritten entirely at Federal expense.

Failure to require greater State or local government participation in these programs means that Federal aid, however ineffective, will not go as far as it might if State or local government participation were at least more than nominal. Worse yet, the nominal requirements for State or local financial participation are likely to encourage still greater dependence upon Federal largess.

ANNUAL APPROPRIATIONS

The assistance provided by S. 1, whether loans or grants, should be provided through annual appropriations, rather than through back-door Treasury financing. As now worded, the bill authorizes annual appropriations only for grants. I have already submitted, as I have previously said, and I shall call up, an amendment to finance the entire program through appropriations.

I have long been opposed to using the borrowing authority as a device to circumvent the appropriations process. This device not only bypasses the Appropriations Committee; it also bypasses the basic principle that all money bills must be initiated in the House of Representatives.

Back-door financing programs have already grown to unreasonable dimensions. According to the latest report, the U.S. Treasury in mid-1960 held over $33 billion in securities acquired under congressional authorizations for public-debt transactions covering a variety of Federal programs. Cumulative expenditures under back-door Treasury advances exceeded $114 billion.

Some persons advocate using the borrowing authority for loan programs, and using the appropriations process for expenditure programs. I do not agree with this position. But even the adherents of such a viewpoint should hesitate to fall back upon the borrowing authority for loan programs which would be established under S. 1. The $300 million in loans will be secured, if at all, by second, third, and fourth mortgages. They could be made for long terms—up to 25 years, in the case of industrial and commercial facilities; and up to 40 years, in the case of public facilities.

There is no requirement that they must be amortized. The original bill provided for a small sinking fund of one-fourth of 1 percent per annum of the outstanding principal amount to cover losses on loans for commercial and industrial facilities. The amended bill does not require that even this inadequate amount be set aside as a reserve against bad loans.

Remember, Mr. President, that all loans will be advanced in distressed areas where outside financing is not otherwise available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on reasonable terms. The loans will be extended in connection with redevelopment programs which may or may not succeed over the next 25 to 40 years. They will be made with no required amortization provision and perhaps without any security. How can we hope that any substantial part of these loans will ever be repaid?

What happened under the borrowing authority related to the Defense Production Act may well be repeated here. The Area Redevelopment Administration may become insolvent as a result of having to pay interest on money borrowed from the Treasury which has gone down the drain. The Administration, like those administering the Defense Production Act borrowing authority, may be back before the Congress pleading to have interest waived or cancelled and pleading to have losses forgiven. By that time, it will be too late for the Appropriations Committee or for any other congressional committee to review the programs and to see whether proper caution or discretion has been used. The provision of S. 1 which would require a one-time study and investigation of the program after two years would be a valuable supplement to, but not a substitute for, annual reviews made under normal appropriations processes.

A number of witnesses have testified that the programs to be set up under S. 1 would be essentially experimental. This is all the more reason why loan funds should be made available to the Administrator through annual appropriations which provide for compulsory yearly reviews of program results. Such reviews give an opportunity for better fiscal management by allowing some congressional control over administrative discretion in the timing as well as in the amount of expenditures. This would place the operations of area redevelopment on the same basis as our foreign aid programs as well as many other Federal activities.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The area redevelopment program should be established as an integral part of the Department of Commerce. Administrative powers should be vested directly in the Secretary of Commerce.

The program should not be set up as what is essentially another independent agency, only vaguely associated with the Department of Commerce. Such a proposal is directly contrary to Reorganization Plan No. 5 of 1950, which transferred to the Secretary of Commerce all powers vested in any official within the Department. This transfer, along with a number of others related to different Departments, was in accordance with the recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

These improvements—placing the program squarely within the Department of Commerce and requiring annual appropriations for loans as well as for grants—would strengthen S. 1 considerably. Even so, S. 1 would still represent an incorrect and ineffective approach to the problem, and would be adopted at the wrong time. The bill would still hold no real hope of economic redemption for our depressed areas.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPUBLICAN OPPOSITION TO FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, in the Salt Lake Tribune of March 5 there appeared an article that was released to the press by Dr. Ernest L. Wilkinson, president of Brigham Young University.

In this release Dr. Wilkinson points out he served as a member of the Subcommittee on Education, Science, and Technology of the Republican National Convention, and then also points out that he has conducted a poll of the delegates who attended the Republican National Convention on whether or not those delegates favor and support Federal aid to education.

He states, as a result of his poll, that 96 percent of the delegates are opposed to Federal aid for teachers' salaries, with only 3 percent favoring it, and that 81 percent oppose Federal aid to education, with 18 percent favoring it.

He goes on to point out that he, Dr. Wilkinson, considers it as a mandate of the Republican Party to oppose Federal aid to education.

Under these circumstances, it seems to me very curious that we would have a delegate to that convention pointing out that the platform of the party which was adopted was opposed by 81 percent of the delegates, or at least the ones who responded to the poll.

I call attention to the fact that a Federal-aid-to-education bill has been introduced in this body by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], which is S. 483; that a Federal-aid-to-education bill has been introduced by the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. COTTON], S. 293; and that the senior Senator from Kentucky has introduced a bill, in which he has been joined by the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the minority whip, the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. FONG] and the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], also proposing Federal aid to education.

This fact leaves me rather confused as to the position of the party and the delegates.

I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I have referred be printed in full in the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues, to see if they can understand what is the point of Dr. Wilkinson's statement.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BYU PRESIDENT ATTACKS U.S. AID TO EDUCATION

A "mandate" for the defeat of Federal aid to education was offered Friday by Dr. Ernest L. Wilkinson, president of Brigham Young University, in a Hotel Utah press conference.

The educator-attorney presented results of a personal poll of the 1,331 delegates to last year's Republican national convention, which he said "indicates an overwhelming opposition within the party to Federal aid."

More than 63 percent of the delegates replied to Dr. Wilkinson's poll, he said.

"This response shows that only 3 percent favor and 96 percent are against Federal aid for teachers' salaries. Only 18 percent favor, and 81 percent oppose Federal aid for school construction.

Ballots were sent to the 1,331 delegates, of whom 840, or 63 percent, answered.

Of those answering, 147, or 18 percent, favored Federal aid for school construction, 683, or 81 percent, opposed it.

(Only 23 votes—3 percent of those answering—favored teacher salary help by the Federal Government. In opposition were 810, or 96 percent. One percent cast no ballot on each question.)

He called on "patriotic Americans of both parties in the Congress to defeat this new intrusion of the Federal Government into the last time-honored sanctuary of local and State government—education."

President Kennedy's special message to Congress, calling for a billion dollars a year for 5 years in Federal aid to the schools, Dr. Wilkinson termed "the most seductive legislative recommendation on education ever presented to the Congress."

"Offered with utter disregard of the financial integrity of our Federal Government," he said, "and without even a suggestion as to how the money will ever be raised, the White House scheme flagrantly attempts to marshal public support and purchase congressional votes by:

"1. Holding before each college administrator the additional bill of $350 for each Federal scholarship student on the campus, even though schools have, up to the present, educated these students as a public service.

"2. Making funds available to all the States by completely ignoring the desegregation issue.

"3. Promising a continuation of State and local control even though every responsible legislative and administrative official knows that if Federal Government puts up the money, Federal control is not only proper, but ultimately inevitable."

He characterized the Republican national convention, which adopted a minority report favoring Federal aid to the schools as a "television spectacle," in which it was impossible, because of debate limitations, to present the majority report of the subcommittee on education, science, and technology.

"A majority of that subcommittee opposed the plank on Federal aid to education," he said.

"Because it was virtually impossible for the delegates at Chicago to vote fairly on the subject, he said, Members of Congress should give due consideration to the view expressed by the delegates in his personal poll.

"I am worried about our financial integrity," he said. "While our announced Federal debt is placed near $200 billion, that is just the due amount. Include the accrued debt, and the figure jumps to $750 billion, or a per capita debt in this country of $4,100."

Dr. Wilkinson said that President Kennedy himself announced building need for the schools as 600,000 classrooms in the next 10 years.

THE CLOUDED CRYSTAL BALL— THE MISUSE OF ECONOMIC UNDERSTANDING

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, this week a number of the Government's most eminent economic experts appeared before the Joint Economic Committee: The Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, William McChesney Martin; the Secretary of the Treasury, Douglas Dillon; the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, Walter Heller; and his two colleagues on the Council, Kermit Gordon and James Tobin.

The hearings were extremely useful in providing the committee with information on the policies and programs which the responsible economic policymakers in our Government intend to follow, and ask this Congress to follow.

The Joint Economic Committee had an opportunity to be apprised of the state of our economy and to weigh the wisdom of the policies our economic decisionmakers intend to pursue.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, in the eyes of the press and the public a highly diversionary and very human game was played at the same time. It was the game of asking those policymakers—to predict what will happen in the next few months or years.

Mr. President, in my judgment nothing is more dangerous, although of course nothing is more human. The Greeks loved to consult the oracle at Delphi. The Romans looked into the future by examining the entrails of birds. The Medievalists had their Nostadamus. We have our Farmer's Almanac, our stock market, and racetrack dopesheets. The seers will always be with us. For the one who could achieve that never-never land by lifting the veil of the future only a little, an abundance of riches awaits. But the one who can convince others that he can do so can make a fairly good living out of it.

But the fact is, Mr. President, in the past it has not been given to us to foresee the future, and it is not now—not even in a field that should be so readily subject to determination as the elections, where public opinion sampling should have a far more accurate basis for predicting a vote than even the ablest economists have for calling the turn in this immensely complex economy of ours.

The fact is that economists do not know when or whether or how much the economy will turn, or even the direction. But because they are experts on the economy, they are going to be asked. And because they are human, they are going to answer. Half the time they will be right. If they hedge their replies very adroitly and handle their alibi skillfully, they can easily give the appearance of being right almost all the time.

But Mr. President, this is a dangerous game, because there is a tendency for congressional and administrative policymakers to base policy action, not on the certain and ascertainable facts of the present, but on what the clouded crystal ball shows will be the situation 6 months or a year or even 2 or 3 years from now.

This morning's Wall Street Journal brilliantly nails this weakness of ecoomic forecasting, in its lead editorial. The Journal recalls that economists generally forecast many years of poverty for war-torn Europe after World War II; they also predicted a full-blown depression in America beginning shortly after that war. Of course they could hardly have been more wrong on both scores. As the Journal writes:

Whatever his errors in the past, the economist moves in an aura of certainty when he comes to speak of the future. With his imposing charts, and learned jargon, he seems to be the modern tribal medicine man, who can enthral Congressmen and Senators, Cabinet members and Presidents as he predicts the ups and downs of all manner of human activity. Hearing him, men often rush off in the direction he points. For prescription follows prediction. Despite all the caveats, disclaimers, modest shrugs, and diffident smiles, he has the answer. * * * Sometimes the economist is right; often he's wrong. At most, he is a useful technician, without whom this complex and infinitely varied world would run less smoothly.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial from the Wall Street Journal be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ASSUMPTION OF INFALLIBILITY

It's become commonplace to hear how poorly the postwar growth rate of the U.S. economy compares with the fast-paced growth of several other free nations, notably Japan and West Germany. But it's rarely noted that this overset boom took even the experts by surprise.

Indeed, Prof. Paul Samuelson, one of the country's most vocal economists, recently remarked that the swift postwar upsurge abroad was a phenomenon that no economist "could possibly have predicted."

Most economists, we suppose, would echo Mr. Samuelson's confession of the limits of human foresight. Certainly, caveats about the hazards of predicting human activity are commonly met in economic literature.

Yet equally common is the disregard of these warnings. However candidly Government economists and advisers may acknowledge their fallibility, they nonetheless usually proceed on the tacit assumption that, this time, they know whereof they speak.

Neither the inevitable errors of economic prognosis nor the human propensity to pay only lipservice to one's mistakes would be of great consequence if the economists were merely talking to themselves. But they obviously are not. In the past generation, the economist has left the academic cloister to take a seat of authority in public councils. When he prophesies, men listen and act.

For example, in the immediate postwar years recalled by Professor Samuelson, the United States acted upon the prevailing economic judgment that our war-torn friends and former enemies would be forced to endure at least a generation of poverty while they slowly rebuilt. On the strength of the prediction of a permanent world dollar shortage the United States undertook massive and prolonged foreign aid to prop up the poor and the weak. Yet these gloomy forecasts were exploded by the phenomenal recovery that no economist predicted; the dollar crisis and gold outflow of 1961 are reminders that the economists were wrong in 1945.

And not only wrong overseas, but wrong about this country as well. Looking into their crystal ball in 1945, the economists also warned the Nation to brace for a terrible depression. Congress obediently passed the Full Employment Act, creating the President's Council of Economic Advisers as stewards of the Nation's economy and placing the country's prosperity squarely in the lap of the Government. But the depression turned out to be a boom. So, ironically, the economic advisers who now speak with such authority owe their eminence to the bad advice of their predecessors.

Whatever his errors in the past, the economist moves in an aura of certainty when he comes to speak of the future. With his imposing charts and learned jargon, he seems to be the modern tribal medicine man, who can enthral Congressmen and Senators, Cabinet members and Presidents as he predicts the ups and downs of all manner of human activity.

Hearing him, men often rush off in the direction he points. For prescription inevitably follows prediction. Despite all the caveats, disclaimers, modest shrugs, and diffident smiles, he has the answer. Is the economy sluggish? This plan will pep it up. Is unemployment high? Here are steps toward full employment. Is the rate of growth unsatisfactory? Adopt these measures and the economy will grow at precisely 5 percent a year.

Sometimes, the economist is right; often, he's wrong. At most, he is a useful technician, without whom this complex and infinitely varied world would run less smoothly. Yet he is, by his own estimate, only human, and probably subscribes, at least privately, to the precept of Harvard's John Kenneth Galbraith: "One of the greatest pieces of economic wisdom is to know what you do not know."

That being so, perhaps we ought to take the economist at his word when he confesses his fallibility. And not go dashing off at his suggestion, behaving as though he were infallible.

INCOME-TAX EXEMPTIONS FOR STUDENTS

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the Waterbury-American, one of our fine Connecticut newspapers, recently published an editorial concerning a bill which I have introduced in the last two sessions of the Congress, to provide an additional income-tax exemption of $1,200 for dependents who are students at colleges or universities and for those students who are themselves taxpayers and who are working their way through college.

I am greatly pleased to have the support of the Waterbury-American for this proposal. I believe that this form of aid to education will take care of first things first by making it a little easier for those who are shouldering the cost of higher education to continue to do so.

I ask unanimous consent to have the Waterbury-American editorial of March 4, entitled "Another Attempt," printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANOTHER ATTEMPT

Two years ago, Senator THOMAS J. DODD, Democrat of Connecticut, introduced legislation in the Senate to provide an additional income tax exemption of $1,200 for dependents who are students at colleges or universities. It also provided the same exemption for taxpayers who are themselves students in higher institutions of learning.

Unfortunately the bill, although it had considerable public support, failed to make its way through Congress. The Senator has now reintroduced the measure in the 87th

Congress. We hope it fares better this time. There is no question that the years when their children are away at college are times of extremely heavy financial burden to a vast majority of American families. Increasing costs of tuition, books, room and board, transportation and a great many other items associated with advanced education are making it constantly more difficult for many families to provide a college education, particularly when there is more than one child to be educated.

In a typical small, privately endowed New England college, for example, it was possible 25 years ago to keep a student in school at an average cost of slightly less than $1,000 a year. Today the cost of keeping a student in that same institution for a year runs to about $2,400. Whether the quality of the education is any better now than it was 25 years ago is perhaps debatable, but there is no denying the increased cost which, in the light of present economic trends, is perhaps justifiable.

Parents who make a heavy financial sacrifice to educate their offspring are not merely serving their own ends or those of their children. They are making a substantial contribution to the future of the Nation as well.

The tax exemptions provided in the Dodd bill will lessen the financial burden to a considerable degree, both for parents and for those who are working their way through college. If Congress is truly concerned about aid to education, this tax relief measure should have high priority. We trust it will not be lost this trip, as it was 2 years ago.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, today there are more than 100 areas of chronic unemployment in this country. The larger part of almost 6 million unemployed Americans live in these 100 areas. Some of these depressed communities are in Connecticut, including Ansonia, Bristol, and Danielson. For many of these people, joblessness does not stem from the present recession. It has gone on for years. Thus, we have a problem that is national in scope, that has defied the solutions of local and State governments, that has not responded to the cures which are held to be inherent in the natural workings of the free enterprise system. And we come to the question: Are these areas, and the people in them, to be permanent casualties of irreversible change; or does the Federal Government propose to do what it can to reverse this change?

One answer to chronic unemployment is the area redevelopment bill. It is offered not as a total answer, but as one step. This program would act as a catalyst to stimulate other forces which must be brought to bear, but which are not being brought to bear because of certain removable obstacles.

Many depressed areas have conditions that are potentially attractive to new industry. They have unused factory buildings, cheap real estate, an available reservoir of low-cost labor, and a community sentiment which is anxious to cooperate in every way. But they have deficiencies which often dissuade new industries from moving in. The area redevelopment bill seeks to remedy these deficiencies.

If a depressed community lacks adequate industrial facilities such as water or power or sewerage disposal, this bill will help to furnish them. If the unemployed workers of the community lack the skills to do the job that new industry requires, this bill will help to train them. If the community, blighted by years of poverty, is unable to offer other incentives to a prospective industry, such as capital for plants or machinery, this bill will help to provide those incentives.

And the Federal Government is only one factor in these activities. The program requires the participation of private industry and of local and State governments. Thus, it is not a substitute for local action, but it seeks to bring local action into being and to stimulate its creative forces.

Many theorists of the conservative school believe, on the ground of political principle, that the Federal Government should not interfere in this problem, which they feel is a matter for local government, private business, and the individual decisions of those involved. Many businessmen and economists contend, on the level of practical application, that there are a dozen plausible reasons why depressed areas legislation will never work.

Their arguments have a certain appeal. I agree that the American system of private enterprise has built the greatest of all economic systems; that while Government activities can transfer wealth, they are not always likely to create wealth; that we must depend upon private business to provide most of the 10 million new jobs we will need in the next few years; that changes in the tax laws to encourage risk capital and the purchase of new machinery will probably do more to stimulate our economy than pump-priming Government programs.

I agree with the conservatives in rejecting the philosophy that the answer to every problem facing the Nation is a new Federal program. I am suspicious of the theory that we add to purchasing power by taking money from one man and giving it to another. And I would not willingly take a tax dollar out of any man's pocket to pay for a Federal program unless I felt that a vital national interest required that program.

It is interesting to explore the practical implications of the theory that every man ought to carve out his own life independently by his own deeds, freed as far as possible from Government restraint which hobbles private action and from Government aid which hinders private incentive. It is pleasant to dwell upon the fact that there are more people gainfully employed in the United States than ever before in history, and that the unemployed are only a small, unrepresentative fragment of our population. It is stimulating to reflect that in the days of old, those in depressed areas solved their own problems by migrating thousands of miles to the West and starting anew. It is diverting to take up the case of some particular community which has pulled itself up by its own bootstraps and to ask why all depressed communities cannot do the same. And it is impressive to contemplate the lists of potential obstacles which stand in the way of any Federal program which seeks to solve problems that may be insoluble.

Yet when we are through tarrying with these doctrines, the problem of almost six million unemployed Americans still remains, concrete not theoretical, and crying aloud for solution. When I put aside the books and treatises of those who impressively oppose Federal action in almost any field, I am still confronted with the letters, the conversations, the personal recollections of thousands of people in my own State and in others, people who are out of work, who are facing personal disaster, whose problems cannot be answered by arguments against Federal action.

The remembrance of the wife of an unemployed worker who is daily going from door to door selling dime-store trinkets to keep her family together, or the father who is preparing to leave his home so his children can get public assistance, or the children who are growing up in America in dire poverty and subsisting on meager handouts of surplus food—these images cut through the rhetoric of inaction and bring home more vividly than statistics or theories the fact that these people need help, and if we are to keep faith with them we must act.

One can agree that private enterprise has erected the greatest of all economic systems and still feel that there are serious deficiencies in that system which require some Government action.

One can reject the notion that every problem facing us must be solved by Federal action and yet support some Federal action.

One can share the sentiment that men are responsible for their own well-being; but when men are felled by circumstances plainly beyond their control, are they not entitled to look beyond their own resources for help? And who should provide that help if not their Government?

One can applaud the pioneer spirit, but to what new frontier can millions of unemployed workers migrate? In the absence of a physical frontier, we must create one by our ingenuity and our co-operative action.

One can admit that there are formidable obstacles for the depressed-areas bill to overcome. But all else having failed, must we surrender this final hope because it too may fail?

One can rejoice in the fact that 94 out of every 100 employable Americans has a job but may I quote the familiar words from St. Luke:

What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?

The conservative philosophy in this instance, with all its good points, with all its valid lessons, breaks down because it offers no solution to the pressing, concrete problems being faced by our friends and neighbors. Its answer to the chronically unemployed is that the natural workings of the free enterprise system which got them into their present condition will get them out of it if they do their part. People will not accept this answer, and I cannot accept it either.

I see millions of people living in hopeless circumstances. I believe that natural forces, private efforts and community action have had a chance and have proven unequal to this particular task. The choice, then, is whether the Federal Government, the only agency capable of bringing new resources to bear, should do what it can, realizing that it may fail, or whether it should stand idly by and watch the condition grow ever more desperate.

I am on the side of those who favor Federal action in the form of depressed areas legislation. We are trying to save people, to save families, to save communities, and we feel there is a justice, a rightness, a soundness in this that overrides narrow theories or narrow interests and justifies our taking risks in an untried field.

We must offer real action for real problems, and not plausible excuses for inaction. Free government cannot succeed, and cannot retain the allegiance of people, unless it tries to answer their urgent needs, and no need is more fundamental than the need of a job.

The area redevelopment bill is one concrete answer. It is something new in the relationship of our Government to our people. It is a solid testimony of our determination to improve upon our system until we satisfy the ancient goal of full employment for all who wish to work. We embark upon it hopefully and confidently in the spirit of Franklin Roosevelt who once told us:

Let no man say it cannot be done. It must be done and we have undertaken to do it.

Mr. President, I believe the Senate is ready to pass this bill. I also believe the other body is ready to pass it. I believe the people of our country are ready for it to be passed.

Our distinguished colleague, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], is the one man, in my judgment, who has most of all made us ready for this great undertaking. I am happy to join him in sponsoring, and in furthering this proposal. It is always inspiring to work at the side of this great man, this noble Senator, truly said. Today I feel we are witnessing one of his greatest achievements. I salute him for his work. I hope that we shall be quick about our action, and shall make this a law, at least so far as action in this body can do so.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Connecticut for his very kind, although undeserved, remarks, and wish to say I deeply appreciate what he has said. The Senator from Connecticut has been a most valuable coworker in this whole field, and it is tremendously reassuring to have him with us on this as on so many other bills.

Mr. DODD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the Census Bureau announced yesterday that, according to its estimates, there were approximately 5,700,000 unemployed in the country. On the basis of a crude estimate of the percentage of the working force, this would be well over 7½ percent, and since there is generally a seasonal increase during the winter months, the Census Bureau and the Department of Labor estimate that, corrected for seasonal factors, the percentage of unemployment is approximately 6.8 percent.

There is some question as to whether the seasonal correction which is carried out is statistically accurate in all respects. There are some who think it exaggerates the winter increase in unemployment and that another method, somewhat superior, will give a slightly different figure. But we shall not go into that question, except merely to emphasize what I think the public is beginning to recognize, namely, that unemployment is high in the country. I believe also the prevailing public opinion is that the Federal Government should do something about the problem—not that it can provide the sole solution, as my friend from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] has warned against but that the Federal Government cannot stand apart and allow millions of workers and their families to be progressively pushed down to lower and lower levels of poverty and suffering.

THE DIFFERING TYPES OF UNEMPLOYMENT

I think it is important to realize that the problem of restoring jobs to the 5,700,000 unemployed is not one problem, but rather a series of problems, each one of which requires different treatment.

There is, first, the problem of the recession itself. At the point of highest employment last year or, rather, when unemployment was lowest, we had roughly 5 percent unemployed. The increase in unemployment since then has been caused by the deterioration in business conditions and can be attributable to that factor.

But there is also a second factor, namely, that during the preceding years we had an inadequate rate of economic growth, with the result that from one period of prosperity to another there was an actual increase in the percentage of unemployment. After the post-war recession in 1951 and 1952, at the peak of prosperity, there was unemployment of only 3 percent. After the recession of late 1953–1954 when we moved into the so-called prosperity phase of 1955–1956, there was 4 percent unemployment; and when we came out of the recession period of late 1957–1958 into 1959 and 1960 we had roughly 5 percent unemployment.

In other words, each peak of prosperity was accompanied by a higher level of unemployment, so that each recession began from a higher initial unemployment figure. This was undoubtedly caused by the relatively low rate of economic growth during this period, averaging only about 2½ percent a year, as compared with the long-time historic average of this country of 3½ percent a year, and as compared with the rate of growth in Western Europe of about twice our rate—from 4½ to 5 percent a year—this rate prevailing in the countries of West Germany, the Scandinavian nations, Belgium, France and northern Italy.

So even when we emerge from this recession—and I hope that we shall do so quickly and we will do our best to bring it about—we will be faced with the problem as to whether we can generate an adequate rate of economic growth, not only to absorb the new labor force that is coming upon the market at the rate of 1½ million a year, not only to absorb the increase in productivity per man-hour that will occur, but also to try to reduce unemployment to below the 5 percent rate which existed at the beginning of the present recession. This is the second problem. S. 1 deals primarily with structural unemployment.

The bill which we are now considering, S. 1, the area redevelopment bill, addresses itself primarily to a third problem, namely, the fact that even if we have comparatively full employment in the rest of the Nation, even if we get a moderately adequate rate of economic growth, there will still in all probability be areas which have had high and persistent unemployment over a long period of time—even when workers in the rest of the Nation were comparatively fully employed.

The technical writers on economic subjects sometimes refer to this type of unemployment as structural unemployment, and in a sense, that term is accurate. It deals with areas which have been left behind through one cause or another as economic conditions improve and which have large numbers of workers who cannot find employment.

A year and a half ago there were approximately 50 major and minor labor market areas in this country which were characterized by high and persistent unemployment of the type which is defined in the bill, during a period when we were presumably in the prosperity phase of the business cycle.

Today we know that there are 20 major areas and 83 minor areas where there is substantial and persistent unemployment of the nature which has been described. This is indicated on the first map in the rear of the Chamber, the areas in red showing, roughly, the boundaries of the areas, and identifying labels indicating the chief industrial towns in each area.

These 103 areas have a total population of over 16 million, with a labor force of approximately 6½ million, and with total unemployment of almost 650,000, or an average unemployment rate for the regions of 10 percent. But this, I wish to point out, is only an average rate. If we look at subdivisions of these areas, we find much higher rates.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statistics for these 103 areas of chronic and persistent unemployment be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

¹ Criteria for designating such areas are identical with those in the Douglas area redevelopment bill (S. 1).

² Major areas are areas included in the Bureau of Employment Security's regular area labor market reporting and classification program. This program covers 150 of the country's leading employment centers. Unemployment and labor force data for these areas are generally available bimonthly.

³ Smaller areas: Areas with a labor force of 15,000 or more which are officially classified as "smaller areas of substantial labor surplus." Data for such areas are generally available semiannually. Information for smaller areas which are not classified, or for areas with a labor force of less than 15,000, is not available in Washington on a consistent basis.

NOTE.—Detail may not add to totals due to rounding.

For instance, Johnstown, Pa., has an unemployment rate, according to the most recent figures, of 15.3 percent, or almost 2½ times the present national average.

The Wilkes-Barre-Hazleton area has an unemployment rate of 13.2 percent, or twice the national average.

In my own State of Illinois, the Herrin-Murphysboro-West Frankfort area has an unemployment rate of 14.3 percent. That was as of last August. Since then conditions have grown worse.

In Kentucky, in the Pikesville-Williamson area, the rate of unemployment is 23 percent, or almost four times the national average.

In Maryland, in the Cambridge area, the unemployment rate is 13.6 percent.

In Michigan, Bay City has an unemployment rate of 11.4 percent.

Marquette, in the Upper Peninsula, has an unemployment rate of 10.7 percent.

In Missouri, the Washington area has an unemployment rate of 15.3 percent.

In Montana, Butte has an unemployment rate of 12.1 percent, and Kalispell has an unemployment rate of 13 percent.

The unemployment rate is 15 percent in Gloversville, N.Y., and 14.2 percent in the Ogdensburg-Massena-Malone area.

The unemployment rate is 13.8 percent in the Kittanning-Ford City area of Pennsylvania, and 18.3 percent in the Pottsville, Pa., area. It is 27.9 percent in the Uniontown-Connellsville area of Pennsylvania.

In Tennessee, in the La Follette-Jellico-Tasewell area, the unemployment rate is 13 percent.

The vote is 23 percent in the Beckley, W. Va., area, and in the Bluefield area it is 19.8 percent.

In the Oak Hill-Montgomery area in West Virginia the unemployment rate is 24.9 percent. In the Welch area it is 28.9 percent, almost one out of three workers is unemployed in this area.

West Virginia has been one of the States which has been most severely hit. I wish to commend the two Senators from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH and Mr. BYRD] for the interest which they have taken in this matter.

What are the main causes for high and persistent unemployment in these areas?

Some of these areas have been hit with great severity. What are the reasons? Why do we have this concentration of unemployment in certain areas?

There are a number of reasons. One reason is exemplified by the experiences of the coal industry. There has been some decrease in the total demand for coal, caused by the substitution of gas and oil. Actually less coal was mined last year than in 1937, despite the fact that the economy as a whole has gone forward and the fuel needs have therefore been greater.

I should like to give the figures in that regard. In 1937, 446 million tons of coal were produced. In 1959 only 412 million tons. That was a decrease of about 8 percent. Nevertheless in those 22 years the production in the country as a whole has increased enormously and more fuel was needed. Gas and oil were substituted for coal.

At the same time that this was occurring, the coal mines were being mechanized, both with respect to coal cutting by us of huge claws which reach in and substitute for blasting at the working face, and in moving conveyors, which take the place of coal cars, mules, and horses underground to take the coal up to the mine mouth.

Therefore, the average output per miner per man-day went up enormously. I remember in the 1920's looking over figures, and as I remember it the average output per man-day was then around 3½ tons. The average output per man-day now is well over 12 tons. We have mechanized mines in the State of Illinois where the output per man-day is more than 25 tons.

As a result, the number of men who work in the mines has decreased. In 1937 the total came to approximately 492,000 or a half million. In 1959 the total was just a little under 180,000 or only about 35 percent of the number who had been employed 22 years before.

In my own State of Illinois we used to have 90,000 miners. We now have somewhat fewer than 9,000. I was in West Virginia not very long ago, and I was told that the number of miners had decreased from 140,000 to 35,000. My good friend the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] can undoubtedly supply more accurate figures.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. The decrease in the last 12 years has been from 125,000 to approximately 48,000.

Figures are a little difficult to specify, because the United Mine Workers at this time give a figure of about 38,000 miners who are employed. The United Mine Workers, of course, are referring to the miners who are union members. The Coal Association figures show 48,000 to 50,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As a result there are some coal mines and fields which have been completely closed down. When some mines close down people are completely unemployed in a locality. In other cases one-half or two-thirds of the men are out of work.

This is what has happened to coal mining.

Then there are areas where the natural resources have either been largely exhausted or so depleted that their further production would be at such high cost as to be financially impracticable.

One such area consists of what used to be the great timber region of the United States in northern Michigan, northern Wisconsin, and northern Minnesota. When the legendary Paul Bunyan moved from the East westward, he was supposed to have stopped over in these States. During the latter part of the 19th century this was one of the great timber areas. The timber there has now been largely cut off. There is very little lumbering now being done in those areas.

Another example is the copper-mining regions of northern Michigan around Houghton, and the great Mesabi Range north of Duluth.

Big copper mines were started after the Civil War in northern Michigan, under the ownership and direction of the Calumet-Hecla Mining Co. Today most of the available copper has been mined. What remains is so inaccessible and so deep that it is impracticable, except in wartime, to attempt to mine the copper.

I observe in the chair the distinguished junior Senator from Montana [Mr. METCALF]. Montana was the next State to which the copper industry moved. I shall be very interested if, sometime during the debate, the junior Senator from Montana or his distinguished colleague [Mr. MANSFIELD] will give testimony as to what has been happening to copper in Montana.

For decades, the American supply of iron has been furnished from the rich iron ore deposits north of Duluth, in the Mesabi Range. Those deposits have been mined by the open-pit method, and the iron ore put in ore boats and taken down the Great Lakes to the steel mills of Gary, Chicago, and the other great cities along the Great Lakes, or taken, by one means or another, to Pittsburgh and Youngstown. These mines are being exhausted, and their exploitation is at relatively high cost.

As a result, in the Hibbing area unemployment is serious. In January, 1961, it was 11.4 percent. In the Brainerd-Grand Rapids, Minn., area, the rate is 13.9 percent.

There are other regions in the country—I have merely mentioned a few—where the exhaustion of natural resources has left a stranded population behind.

Then there are the areas from which industry has moved and has transferred to other localities where costs, for one reason or another, are lower. The textile industry is the most lurid example of this type. In my boyhood, the manufacture of wool and cotton was concentrated in the New England States; the manufacture of silk, in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, although some was manufactured in New England. Beginning approximately 40 years ago, these mills began to be closed down, and many of the same companies started production in the South.

There were a number of reasons for this movement of industry. In the case of cotton, closeness to the raw material played a key role. Other reasons were the lower wage scale and, at that time, the fact that the Southern States did not have adequate child labor laws. During the 1920's the millhands worked a longer workweek at a lower hourly rate in the South and hence Southern mills had advantages in lower unit labor costs of production.

This situation has been partially remedied by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, which created national standards below which the working conditions in no individual State could fall. The Fair Labor Standards Act was, to my mind, a very desirable measure. I hope we may improve it with the passage of time.

I think it should be chronicled that the two men who led the fight for the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 were Southerners, namely, our esteemed present colleague, LISTER HILL, of Alabama, and the distinguished former Senator from Florida, Claude Pepper, who represented his State for some 14 years in the Senate, and who was here when I first came to the Senate 12 years ago. The victory of Claude Pepper and LISTER HILL in the Florida and Alabama primaries of 1938 gave the impetus to the passage of the Fair Labor Standards Act. Those two men deserve great credit for carrying the banner in what was presumed to be hostile territory. I am very happy to pay tribute to them for their leadership in this matter.

However, it is also true that the mills in the North were old fashioned and not as well arranged as modern plant design requires. As one who knew the textile towns of New England quite well, I had always thought a three-story building was necessary for the manufacture of textiles. I have seen textile mills in the New England States with as many as four or five stories. This turned out to be an uneconomical way to process cotton or wool. In the South, where land costs were lower, it became possible to build one-story mills and to have a much more efficient layout. As a result, the mills in the new territory could start without the mistakes of the former area and have lower costs, as well.

Thus, New England has suffered greatly from the loss of woolen and cotton manufacturing. Fall River, Lowell, and New Bedford have, year after year, been in the category of labor market areas with high and substantial unemployment. Lawrence has been in that category upon many occasions, as well.

The decline in the textile industry has also hurt Pennsylvania because in Pennsylvania there was a sort of combination of textiles and mining. The women could work in the textile mills, while the men worked in the mines. The movement of the textile industry to the South has created unemployment in Pennsylvania.

Then there are great technological changes, to which I partially referred when I discussed coal mining. Consider, for example, the substitution of diesel engines for steam engines on the railroads. This has created great unemployment in regions which used to manufacture railroad locomotives and in such areas as Altoona, Pa., where the engines used to be repaired. Altoona, for example, has now a 12.3 percent unemployment rate and, year after year, has been an area of substantial and persistent unemployment.

What can the unemployed in these depressed areas do? What can the people in those areas do when their jobs collapse and the industries upon which they depend either close down or employ only a small fraction of those who were formerly employed? I know there are some who say, "Let them go elsewhere. Let them move out. Let them get another job somewhere else. If they do not move, that is an indication that they do not want to work. If they stay, do not do anything for them. Put the pressure on them, so that by slow starvation they will be compelled to go elsewhere."

A leading newspaper in the Middle West gave some advice to the people in southern Illinois. Its editorial stated, in substance, that all that the people in southern Illinois needed was a whole series of one-way railway tickets, so they would get out of the region, and never to return.

My good friend, the Senator from West Virginia, probably has heard that advice given to the people in the coal-mining regions in his State.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. In that connection, Mr. President, I should like to say that 145,000 people have left West Virginia. Many more than that number did leave, but some have returned. But we are still suffering from the absence of legislation such as this measure, to keep others from leaving.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I appreciate the Senator's statement.

I may say that in the 25th Congressional District in Illinois, which includes most of the coal-mining area, in the last 10 years the population has decreased by 40,000; but there still is very high unemployment there.

Now let us examine this contention: Young people can move; and, in general, they do move. But consider the situation of a man who is in his forties or fifties, has grown up in a community, has had a job there, owns a home there, has a family which is dependent upon him, belongs to a church and to fraternal organizations in that community, and has his emotional roots deep within that community.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. And also is out of money.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. And has nothing with which to purchase a transportation ticket or to pay for board or room while he is away, seeking a job.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. And has no shoes to wear while he is away, in another city, seeking a job.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct; and, in many cases, if he fails to get work, since he cannot satisfy the one-year residence requirement neither he nor his children will be able to receive any public help.

The truth of the matter is that people cannot move about with the same impersonality with which it is possible to send a carload of hogs or a carload of steel to another region. Human beings who become deeply attached to their localities become less adaptable as they grow older; and if it is at all possible, they wish to remain where they were born, grew up and lived. Even Adam Smith, the founder of the laissez faire school of economics, said in his book "The Wealth of Nations":

Man, of all baggage, is the most difficult to be transported.

Adam Smith based his philosophy upon depending upon blind economic forces to adjust economic affairs for the best. Incidentally, he was not as much of a laissez faire advocate as many of the modern advocates of laissez faire say he was, and frequently they quote him incorrectly on that subject.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURDICK in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. In connection with what the Senator from Illinois has said, I wish to observe that he will recall that 2 years ago a special subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce made a very thorough and exhaustive study of the decline of the textile industry in the Nation. I recall quite vividly a visit to one of the Northern States in which a considerable segment of the textile industry was located. One of the mills there had closed.

The Senator from Illinois has stated that it is quite difficult to imagine that people will tear up their roots and that a whole family will move from one section of the country to another. Certainly that is easier said than done, because people have very, very intimate relationships with the localities where they have been reared. Here they have lived and have worked and have prayed; and it is not easy for them to move from one part of the country to another.

But what happens as a necessary result, especially when people become 50 or 55 years of age? They find it hard to find a new job, and they end up by having to take a job at inferior wages. That is the plight of a great many persons in many parts of the country. They do not end up by moving to another section of the country; instead, they end up by taking a more menial job, at lower wages; and that is true of many of the people who live in depressed areas.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And some do not get any jobs at all, but, instead, live on hope, on relatives, or on relief. Is not that true?

THE PROBLEMS OF RHODE ISLAND

Mr. PASTORE. That is correct.

If the Senator from Illinois will permit, I should like to address myself to a study made by our Rhode Island Development Council, under the auspices of the Governor, and at his request. The study was made by the Research Division of the Rhode Island Development Council. I have already spoken informally to the Senator from Illinois about this matter. The study comments on the bill which has been reported by our distinguished chairman, who at the present time is managing the bill on the floor. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Illinois; but, first, I should like to read briefly from the study, as a predicate for my question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. PASTORE. From the study, I read the following:

ELIGIBILITY OF RHODE ISLAND FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE UNDER PROPOSED AREA REDEVELOPMENT BILLS

This discussion concerns primarily the Douglas bill, S. 1, which apparently has administration support, and is the most liberal of the three area redevelopment bills thus far introduced in the U.S. Senate. The other two, while differing in a number of particulars, are almost identical in respect to basic provisions for area eligibility.

The Douglas bill offers substantial assistance of various kinds to areas which qualify as redevelopment areas. Such assistance would be of considerable value to Rhode Island, providing the State, or a substantial portion of the State, qualifies as a redevelopment area.

However, available data indicates that the State of Rhode Island, as a whole, would not now qualify as a redevelopment area under the terms of the proposed bill, and that while the Providence-Pawtucket area would qualify in 1961, there is serious question as to whether this area would continue to qualify in 1962.

I understand that, essentially, the bill provides that over a period of three of the last preceding years, the unemployment must be 50 percent over the national average. Is that correct?

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. I further understand that over a period of 2 of the last 3 preceding years, the unemployment must be 75 percent over the national average to qualify.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. Or in the case of 1 of the last 2 preceding years, it must be 100 percent over the national average.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. The situation in Rhode Island has been that we have had a high level of unemployment. But unfortunately there has been, nationwide, a downward cycle of employment, with the result that the level of national unemployment has been rising.

Therefore, in adjusting the unemployment situation in Rhode Island, so it will be in consonance with the national average, we find that the situation in 1962 in Rhode Island might be such that at that time unemployment in Rhode Island might not be 50 percent above the national average.

Under this bill, what will be the situation in the event—as in the case of Rhode Island—that unemployment remains high, but in any event does not fit within the formula of the 50 percent, 75 percent, and 100 percent above the national average?

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is a very good question. Let me say that the administrator must designate as redevelopment areas the regions which have more than 6 percent unemployment and an annual average rate meeting one of the three tests has been stated by the Senator from Rhode Island. But the administrator also will have discretionary power—as provided in the first paragraph of section 5(a)—to designate the areas in the United States in which he determines, upon the basis of standards generally comparable with those set forth in paragraphs 1 and 2, that there has existed substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended period of time.

Therefore he has a zone of discretion beyond the mandatory standards which he could use to include such areas as Providence-Pawtucket, and other places in Rhode Island.

It is a matter of common knowledge that, over a long period of time, Rhode Island has had high unemployment, has drawn down its unemployment reserves, and has suffered probably as much from longtime unemployment as has any place in the Union. While I am not the Administrator and cannot make a pledge in the matter, it seems to me the Administrator would be moving within the spirit and letter of the law to include those areas of chronic unemployment in Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. I realize that the final determination, according to the bill, will have to be that of the Administrator; but am I correct in my understanding of the Senator from Illinois when I say that, even though the situation might arise in the State of Rhode Island where unemployment was at a rate that was considered rather precarious, but which did not fall within the formula of 50 percent, 75 percent, or 100 percent unemployment, on the formula of the preceding years, the Administrator still would have enough discretionary power under the law to designate it as an area to be helped if the unemployment rate remained high, even though it did not fall within the prescribed formula?

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Administrator would have such discretion, although he would not be compelled to do so. That is stated on page 15 of the report.

Mr. PASTORE. Will the Senator read that part of page 15, because I think it is quite important to make a legislative history necessary to guide the Administrator in his discretion?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes. On page 15 of the report, above the midway portion of the page, it reads:

The Administrator may also, at his discretion, designate other areas as eligible for assistance where substantial and persistent unemployment has existed and which have unemployment conditions generally comparable to those of the areas of mandatory designation.

Mr. PASTORE. In other words, even though that percentage figure may not fit in precisely in comparison with the national level, if there has been a persistent unemployment situation in the locality, the Administrator has the discretion and the right to step in if he so deems?

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I may say this provision was written into the bill especially to take into account such situations as those in Rhode Island. The Senator has asked a good question, and I hope the answer has been relatively satisfactory.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the criteria specified in S. 1 for eligibility for assistance be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection the criteria was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

SEC. 5. (a) The Administrator shall designate as "redevelopment areas" those areas within the United States in which he determines, upon the basis of standards generally comparable with those set forth in subparagraphs (1) and (2) below, that there has existed substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended period of time. There shall be included among the areas so designated any area—

(1) where the rate of unemployment, excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal factors, is currently 6 per centum or more and has averaged at least 6 per centum for the qualifying time periods specified in subparagraph (2) below; and

(2) where the annual average rate of unemployment has been at least—

(A) 50 per centum above the national average for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

(B) 75 per centum above the national average for two of the preceding three calendar years, or

(C) 100 per centum above the national average for one of the preceding two years.

The Secretary of Labor shall find the facts and provide the data to be used by the Administrator in making the determinations required by this subsection. Any area in which a substantial part of the employment is or most recently was in an industry adversely affected by the reduction of trade barriers under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, with respect to which the President has reported to the Congress under section 4(a) or 7(c) of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951, as amended, and meeting the standards of unemployment set forth in this section shall be entitled on application to special consideration by the Administrator for designation as a redevelopment area.

(b) The Administrator shall also designate as "redevelopment areas" those areas (including Indian reservations) within the United States which do not meet the requirements set forth in subsection (a) but which he determines are among the highest in numbers and percentages of low-income families, and in which there exists a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment. In making the designations under this subsection and before making any loans as the result of designations under this subsection, the Administrator shall, by regulation, prescribe detailed standards upon which the designations under this subsection shall be based. In the formulation of such standards the Administrator shall consider, among other relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families in the various rural areas of the United States, the proportion that such low-income families are to the total farm families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of the families in each such area to the general levels of income in the United States, the current and prospective employment opportunities in each such area, the availability of manpower in each such area for supplemental employment, the extent of migration out of the area, and the proportion of the population of each such area which has been receiving public assistance from the Federal Government and/or from the State or States in which such area is located or from any municipality therein. In making the designations under this subsection, the Administrator shall endeavor to distribute the projects widely among the several States, so far as is feasible and proper, in order that actual experience with this program may be had in as many States and in as many areas and under as many different circumstances as possible. In making these determinations, the Administrator shall be guided, but not conclusively governed, by pertinent studies made, and information and data collected or compiled, by (1) departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, (2) State and local governments, (3) universities and land-grant colleges, and (4) private organizations.

of agencies as may be appropriate, are authorized to conduct such special studies, obtain such information, and compile and furnish to the Administrator such data as the Administrator may deem necessary or proper to enable him to make the determinations provided for in subsection (b) of this section. The Administrator shall reimburse when appropriate, out of any funds appropriated to carry out the purposes of this Act, the foregoing officers for any expenditures incurred by them under this section.

(d) As used in this Act, the term "redevelopment area" refers to any area within the United States which has been designated by the Administrator as a redevelopment area and may include one or more States, one or more counties, or one or more municipalities, or a part of a county or municipality.

Mr. PASTORE. In conclusion, I congratulate the Senator from Illinois for his fine efforts on behalf of the people of this country, the very fair and exhaustive study he made before Congress convened in January, the diligence with which he has persisted since then in working out rough spots in committee, and the fine presentation he is making on the floor.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from Rhode Island.

I think it follows, therefore, Mr. President, that, in spite of the pressure upon people to leave these areas, a great many persons are not going to leave and we shall have the very real problem of what to do with them.

The waste of social capital from forced mass evacuation of the distressed areas.

But there is another reason why I favor this redevelopment bill, aside from taking care of the human problem. If the people do move, in the areas into which they migrate, new social facilities or new social capital will have to be constructed. Investment which will be lying idle in the communities from whence they came, and which, if jobs could be brought to these people at home, could be more fully utilized.

Let me illustrate what I mean. Men need industrial capital with which to work—land, buildings, plant, machinery—but they also need social capital with which to live, namely, housing, schools, sidewalks, streets, water systems, sewer systems, power systems, churches, and, yes, retail stores. If there is a mass migration of people from depressed communities into other areas—and, incidentally, it is not at all certain they are going to find jobs elsewhere—there will have to be provided for them, in the new areas, new housing, schools, churches, streets, sidewalks, water and sewer systems, electric light and power systems, telephones, and other facilities, which will be left lying idle in the communities from which they came.

I have not had time to compute the average amount of social capital per person as compared with the average amount of industrial capital per person, but I can say the investment in social capital is much greater than most people realize. It is said that it takes $15,000 in manufacturing to provide one job. In addition there are many persons in nonmanufacturing jobs where the ratio of capital to labor is lower.

To make a rough guess, I would doubt very seriously whether the amount of industrial capital per person—not merely per worker, but per person—is more than $4,000 or $5,000. Now, let us consider the amount of social capital per person. The average family of four needs a house that costs about $12,000. That is $3,000 per person right there. School buildings have an average cost, I suppose, of around $1,100 or $1,200 per pupil, and, therefore, several hundred dollars per person.

I think Luther Gulick estimated that the cost of public facilities, and presumably he meant sidewalks, streets, and other facilities, came to about $1,100 per person. Then if we include churches, fraternal organizations, retail organizations, and so forth, I think it will be found that the cost of social capital per person is greater than the cost of industrial capital per person.

If there is a mass migration, which so many people wish to see, the new facilities of all sorts are going to have to be constructed in the areas into which the people move. The question I ask is, Is it not more economical, as well as more humane, to try to bring some jobs to the people in those localities, rather than compel all the people to go elsewhere, hunting for jobs which may not exist?

WHAT WE ARE TRYING TO DO

That is all we are trying to do. We are trying to bring some jobs back into these areas of high and persistent unemployment, and by doing so to infuse new blood into the economic lifestream of the communities, to start production going again so that people who are today unemployed will have jobs and will receive wages. If they have wages they can buy more in the retail stores. They can pay taxes. They can contribute to churches. Those who receive this income, in turn, respond it.

Of course, there are limits to this process. We do not claim to have discovered the secret of economic perpetual motion, but I think it is not far from the truth to say that there is a multiplier involved here of probably three and certainly a multiplier of two. If we create a million dollars worth of production and wages in a community, that will result in a total of some $2 million to $3 million more of income, and will really put new fresh lifeblood into the area.

I wish to make it clear that we are not trying to freeze the population. The charge has been made that S. 1 is an attempt to freeze the existing population and to prevent the migration of labor. This is not the case. We know migration is going to continue, particularly in the cases of the younger workers. We do not pretend that we are going to give jobs to every unemployed person in these localities. That would not be true, and we are not trying to sell the bill on any false set of claims.

We do say, however, that something should be done, that these communities should not be allowed to wither on the vine if there is a chance for them to survive. We should not abandon the people in these communities without trying to help them, and the most effective way to help them is by helping them get jobs.

Moreover, there are heavy hidden costs which result from unemployment. Unemployment compensation has to be paid. There is the cost of relief, and of surplus foods.

God bless our President for increasing the amount of available surplus foods. The Senator from West Virginia read into the RECORD last year cases demonstrating the hardship of certain people, and one case, at least, concerned a man who died from malnutrition in a hospital in West Virginia. "Malnutrition" is simply a fancy name for slow starvation.

We have a President who met this situation as best he could. Instead of 3.5 million people who were receiving surplus foods as of a few months ago, there are now 6.1 million people receiving this assistance, and each person is receiving approximately twice as much food as was being given before. This action has been criticized, but I think it shows that the administration is determined to do everything it can to prevent the people of the Nation from starving.

However, the best thing to do in the long run is to provide work for people—not charity, but work. If we can provide work, we will decrease the amount of relief; we will decrease the amount of crime; we will decrease all of the problems which afflict these areas.

The young people in these communities often get in trouble, too. There is no work for them to do. They walk the streets. When there is a recession elsewhere and they cannot find jobs elsewhere, a lot of them get into trouble and may end up in jail, particularly if they are destitute. The poor boy who gets into trouble has his name placed on the police books. This may be a black mark against him for the rest of his life.

Mr. President, I submit that it is not only humane, but it is also sound economics to try to bring some jobs to these unemployed people. That is what S. 1 tries to do.

I do not wish to make extravagant claims for the bill. It will not solve all of the structural unemployment. It will not reduce this recession. As we make clear in our report, S. 1 is not an anti-recession measure. We have other measures before us to deal with the recession. The speeding up of public construction, the lowering of interest rates, the increase in the duration of unemployment compensation benefits are all proposals to reduce the recession's effects and generate recovery.

This bill is not an antirecession measure, but it is a measure to channel a larger share of future economic growth into areas which in the past have not had a proper share of our growth, and which as a result have high and persistent unemployment. It looks toward the future, toward the longrun future.

THE PREVIOUS VETOES OF THE BILL HAVE BEEN SERIOUSLY INJURIOUS

We would have been in a much better economic position right now if the bill had been approved by the previous President of the United States. Senators may remember that I first introduced the bill in 1955. The bill passed the Senate and went to the House of Representatives in the concluding days of 1956. Though virtually every offer was made by us to get any kind of a bill passed by the House of Representatives, the leaders of the Republican Party and the Cabinet would not consent to having the bill brought up in the House, and it died.

In 1957, I introduced the bill again. The bill passed the Senate. It was passed by the House in 1958. It was pocket vetoed by President Eisenhower in the late summer of that year.

In 1959 I again introduced an area redevelopment bill. Again it passed the Senate. The bill went to the House of Representatives, and in a revised form it was passed by the House of Representatives in 1960. We accepted the House amendments in order to get something done. The bill went to the President, and he vetoed it in a stinging, denunciatory message which I characterized at the time, and which I characterize now, as ill-informed and inhumane.

We took this issue to the country last year. The Democratic candidate for the Presidency advocated this measure in virtually every State of the Union. I advocated it in my own State. We were bitterly opposed. The voters, I think, have demonstrated their opinion.

I shall not speak of my own majority except to say it indicated, I think, that the voters of Illinois, in spite of what some newspapers said about me, wanted to have me continue for another 6 years in this body.

We, therefore, come before the Nation and before the Congress with a popular mandate to pass this bill.

The people who have opposed this measure in the past are still opposing it. If they cannot oppose it outright, they will try to cripple it by amendments which will make it ineffective in practice.

The same old list of opponents appeared against the present bill. There were representatives of the National Association of Manufacturers, an association which has opposed almost every constructive public measure for the last 30 years. There were representatives of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which had a short period of grace when Eric Johnston was head of that organization but which has relapsed now, so that the organization is almost a carbon copy of the National Association of Manufacturers. The big manufacturing and financial interests of the Nation, are still opposed to the bill determined that the Government shall not relieve human misery.

I will put it as boldly as that. If perchance popular sentiment is so strong that the people of the Nation insist that something be done to relieve human misery, the opponents will seek to make the attempt as ineffective as possible, and offer crippling amendments which they believe will hamstring the measure.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. I compliment the distinguished Senator from Illinois for his able and informative presentation this afternoon. North Dakota is an agricultural State and not an industrial State, but there are in North Dakota four Indian reservations in which there is substantial and persistent unemployment. I compliment the Senator from Illinois for including in the bill the right of the Administrator to designate Indian reservations as redevelopment areas.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from North Dakota, and I am glad that he has, with his usual alert eye, noticed that fact. I have visited a great many of the Indian reservations in the country, and I have seen some abject poverty. This is not true of all Indian reservations. A few tribes have struck oil; others have rich timberlands. However, in the main they are areas of abject poverty. We have not treated those Indians properly. We intend to try to help the Indian tribes as well as other communities. I thank the Senator from North Dakota.

RURAL AREAS OF LOW INCOMES AND HIGH UNDEREMPLOYMENT

Hitherto, I have been discussing the industrial areas of the Nation, but the problem of rural poverty and rural underemployment is as great as the problem of industrial poverty and unemployment. In fact, I think there is more rural poverty in this country than industrial poverty. The bill is aimed at helping those areas as well.

Some years ago the Department of Agriculture made income studies of rural counties in the Nation, and about the same time, the distinguished junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] conducted a very able investigation for the Joint Committee on the Economic Report of rural poverty. I hope he will speak on this subject later in the debate. That investigation showed that there were hundreds of counties in the Nation where a very large proportion of the farm families had net incomes of less than $1,000 a year, and gross farm income of less than $5,000 a year.

One can measure unemployment in the industrial cities and towns rather easily, but it is very hard to measure underemployment on the farm. But we do know there is much underemployment or idle labor in the farm household, which could be harnessed to more useful work. During the off seasons, unemployed farmers, who work in the fields during the farm seasons, but in the wintertime or after harvest are relatively idle, could perform useful work, producing income for the family and producing goods for consumers.

The Secretary of Agriculture has estimated that there is enough underemployment each year among workers 20 to 64 years of age who live on farms to equal a full year of unemployment for 1,400,000 workers.

S. 1 WOULD SERVE BOTH INDUSTRIAL AND RURAL AREAS

The bill has dual purposes. It has a program for the industrial areas of high and persistent unemployment. It also has a program to bring employment into the rural areas of low farm income and high unemployment. The second chart at the back of the Chamber shows where, in 1955, such counties tended to be located. The most severe cases are shown in red; the next most severe are shown in blue; and the still less severe, but still low income cases, are shown in yellow.

These conditions of hardship exist in northern Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, running into Pennsylvania, and over in the West in Montana, southwest Oregon, and Washington; but they are chiefly concentrated in the Southern States, particularly in the regions with a high percentage of Negro farm workers. Conditions are also severe, especially in the Appalachian highlands, among the poor white population.

I have been appealed to by many industrial sections of the North to throw this group overboard and to confine the bill entirely to the industrial areas. I must say that some very plausible political arguments have been made. I have been told, "Senator, though your bill provides more aid to the Southern States than probably to any other section of the country, you have never had much political support from the South. When this bill has been considered before, the familiar bipartisan coalition has voted against it. The vast majority of Southern Senators and Representatives have voted against it. You are not going to get any support by providing benefits for Southern areas in the bill. The Representatives of that section will vote against you this time as they always have voted against you, even though their own section may benefit more than any other. Why fight the battle for others?"

I must admit that, my fingers having been often burned in this very way upon occasion. I have found that argument tempting. But I decided against it, and I am happy to say that my colleagues from the north have decided against it. We do not want merely a sectional measure. We want a national program which will assist in meeting the need wherever it exists, in the South as well as in the North. If the poor farmers of the South are in need, we wish to help them, even though some of their own representative will not do so. We will not abandon the people of the South. We hope that the logic of the bill and the facts of the situation will make an appeal to Senators and Representatives from those States. We hope that the votes this time will be different from what they were in 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, and 1960.

The test will come either tomorrow or in the next few days. In any event, the representatives of the North have refused to sell out the people of the South. We will continue to refuse to sell them out, because we wish to adopt a national point of view, and we want to provide assistance wherever it may be needed.

Perhaps that is enough for an introduction.

In what specific ways are we trying to attract new industry into the areas which have not had an adequate share of the economic growth and an adequate share of the economic prosperity, when the rest of the Nation is being privileged?

CONTENTS OF S. 1

The first, and perhaps the most important feature of the bill is low interest rate loans to private industry. We set up revolving loan funds of $200 million, one fund of $100 million for the industrial sections, and another $100 million fund for the rural sections of the country, the money to be loaned to new industries or to expand existing industries, so that they can create more jobs. The loans are to be made on land and buildings and, in cases of proven need, on machinery and equipment.

Loans cannot exceed 65 percent of the cost of land and buildings or, in the case of proven need, of machinery and equipment. I emphasize that it cannot exceed 65 percent, because it may be less, and I would hope that in most cases it would be less.

The State or locality or a nonprofit private organization must put up at least 10 percent of the project cost. At the same time they must present an approved economic plan for the region, so that there can be a systematic development, and not merely helter-skelter financing of new plants. The localities must organize to help themselves, and must put up some money of their own.

In addition, private sources must put up at least 5 percent, but, of course, in practice, they will have to put up much more than that, because there will seldom be cases of States contributing more than 10 percent.

Even if the National Government were to put up 65 percent, it would leave 25 percent to be made up by private agencies if the State made the minimum contribution. To the degree that the Federal Government would put up less than 65 percent, the residue would have to be made up by private parties. The entire cost of working capital would have to be borne privately—plus the investment needed for materials and for payrolls.

What we are really trying to do, Mr. President, is to provide seed capital to start private industry, local groups, local banks, lending institutions, insurance companies, and the rest to generate constructive activity. We hope that for every Federal dollar there will be unlocked and made available many private dollars.

I can cite an illustration of what can be done by indicating what happened in the city of Chicago. The city and county governments decided to build a civic center. They decided to locate their city and county offices in this center, and in that way save enough in rent not only to pay the interest, but also the amortization on an investment of $65 million. Private banking interests agreed to float $65 million in bonds, and the bankers said they had the people who would buy the bonds, but that they would not provide any money for architectural drawings. However, without architectural drawings they would not float the bonds.

Things were stalemated. However, 2 days after Robert Weaver became head of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, a temporary loan of a million and a half dollars was made to the city and county for architectural drawings. That money is to be repaid out of the $65 million bond issue. We are going ahead with the civic center, and we have pledges from real estate owners in a wide surrounding area that they will carry out improvements.

In my judgment, well over $100 million of investment is going to be unlocked because of a loan of a million and a half dollars which, if it had not been made, would have stymied the whole enterprise.

So what we are trying to do here is to provide seed capital to get these projects for growth started. We would provide \$100 million for industrial areas, and \$100 million for rural areas, to bring in new industries and provide off-farm employment, such as the processing of farm products produced in the area. The interest rate is to be one-half of 1 percent above the interest rate on Government bonds of comparable maturities, the loans not to be for more than 25 years. At this time a 25-year Government loan bears an interest rate of approximately $3\frac{3}{4}$ percent. This would mean a lending rate of $3\frac{3}{4}$ percent plus $\frac{1}{2}$ percent or $4\frac{1}{4}$ percent. Private capital either would not be loaned at all or it would bear an interest rate of $6\frac{1}{2}$ or 7 percent. There is nothing new in this approach. This is the system which we have used to assist foreign economic development. We have not only been lending money abroad, but we have been making grants also, to start steel mills in Turkey and fertilizer plants and big dams in other parts of the world. Even though I have had some doubts, I have voted, with one or two exceptions, for this program, because I thought it was in the interest of world peace.

The former administration favored such a foreign aid program. All we are trying to do is to apply these same principles to help Americans here at home. I want to help Iranians and Iraqians and Turks and Pakistanis and Indians and Afghans and Congolese and Nigerians. I have every desire to help them. But I hope I will not be regarded as being parochial when I also want to help Americans. The previous administration which so strongly supported foreign aid which I also supported, wanted to skimp on any domestic assistance for hard pressed people at home.

I believe it is time that we treated our people at home with at least a fraction of the concern with which we treat people abroad.

I wish to emphasize again that I am not railing against foreign aid. I have always supported it, and I expect to support it. However, I marvel at those who will make passionate speeches in favor of foreign aid, and then will oppose a program like the one we are now considering. I do not question their sincerity. I do question their consistency. It has been extraordinary to see them vote area redevelopment in the past.

May I also point out that these loans, either for the industrial areas or for the rural areas, will not be made unless private capital is not available on reasonable terms. This is to be the last resource for loans not the first resource.

PUBLIC FACILITIES

In addition to the two revolving loan funds, one for $100 million for private development in the industrial areas and one for $100 million for private development in rural areas, the bill contains some provisions for public facilities. Another revolving loan fund of $100 million is to be loaned to localities for the construction of public facilities for industrial and commercial purposes. These are facilities which will help the area to attract and retain industry and to create and hold jobs.

Let me illustrate this part of the program by a description of what happened in the southern part of my own State of Illinois. At that time Congressman Keller represented the district. The area was suffering from a lack of water. Drinking water in times of drought was brought in by railroad tank cars. There was very little manufacturing industry there. Such manufacturing industry as there was, threatened to leave. Representative Keller sought assistance everywhere. He sought help from the WPA, from PWA, and from the CCC. Wherever there was an idle supply of labor or available capital, he succeeded in getting it, and a little creek was dammed up to create a lake. Representative Keller's opponents called this project "Keller's Frogpond" "Keller's Folly," and predicted it would come to no good end. But the lake was created.

Since then, the present Representative from the district, Representative GRAY, and I have succeeded in getting two supplementary lakes created. The lake, in the first place, provided drinking water for three communities and satellite towns. Second, it provided a supply of raw water, which helped to attract a number of industries employing several thousand people. Third, when the war came along, the fact that there was available labor and water led the War Department to establish an ordnance plant there. After the war, when the ordnance plant was discontinued, the buildings, together with access roads, water and sewer connections, and power connections remained, and the buildings were available to attract a series of small industries. The industries came, and jobs have been provided for some 3,000 persons in these buildings.

The existence of the water induced the REA cooperatives to ask for and obtain a loan to build a generating plant, which will reduce power costs in the area and assist production. This never would have been possible if the water had not been available for condensing purposes.

The lake has also provided recreation facilities. It has drawn tourists. It is very poorly conducted by the Fish and Wildlife Service. It is not properly managed, I might say, by the Fish and Wildlife Service. However, in spite of that, it has drawn tourists, and around that lake motels and restaurants have sprung up. So in spite of the decrease in coal mining, there has been a reinfusion of life into that area. It was this activity which helped to give me the idea for the area redevelopment bill.

Public facilities in the form of industrial water are needed to help attract industry. A great many industries need large amounts of water. They will not come unless there is water. This is notably true of the aluminum industry, but it is true of other industries, as well. Furthermore, the ordnance buildings were really constructed as an industrial park. They could be subdivided for small business. Small business could obtain a loan, come in, and have all the facilities ready, without having to make capital investment which would otherwise have been required. In a sense, therefore, public facilities provide some of the external economies which Alfred Marshall, the celebrated English economist, spoke of so often.

So the bill has provided for a $100 million revolving loan fund for public facilities of this type, which will add to the possibility of attracting and retaining jobs in the area, not to be frittered away on nonessential improvements. The rate of interest is to be the same as the eloquent and able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] has urged in the case of educational loan funds, namely, the average rate on all Government securities, short-term as well as long-term. There is some confusion in the present language on this point but we can straighten it out with a committee amendment.

Some communities, however, are unable to meet the local capital contributions, so we have provided a $75 million grant fund to augment the loan fund. These are three of the four principal provisions in the bill.

In addition, we well know that coal miners and textile workers who have been laid off, and who have no possibility of returning to their former employment, need to be retrained for new jobs. Therefore, we have included an occupational retraining section providing for $4,500,000 annually to meet these costs. The retraining is to be conducted not only in the industrial areas but in the rural areas, as well, and for jobs which may come into these areas and for jobs outside the areas, as well. Thus we will increase the mobility of labor.

We also provide an allowance for subsistence payments for people while they are being retrained. This amounts to $10 million.

Next we provide $4,500,000 for technical assistance. We gave the technical assistance under the point 4 program to many of the nations of the world. Why not give it to areas of distress at home?

That is one explanation of the principal features of the measure, Mr. President. We provide a $300 million revolving loan fund and $94 million in authorizations for continuing appropriations.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Attempts will be made to cripple the bill by amendments. This, I think, may be the biggest danger which we face in the days ahead.

There is a difference of opinion as to what agency should administer the act.

In the bill which the Senate has always passed previously, there was a provision for an independent Administration under an Administrator appointed by the President. Attempts were made in the past to substitute the Department of Commerce for an independent Administrator. I am happy that, with the aid of the distinguished previous junior Senator from Massachusetts, now the President of the United States, we have always been able to beat back such amendments. But I notice lying at the desk such an amendment submitted by the able junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT].

I have felt very strongly that it would be far better to have the bill administered by an independent agency. That was the opinion of almost all those who really advocated the bill. I do not wish to say, and I shall specifically disavow any such statement, that all those who are in favor of administration by the Department of Commerce are opposed to the bill. But I do say that everyone who is opposed to the bill is in favor of its administration by the Department of Commerce.

The National Association of Manufacturers is in favor of the Department of Commerce; it is also opposed to the bill. The United States Chamber of Commerce, which is opposed to the bill, has stated that if there is to be a bill, let it provide for administration by the Department of Commerce.

I shall not call the roll, but virtually every Senator on our committee—who has in the past been opposed to the bill, and who at present is lukewarm toward the bill, is in favor of administration by the Department of Commerce. The friends of the measure are in favor of an independent Administration. Why is this? It is not due to any prejudice against the Secretary of Commerce, former Governor Hodges, of North Carolina.

We like him very much; we think he is a very fine man. We have no prejudice, quite the contrary, against the Under Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Edward Gudeman, formerly vice president of Sears, Roebuck & Co., in Chicago. To the great credit of the United States, he now serves as the Under Secretary of Commerce.

Similarly, we have no criticism of Hickman Price, Jr., who only recently has given up a salary of over $100,000 a year, in order to serve as an Assistant Secretary of Commerce. They are very fine men, and we have no objection to them. Quite the contrary.

But we should recognize the applicability to this situation of two considerations. The first is that men may come and men may go, Secretaries of the Government departments and Assistant Secretaries of the Government departments may come and may go, but the bureaucrats go on forever; and the bureaucrats in the Department of Commerce have fought this measure consistently, year after year. They have provided the previous Secretaries of Commerce with the arguments which have been used against the bill. They have been the ammunition manufacturers and the ammunition passers of the opposition. They are experts in slow strangulation. No matter how zealous the new Secretary, the Under Secretary, and the Assistant Secretary may be, the civil service bureaucrats will be all around them. Even though the Secretary, the Under Secretary, and the Assistant Secretary take the wings of the morning and fly to the uttermost parts of the sea, even there the bureaucrats will be by their side.

But that is not all: There is attached to the Department of Commerce a mysterious body known as the Business Advisory Council. It consists of 60 members. The Council meets periodically. Its chief meeting is held in the spring, at the beautiful resort of White Sulphur Springs. There in secrecy and in splendor, the Council meets, and invites to meet with it various representatives of the Government, who, I presume, sleep there and eat there at the expense of the Council. I do not know whether they drink there at the expense of the Council, but let us say they quaff the waters of White Sulphur Springs in company with the 60 members of the Council and also in company with the honorary members and the graduate members.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a list of the members of the Business Advisory Council.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I do not propose to launch into a biographical sketch of each and every member of the Council. Doubtless they are worthy men. Some of them may, on occasion, indulge in a little price fixing as recent revelations have shown, but I am sure they want to be good citizens. But I do say that the list of members of the Business Advisory Council is similar to the list of the inner circle of the National Association of Manufacturers and the inner circle of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. The Council is a mysterious organization. Its debates and decisions have never, so far as I know, been published. There is a rather strict secrecy ban on what the Council does. But it is well known that the Council has a great deal of influence. These are the people who have fought area redevelopment from the very beginning. I, for one, am reluctant to give to them a power of inaction or a power of sabotage, a power to strangle this measure, for which we have fought for years, but which they have always opposed.

At our committee meeting last week we reached a compromise which is fair to the great former Governor of North Carolina, who now graces the Department of Commerce as its Secretary. Yet the compromise provides the internal push and drive which is so badly needed. We propose to give the administration to a separate Area Redevelopment Administration, located within the Department of Commerce. The Department of Commerce will perform the housekeeping functions. In addition, the able and distinguished Secretary of Commerce will be chairman of the Business Advisory Council, and will have the power to designate a management-labor committee, and will be given honor and a share of responsibility. But an executive, appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, will "run the show." I think that plan combines the advantages of both proposals. It should be satisfactory to those who have advocated that the administration be in the Department of Commerce; but I notice that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] has an amendment to put all of it in the Department of Commerce, and to take away any independent administration whatsoever. Apparently he is not for the moderate compromise to which the majority of the committee agreed.

ANNUAL APPROPRIATIONS VERSUS TREASURY FINANCING

Another issue which will arise is in regard to the method of financing the $300 million for the revolving loans. We provide for financing by so-called Treasury issues—in other words, that the Treasury shall borrow the money in the open market and then shall reloan it to private industry, at one-half of 1 percent higher than the rate the Treasury pays. These will not be expenditures; they will be investments. They will be different from an appropriation for a payroll or for the purchase of food or guns. Instead, they will be an economic investment. If corporations were to carry on these activities, they would float bonds, and then would relend the money. Inasmuch as these are investments, we believe it proper for the Federal Government first to borrow the money, and then reloan it. That will be in conformity with sound principles of governmental and private finance. It will enable those who will be in charge of the program to arrange their program over a period of years, instead of having a new program each year. How often have I heard that argument used by the eloquent and distinguished junior Senator from Arkansas, in speaking in favor of the Development Loan Fund. He has convinced me on that point, and I shall support him in connection with the proposal that the Development Loan Fund be financed on a long-term basis. I hope he will support us in our attempts to have similar American ventures financed on the same basis.

Of course, annual appropriations can also be tripped up at any moment. If it is not permissible to arrange for a permanent or a long-term program, those in charge of the administration can be hurried; as the time when the appropriation is to be made approaches, there will be a rush either to loan the money or otherwise expend it before the Appropriations Committee swings the ax. There are many other difficulties which I think it more polite not to go into at great length at this time. But they are obvious to those who have served for any length of time in either the Senate or the House of Representatives.

Yet an attempt will be made to have S. 1 financed by annual appropriations.

Frankly, if that is done, it will probably mean the annihilation of the bill as an effective measure.

OTHER HOSTILE AMENDMENTS

Then there will be an attempt to strike out assistance for rural sections. Let me say I do not intend to abandon the rural sections. I do not intend to abandon the South, even though the representatives of the South may abandon the South.

There will be an attempt to have the act live for only 2 years, and then have it die at the end of those 2 years. I believe the distinguished senior Senator from Connecticut has an amendment to that effect.

Mr. President, this, in effect, means legal infanticide. Infanticide is a horrible crime. Murder is bad under all conditions. The murder of infants is particularly reprehensible. But here is a proposal to murder the bill after 2 years. I wish to say that legal infanticide is absolutely wrong, and unworthy of the great Senator from Connecticut who is sponsoring the amendment.

Then there is a proposal which I call "Pass the biscuits, Pappy." It proposes that every State in the Union must have an approved rural project. When sponsor of that amendment, the senior Senator from Connecticut, was asked why Rhode Island, which is not a farming State, should have rural redevelopment funds, he mentioned the chicken industry of Rhode Island, which, he said, was badly in need of stimulation. I see in the chair the distinguished junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], and I know he is a fairminded man. I do not think he believes the Rhode Island Reds need relief from these funds. There are not many Reds in Rhode Island, anyway, and the Rhode Island chicken can stand on its own two feet and fear not any man. [Laughter.]

SUMMARY

Mr. President, I think I have adequately explained the bill. I have tried to introduce a few touches of obvious humor into the proceedings, but this is not a laughing matter. There are hundreds of thousands of people in the depressed areas out of work, who probably never will get back to work unless we bring them aid. We are proposing to bring them aid in the American way, through private industry, with the Government serving merely as a catalyst. We believe this measure will stimulate industry, and, while it will not pull us out of the recession, it will remove some unemployment; and by putting people who are idle, to work producing goods, which would otherwise not be produced, it will increase the longtime product of the Nation, and somewhat increase our rate of economic growth.

Mr. President, let me, in conclusion, quote the statement of the present President of the United States when he received the Special Task Force Report on Area Redevelopment, which I had the honor to submit to him at the end of December. I now quote President Kennedy:

It would be a mistake to consider the problems of chronic unemployment and underemployment solely in the context of the areas directly affected. The entire Nation suffers when there is prolonged hardship in any locality. This problem is especially critical today, for 1 out of every 10 persons in the United States lives in an area that now feels the impact of chronic unemployment or underemployment.

May I add some figures to that statement? I have said there are over 16 million people in industrial areas of high unemployment. If we take the rural communities of extremely low farm income and high unemployment, we get 4 to 6 million more. We have, therefore, from 11 to 13 percent of the Nation living in those areas. Let us try to help these people here at home and do it in an effective fashion.

I am not ready to write these people off the map and shut the gates of mercy upon them.

So, Mr. President, while there have been very few Senators on the floor to listen to my speech, because Senators are necessarily busy on other matters, I hope it may be read, and that when we begin discussion of the bill, and, further, on tomorrow or Monday, consider some of the amendments that are proposed, these arguments may at least be considered for what they are worth.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia obtained the floor.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOPER. I appreciate the Senator's yielding to me. I assure him I shall not speak more than a few minutes. I do want, however, at the beginning of this debate, to express my support of Senate Bill 1. This is not a new position for me. In 1958 I joined the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] and other Senators in cosponsoring a similar measure; and in 1960 I again joined the Senator from Illinois in introducing a bill which was in almost the same form as S. 1, on which debate has opened today. And I was glad this year when the Senator from Illinois asked me to be one of the cosponsors of this bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. May I say no one has been a more devoted supporter of this measure than the Senator from Kentucky. In season and out, he has worked for this bill.

Mr. COOPER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DOUGLAS. At times when I have doubted and have asked myself, "Can I be on the right side?" when there have been so many opponents, I have taken courage from the fact that the noble Senator from Kentucky favored the measure, and that gave me added faith and reassurance.

Mr. COOPER. The Senator from Illinois is very kind. Of course, we all know the Senator from Illinois has been the great advocate of this bill and has carried the fight for it in committee and on the floor.

I want, at the outset of the debate, to express my support of this measure. I have supported it in the past. I have supported it as a Republican. I support it because I believe strongly in the objectives of the bill.

I will not today, in the short time I have, attempt to follow the Senator from Illinois in his comprehensive argument for the bill. I testified during the hearings. When arguments were addressed to me against S. 1, I was glad to answer them; and I wish to address myself today briefly—to those arguments.

The first question was in substance: "Do you believe this is a field in which the Federal Government should intervene? Do you think that the Federal Government should spend funds to assist the people who live in these depressed areas?" Or, if one wants to place it another way, the basis of the argument was that private enterprise and our private economy would ultimately take care of those who are unemployed.

I think all of us agree that a vigorous private economy is the best way to take care of a great many of those who are unemployed.

The fact remains, however, as the Senator from Illinois pointed out in his speech, that even in periods of high employment and of constantly rising wages, and increased profits, when people are well to do, or more than well to do—prosperous—thousands of people in various sections of the country have been left behind economically.

It is the type of economy we have in this country, and I am afraid we shall continue to have it. It is fast moving economy, one of technological change, automation, and new sources of competition from abroad. We shall have this kind of moving economy for many years. And people will be displaced from employment, without fault on their part.

I believe a great and rich country cannot forget these people who, many without cause on their part, are unemployed and many of whom are actually hungry and in great need. I know this to be true from my own observations in eastern Kentucky. We must act to help them.

Others ask, Will this type of action displace industry, induce industry to leave one section of the country for another? It might induce some small movement of industry; I do not know. If it does, perhaps it will be in the national interest.

My own judgment is that this bill will not displace industry. It will stimulate the local development of industry in these depressed areas. It will add industries to those which now exist rather than cause an industry to move from one area to another.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. While the bill was in committee we strengthened the anti-pirating section very appreciably.

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The new wording is in section 6(a), on page 46 of the bill, in which it is stated that there shall be no financial assistance "to assist establishments relocating from one area to another."

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. This would not prohibit the establishment of branches. The language has been very greatly strengthened. We believe it is almost airtight to prevent pirating. The language is very satisfactory to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH] who, with the Senator from Maine [Mr. MUSKIE], urged an amendment on this point.

Mr. COOPER. I thank the Senator. I knew the amendment had been agreed to.

I wanted to emphasize that passage of the bill will stimulate development of local industry in depressed areas, rather than displace industry.

Others who argue against the bill or who may vote against passage raise the question: Will it do any good? Can it help?

I do not think passage of the bill is an ultimate answer to the problem. I do not think it is an ultimate answer to the problems of the area with which I am familiar, the mining areas in Kentucky, yet I know it will help. It may induce the establishment of new industries. To that extent it will give help and employment. There are provisions of the bill for retraining and for technical assistance, which can be of great importance to the people in these areas and to municipalities to enable them to plan for development.

Something that cannot be overlooked is that a manifestation of interest upon the part of the Congress, action by the Congress, will go a long way toward lifting the morale of the people of these areas. I can tell the Senate today that morale is pretty low. Many of them believe that in this time of prosperity—and it is a time of prosperity for most people—they have been forgotten, and have been left behind.

Passage and approval of the bill will direct the attention of the Congress and of the people to the problems of chronic unemployment, which may continue for many years. If S. 1 and its approach is not an adequate answer, then as a result of experience under the provisions of S. 1, we may find a more adequate answer.

I am grateful to the Senator from Illinois. I was glad to associate with him in the formulation of the bill. I am glad to support his efforts.

Mr. President, I repeat: Ours is a great and rich country, with most of the people well to do and many rich. It is a country which supports a great private enterprise system, a system which we support as best for our country—as an aspect of freedom.

But the worst thing that could happen to the private enterprise system, and to our free system, would be for us to be so calloused, so blind, so unfeeling as to do nothing about these pockets of unemployment, and fail to make an effort to give succor to these people, and help them to work and to help themselves.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to express my deep gratitude to the Senator from Kentucky for his characteristically humane and distinguished address. The Senator is an inspiration to all of us, and to his party. We honor him on this side of the aisle, as do those on the other side. I am very grateful to him.

Mr. COOPER. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] and the members of the Banking and Currency Committee for their fine work in bringing to the floor an excellently conceived piece of proposed legislation. Indeed, like the people in other economically depressed areas, the people of West Virginia are grateful for devoted efforts of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] to help them.

Unemployment in West Virginia is exceedingly serious. It constitutes a situation so stark—and in many instances so grim—that national attention has been focused on it and national consideration must be given to it. One cannot fence in, or seek to contain, its adverse effects on the economy as a whole. There is an inexorable multiplier factor that works like yeast to the detriment of employment everywhere. As the purchasing power of a person is erased by unemployment, he cannot buy the products produced by workers elsewhere. Today, in West Virginia, there are approximately 152,000 unemployed persons, who, together with their families, are temporarily lost as consumers of American production.

As of mid-December 1960, estimated unemployment in the State's more populous counties was 95,850 workers—or 14.2 percent of the State's labor force.

Mr. President, on the chart at the rear of the Chamber there is a map which presents the areas of substantial unemployment in West Virginia as of January 1961, with percentages by area. If Senators will look at the chart they will find the chronic and nonchronic areas, which are officially classified by the U.S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Employment Security.

Senators will note that unemployment ranges from a high of 28.9 percent in the county of McDowell, which is the greatest coal mining county in the United States, to lower percentages in counties marked in the deepest red. The counties indicated by the deepest red color are the chronic areas of unemployment and underemployment. My own home county of Raleigh has a percentage of unemployment amounting to 23 percent. Other counties have high percentages, such as: Ohio County, 18.8 percent; Monongalia County, 12.2 percent; Marion County, the home of the late Senator Matthew Mansfield Neely, 11.9 percent; Fayette County, 24.9 percent; Logan County, 17.2 percent; Mercer County, 19.8 percent; and so on.

It should be noted that there is 6 percent or more unemployment in every one of the State's 55 counties.

The estimate by the West Virginia State Department of Employment Security was made in early February 1961. It is the latest figure available from an official State source. I think it should be emphasized that this overall figure of 14.2 percent unemployment is based on the number of insured workers who were receiving unemployment compensation at that time.

However, the department of employment security stated that its figure took into account only 30 populous counties and parts of 2 others.

Twenty-three less populous counties, which are shown on the map in the lightest color, were not included in the survey of the department of employment security. But the department did survey, on a sample basis, a few of these counties, and in doing so turned up the following startling fact: That in the Grafton area of Taylor County, an area which, according to this map, has 6 percent or more unemployment, actually has 25 percent unemployment; and in Webster County, the county to which I am pointing now, a county which again is in the area indicated on the map as an area of 6 percent or more unemployment, it was found that the unemployment there is actually 24½ percent. In short, this sample survey indicated that in 42 percent of the counties of West Virginia, there is one unemployed person out of every four persons in the State's labor force.

So there is good reason to believe that unemployment in my State is even worse than the West Virginia Department of Employment Security has stated.

As I have pointed out, the figures secured from the department of employment security indicate the high percentages of unemployment in these counties marked with deepest red on this map. But according to the department's own sample survey, we have found that unemployment in the lighter areas as shown here on the map, counties which, according to the department of employment security, do not indicate a high percentage of employment, in reality have unemployment amounting to as high as 25 and 26 percent.

That is because the department of employment security failed to take into consideration those persons whose unemployment compensation payments have become exhausted. That is why these lighter areas on this map of West Virginia do not portray the real picture of unemployment.

In a memorandum especially prepared for me, the U.S. Department of Commerce stated the following:

In the January 1961, issue of the Labor Market and Employment Security, 95,850 persons (November 1960) are listed as receiving unemployment compensation. However, for the Nation as a whole, we are given to understand that the figures in the publication fall about 60 percent short of reflecting the true unemployment picture because of the many persons who have exhausted their unemployment compensation. West Virginia, with its longstanding unemployment problem, has a large number of persons in this category. It would appear reasonable, then, to increase the benefit payment list for the State by 60 percent. The resulting figure should be a conservative one. This figure is 152,000.

This means, then, that approximately 152,000 persons in West Virginia were unemployed in November 1960. Considering the 1960 labor force at 675,000 persons, the rate of unemployment in November would be almost 22.5 percent.

Which means that the rate of unemployment on the average over the entire State would be 22½ percent, almost as high as the 23 percent shown for my county of Raleigh on this map. On that basis, practically all the counties shown here should be in deepest red, without any of these lighter areas, if persons whose unemployment compensation payments have been exhausted were included in the tabulation.

The Department of Commerce memorandum continues:

It should be noted that individual counties and cities, in many instances, fall above and below this figure since the southern counties and towns are extremely hard hit. The labor market areas of Beckley and Welch, for example, have respectively 23 and 28.9 percent of their labor force unemployed.

Mr. President, an Associated Press release from Charleston last Thursday, March 2, stated that the durable goods industries reported 8,800 fewer workers than a year ago, according to the State department of employment security, and that the mining industry payroll of 47,200 was 12,500 less than the 59,700 miners working in mid-January 1960. Seasonal furloughs in the nonmanufacturing category dropped 18,900 below the working complement of January 1960.

Indeed, the situation has worsened since then—by how much, I do not know. But this I do know: Unemployment, as the distinguished Senator from Illinois so very ably stated a little earlier today, is a social waste, and for a country as rich as ours is in every respect—a country which with ease can pour out billions of dollars annually to help other countries put their unemployed to work—unemployment in this country should be viewed as both a national weakness and a national disgrace.

Speaking of the social waste that is created by unemployment, I should like to refer Senators to some of the pictures which are here on the floor of the Senate Chamber. Here is a picture showing the aftermath of poverty due to unemployment. Of course, this picture does not portray the real social waste that results from unemployment. The real social waste cannot be measured in terms of pictures, in terms of dollars and cents, and in terms of statistics. The social waste of which I am talking is that which comes to the lives of individuals—individuals whose attitudes and outlooks on life are warped by the conditions in which they have to live.

Conditions such as this, in which children are reared, have a devastating effect upon these individuals who will someday be the leaders of this Nation. This kind of social waste truly cannot be measured. On the other side of the Chamber is a picture of a dilapidated bus, an old schoolbus. This bus is the home for a family of four—a man and his wife and two children. This too is a part of the social waste to which I have referred.

I was advised by the Foreign Operations Subcommittee on Appropriations as late as March 1 that the total moneys available for expenditure by the foreign aid Development Loan Fund—including unexpended, unobligated, and new funds—amount to $1,721,296,000—more than four times the total amount involved in the bill before us. And whereas these foreign aid moneys will be repaid—if indeed they are ever repaid—in foreign currencies which, in many instances, are not convertible, the loans embraced in Senator Douglas' bill will be paid back to the U.S. Government in U.S. dollars and with interest.

Moreover, the President's contingency fund—unexpended and new funds—will have available for expenditure $388,695,000 for additional foreign aid, and this does not include technical cooperation funds to be used on a bilateral basis amounting to $318,417,000 plus technical cooperation moneys channeled through the Organization of American States amounting to $2,608,000 and technical cooperation moneys to be expended through the U.N. amounting to $47,400,000. These figures do not include the defense support moneys and special assistance and other categories of foreign aid moneys.

So, Mr. President, having long been cognizant of the needs of peoples in foreign countries, our Government should be equally concerned with the needs of our own people, and we should not be so stinting in the aid we extend to them.

The grass is just as green in West Virginia as it is anywhere else—but not so the pastures of my State's economy. These are a dismal brown from a lack of industrial and financial nourishment. That is why 145,131 persons have left my State during the past 10 years—a loss of 7.2 percent of the State's 1950 recorded population.

That figure of 145,131 persons does not truly reflect the number of persons who have left the State of West Virginia in the past 10 years. The number would probably exceed that by 300 percent, but that is the total population drop in the course of the last 10 years. These people left the beautiful hills and valleys of West Virginia for greener economic pastures, because they were desperate for work after months—and even years—of chronic and persistent unemployment and underemployment.

On the chart to which I am now pointing, which Senators can see, we show in deepest red counties with a population loss amounting to above 20 percent. I see here 10 counties with population losses amounting to more than 20 percent. Counties colored in medium red show population losses amounting to 10 to 20 percent. In counties marked in the lightest red, the population losses amount to 0 to 10 percent. In West Virginia about 12 or 13 counties actually show population increases.

No other State, percentagewise, has been so sadly bled of its human resources. The next nearest State in terms of population loss is Arkansas, with a drop of 6.5 percent from its 1950 recorded population.

On the chart to which I am now pointing Senators will see a map of West Virginia showing the outmigration, the net loss, by counties, over the period 1950 to 1960. These counties, in the southern-central section, counties which are mining counties, have shown an outmigration amounting to from 30,000 to 50,000 persons in the past 10 years. The other areas—Monongalia, Marion, Harrison, and some of the remaining southern counties, counties in which mining is the predominant industry—show an outmigration amounting to from 10,000 to 20,000 persons over the past 10 years.

Most of the remaining portions of West Virginia show an outmigration per county from 0 to 10,000.

As I indicated a little earlier, the population loss in itself is not the sole and true picture of what we face as a result of chronic unemployment, persistent unemployment, and underemployment in West Virginia.

Much of West Virginia's population loss has been in young adults—the very people for whom economic opportunity should have been available; the very people upon whom the future vitality of any State must rest.

But if these young adults had remained on in my State, it is entirely likely that their numbers would have swelled the ranks of those who presently stand in line for surplus-food packages. Indeed, those ranks are long enough now. Today approximately 300,000 persons in West Virginia must subsist on those meager food packages. Many more are eligible to receive such subsistence, for I have been told by State authorities that if all the West Virginians who really need food packages were to receive them, the total would be in excess of 325,000, or 1 out of every 6 persons in the State's population.

This chart indicates the percentages, by county, of persons eligible for surplus commodities as of the month of October 1960.

These figures have risen since October 1960. However, as of October 1960 there were four counties in West Virginia in which more than 35 percent of the population was eligible for surplus commodities. In the southernmost counties of Mingo and McDowell almost one-half the population was eligible for surplus commodities. Senators can see that in practically all the counties of West Virginia a minimum of from 5 percent to 20 percent of the population was eligible for surplus commodities as of October 1960.

West Virginia is exceeded only by the State of Mississippi among all the 50 States in the percentage of State population receiving surplus food. Mississippi, as of December 1960, shows a figure of 16.1 percent of its total population receiving surplus food, whereas, as of December 1960, 13.8 percent of the population of West Virginia was receiving surplus food commodities.

West Virginia is followed next by Arkansas with 9.1 percent, Oklahoma with 8 percent, Kentucky with 7.7 percent, Arizona with 4.9 percent, New Mexico with 4.8 percent, the District of Columbia with 3.7 percent, Pennsylvania with 3.6 percent, Tennessee with 3.5 percent, Louisiana with 3.3 percent, and Alabama with 3.2 percent. These figures have been supplied by James A. Hutchins, Jr., Chief of the Direct Distribution Branch, Agricultural Marketing Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture.

I join with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] in commending our great President of the United States for his vigorous, expeditious, forthright action in making available to the needy families in West Virginia and the other States of the Union a greater variety of surplus commodities.

Mr. President, the food storage houses of the Nation today are bulging with grain, such as could never have been envisioned in the days of Joseph in Egypt. Time after time in the past 8 years when, as a Member of the House of Representatives and later as a Member of this body, I approached the administration then in power, on bended knee, as it were, asking for action to be taken to provide these people with additional commodities and a greater variety of commodities, I was consistently met with the argument that it could not be done.

I join with the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] in saying: "Thank God we have in the White House lights which are burning again and a President who is responsive to the needs of hungry people."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. In addition to the increasing number of persons receiving surplus food, it is true, is it not, that the dietary has been approximately doubled with respect to the number of calories per day, per person, and that much greater weight has been thrown into the furnishing of proteins, which are so necessary?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. That is true.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And is it not correct to say that the previous Secretary of Agriculture and the previous President could have done so by Executive order, but did not do so?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. That is preeminently correct. I congratulate the Senator from Illinois, who did such a very able and fine piece of work as chairman of the Depressed Areas Committee. I served as a consultant to that committee, as did my senior colleague from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], and Representative FLOOD, of Pennsylvania. This was one of the recommendations submitted to the President by that distinguished committee, of which the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois was the chairman. I am proud that the President made as his first action the recognition of the validity of the recommendation and acted in accordance therewith.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the Senator from West Virginia corroborate me in a statement which I think for the sake of history is interesting? The day after inauguration, President Kennedy went to his office, and the first business he did was to double the food ration.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. That is correct. We now have a shirt-sleeve President; a President who works night and day in his office, in his shirt sleeves. He is a man who understands the needs of the people in the depressed areas, and he has acted to deal with those needs. We look forward to the future with encouragement and hope.

Mr. President, on the chart to which I point, Senators will see a graph portraying public assistance payments in West Virginia for the period 1949 through 1959. It is easy to see that the amounts have increased steadily over the past 10 years. In 1949, $16,676,000 was paid to West Virginians in the form of public assistance. In 1959, the amount was $37,078,000. These figures include Federal, State, and local funds.

The growing void of employment opportunities in my State, and the outmigration of so many of its people, have been taking their toll on other segments of West Virginia's economy. For example, farmer cash income dropped from $76,439,000 in 1959 to $73,628,000 in 1960—a loss of almost $3 million in a 1-year period. Business failures increased from 0.263 per 10,000 businesses in 1958 to 0.327 in 1960, according to Dun & Bradstreet.

Hand in hand with the decline in my State's economy has been the decline in personal per capita income. In 1957, according to the U.S. Department of Commerce, the average per capita personal income for the United States was $2,052. For the State of West Virginia, that year, the per capita personal income was $1,633, a difference of $419 below the national average.

Mr. President, on the chart can be seen a map of West Virginia, giving the per capita income by counties. Senators will see the figures for each of the 55 counties. The counties shown in the deepest red color have incomes well below the national average, per capita incomes ranging from $900 to $1,299. The great majority of the counties show a per capita income amounting to from $1,300 to $1,699. Counties shown in the lightest red color had a per capita income ranging from $1,700 to $2,099.

In 1959, the latest year for which figures are available, the average per capita personal income for the United States rose to $2,166—an increase of $114. In that year, the average per capita personal income for West Virginia was $1,635—an increase of only $2. Thus, while nationally our people were enjoying better personal incomes, the same was not true of West Virginians, and the gap between national per capita personal income and that of the people of my State widened from $419 to $513. It is my understanding that this gap will show a further widening when the 1960 figures are available.

But the real gap between the Nation as a whole and West Virginia, in particular, is in economic opportunity. For this, there is no simple solution—no simple sum of dollars to appropriate and to offer the State, with best wishes for an early recovery. For this, there is need for a variety of programs—the kind of programs recognized in S. 1, the bill which the senior Senator from Illinois has introduced, and which I and other Senators have cosponsored. We have only to review its several provisions to see how its enactment will help millions of our people to help themselves.

For example, there can be no doubt that one of the best methods of creating employment in a depressed area is to encourage the expansion of employment by employers already in business in the area. These employers may perhaps not be aware of the possibility of diversification and expansion into new lines, or they may not be aware of new markets for their present lines of products. Other employers may not be aware of possible cost reductions that would improve their ability to expand and to hire more people. What is needed in all such instances is technical assistance—the kind provided in S. 1.

Moreover, S. 1 provides technical assistance to communities—assistance which would enable them to study their physical and human resources, and to evaluate their own economic potential. This might entail assistance to find new uses for local natural resources, or aid in developing an inventory of manpower and labor skills, and other kinds of information which may be useful to business or industries seeking new locations. In short, technical assistance can be an important tool in aiding a community's economic recovery.

As a supplement to technical assistance, the bill before us also provides the means for encouraging the expansion of existing businesses in depressed communities, as well as for the establishment of new businesses. It does this by providing employers with needed capital on a long-term, repayment basis, at low interest rates.

If anyone questions the need for this provision in S. 1, he has only to come to my office and examine my file of letters from businesses and industries in West Virginia, which tell of frustrated attempts to get needed working capital or capital for expansion purposes.

I think it will be illuminating to cite the case of the Ravens-Metal Products Corp., of Parkersburg, W. Va., as an example of why enactment of the loan provision of S. 1 is imperative in order to have economic recovery in depressed areas.

Four years ago, shortly after the giant Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. established its new plant at Ravenswood, W. Va., a new company was formed under the leadership of Mr. Lloyd A. Cook, to fabricate the aluminum produced by the Kaiser plant. The Kaiser Co. itself had expected satellite plants to spring up in West Virginia, just as they had mushroomed near the firm's operations at Spokane, Wash. The new firm took the name of Ravens-Metals Products, Inc., and to begin operations it sold stock to the public.

Those who bought the firm's stock at that time 4 years ago have seen the value of their shares rise from $10 to $15. The advance has taken place as a result of steady growth of the business that has required the opening of two new plants, one at Elizabeth and another at Ellenboro.

During the 4 years of its existence, the firm's number of employees has risen from 5 to 55, and its assets have climbed from $127,000 to $400,000. Annual sales have leaped from $37,000 in 1957 to a 1959 total of $500,000. Its 1960 sales were near the $750,000 mark.

But with all of this company's human and material assets, and its remarkable record of growth, it still has to go to the public for its financing. It has been unable to negotiate for its needed financing from banks in West Virginia.

Why? It is a well-established fact that conventional lending facilities are inadequate in distressed areas, particularly insofar as long-term, low-interest capital is concerned. Because of longstanding unemployment and underemployment, they cannot meet the challenge of growing companies such as Ravens-Metal Products.

Only one bank in West Virginia has assets reaching $86 million. The next largest bank has assets of approximately $78 million. Only 12 banks have assets amounting to more than $30 million, while all the rest have assets ranging from $1 to $25 million. By comparison, I would point out that any of several major banks in the Washington, D.C., metropolitan area have, individually, anywhere from two to three times the assets of the largest bank in West Virginia.

Thus, the loan provisions of S. 1 are essential to the revitalization of depressed areas—particularly in helping the establishment of small plants in my State's mountainous mining areas unsuitable for large industries.

Moreover, the bill provides that such loans be a joint venture on the part of all levels of government and private enterprise. Federal loans would cover, at most, 65 percent of the total capital needed for land and for building a new plant or commercial facility, or for the rehabilitation of a plant. The balance of the needed funds would have to be supplied either by the State, community, or by private capital. This, I submit, is a realistic approach to supplement the inadequate investment capital that exists in distressed areas.

To revitalize distressed areas, we must also help them to rehabilitate their facilities or to build needed new ones. Because of a deteriorated tax base over a long period of chronic unemployment and underemployment, these areas do not have the resources to renew such facilities or to build needed ones without outside help. This kind of helping hand is provided in S. 1 through the establishment of a revolving fund of $100 million from which communities would be able to borrow funds in order to build industrial parks, improve public facilities, when necessary, and provide industrial water supply or other facilities essential for industry.

In extreme cases of need, S. 1 provides for Federal grants to communities on a matching basis to build such needed facilities, or to rehabilitate existing ones. The extent of the Federal grants, however, would depend upon the ability of the communities and the States to participate in establishing what may be considered essential public facilities.

Another important provision in S. 1 is the recognition it affords to the problem of retraining the unemployed for new job opportunities. The Federal Government has made grants to States for vocational training since 1917, when the Smith-Hughes Act was passed. The Douglas bill provides additional funds to expand such vocational facilities in distressed areas.

Of course, the type of training or retraining that would be provided in economically distressed areas would, in every instance, depend upon the needs of the individual community and the industries it is likely to attract. Through such programs, workers are assured of new job opportunities and industries seeking to locate in depressed areas are assured of trained labor.

I believe a bonus to be accrued from this program—a bonus which will be a real blessing to depressed areas—is that the training or retraining of workers will tend to slow down, or even possibly halt, the outmigration of young people. Certainly, renewed hope in employment opportunities right where they would like to have them—in their own home towns—would of itself be a healthy happening for the morale of our young people.

Mr. President, the central governments of a number of European countries have adopted programs to alleviate and remedy longstanding unemployment problems in certain depressed areas within their borders. Positive steps taken by the British Government trace back to the early 1930's, and Italy, and West Germany's basic laws date back to the early 1950's. Legislation to assist local economic development was adopted in France in 1955, Denmark in 1958, and in Belgium in 1959.

It is interesting to note that in many of the European countries, area assistance programs have become extensive and important precisely at a period of time when employment generally has reached an extremely high level. In those countries where the precursors of the present programs had their inception at a time when high regional unemployment levels prevailed, as in Great Britain in 1934 and in the Federal Republic of Germany in 1951, special area assistance has been maintained in spite of sharp decreases in unemployment in the areas affected.

In other countries such as Belgium and Denmark, special area assistance legislation has been enacted only recently—a time of comparatively full employment. At the time of enactment of the Danish legislation, for example, the national overall unemployment rate was less than 2 percent of the total Danish labor force.

Basically, the current emphasis on area assistance in Europe reflects to a high degree the viewpoint that particular areas need special aids in order to permit them to contribute their full share to the longrun overall economic progress of the country as a whole. European programs, consequently, should not be viewed narrowly; they are concerned with more than the reduction of the regional incidence of structural unemployment. Their broader objectives are set in terms of natural goals of economic growth. For this reason most European programs attempting to alleviate local or regional unemployment emphasize the movement of industry to the area, rather than the movement of surplus labor away from the area. Sweden, with its battery of labor migration aids, represents the one significant exception.

European regional assistance programs attempt to encourage regional economic growth primarily through four basic types of incentives. These are loans, grants, tax incentives, and government assistance or initiative in site improvement and individual plant construction. Other types of incentives also are employed, such as governmental aids in materials procurement for industries locating in development areas and transportation rebates on government-owned railroads. In the aggregate, however, such incentives are quite minor in importance compared to the four major devices. Not all four of the major regional development incentives are operative in each country. In general, tax incentives, site improvement, and building construction are less common and of less total importance than loans and grants.

Loans normally can be made for many purposes in the assistance areas. Most important are loans to private industrial enterprises for purchase of land, plant construction, and equipment, and loans to public organizations for the expansion or improvement of basic regional or local services, such as transport and utilities. Loans to new industrial enterprises in the development areas cover at least one-half the total cost of plant and equipment. Credit is extended also to existing enterprises in the development areas if these enterprises seek to expand their present facilities. In Belgium, low-interest loans are made to encourage the manufacture of new products by existing firms or the introduction of production techniques of an entirely new character. Less universal, but not uncommon, are loans extended for working capital and for research and development.

While loans to encourage industrial expansion and improvement of basic services are virtually universal in all European area assistance programs, loans are available for still other purposes in Italy and Germany. In southern Italy, loans may be used for such things as reservoir and electrical powerplant construction, for improvement in fishing facilities, and for construction of tourist hotels. In the Federal Republic of Germany, it is significant that the improvement of tourist facilities is regarded as a bona fide purpose for area assistance loans. All types of European area assistance loans carry moderately long repayment schedules, ranging typically from 15 to 20 years

In European assistance programs, the use of grants as an area development incentive closely parallels the use of loans. Essentially, the same purposes are covered by both devices. Grants are most commonly used to help new industries in the development areas meet part of the costs of land, buildings, and equipment, or to encourage local public organizations to undertake improvements in basic public services such as access roads, water, and utilities. Total grants to incoming manufacturing enterprises are larger than grants for improvements in basic services. Purposes for which grants can be made are broadly interpreted, and may even include costs of transferring machinery from another area, and costs of training labor.

Practically all the current European special area assistance programs have been initiated so recently that definitive appraisal of results is not yet possible, although in some instances, substantial progress is evident.

In Germany, where area assistance legislation has been in existence for 9 years, much longer than that in most countries, the possible effects of the program have been somewhat masked by the dramatic economic changes and the large-scale decline in overall unemployment which have characterized the Federal Republic during the 1950's. Advocates of the area development programs within the Federal Republic have pointed out, however, that the movement of new industries into the assistance areas was facilitated by the improvements in basic community services realized through the aid programs. They suggest that the tax base of the local communities often was too small to have permitted comparable improvements in local facilities without Federal and State—land—aid. It is also suggested that the area aid measures served to check outward labor migration from the distressed areas which, had it continued, would have aggravated the problem of securing improved area economic conditions and might eventually make such areas unattractive to new industries because of labor shortages.

Madam President (Mrs. NEUBERGER in the chair), the countries of Europe have proved that area assistance measures are beneficial. In our own country, necessity dictates that we, too, must act to revitalize our areas of chronic unemployment. The enactment of S. 1 is a responsibility which the 87th Congress cannot ignore. The gravity of the economic decline in our depressed areas is such that any temporizing would be reckless. The Douglas bill is not only a good piece of legislation, its passage into law is vitally necessary. It is the kind of helping hand our economically distressed areas desperately need.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD rose.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Madam President, I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business tonight, it stand in adjournment to meet at 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. MANSFIELD. Madam President, I have been discussing the legislative prospects with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the minority leader, and other Senators who are interested in the feed grains bill. It was decided that because of the lateness of the hour, and in view of other circumstances it might be advisable, for the remainder of the day, to continue the consideration of the depressed areas bill, and then to displace the bill at the conclusion of business this evening with the feed grains bill, as the unfinished business, which bill could be taken up as soon after the conclusion of the morning hour as possible tomorrow, since it is anticipated four or five amendments will be offered. It is also anticipated there will be a yea-and-nay vote on final passage of the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SCOTT. Madam President—

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I inquire whether the Senator from Montana is making a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. MANSFIELD. No. I made a unanimous-consent request that the Senate meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, but I think it would be inadvisable at this time to try to establish a time for termination of debate tomorrow.

Mr. SCOTT. I inquired in order to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that I have been trying to get recognition all day. I was at one point No. 3 on the list, the highly unofficial list. I solicit the aid of the majority leader in giving me some opportunity to be recognized. Other Senators whose names appeared after mine on the list have been recognized. I wish to speak in regard to the distressed areas bill, and I wish to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the bill.

I think under those circumstances, since we are engaging in unofficial recognition, I should like to be considered as entitled to some courtesy in that regard.

The distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] is aware of the fact that I have been here all day and that I have indicated to him I hoped I would be able to speak after he concluded.

I am simply raising the question as to whether it is the custom of the Senate to pay any attention to certain unofficial lists.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Madam President, in response to what the Senator from Pennsylvania has said, I should like to invite to his attention the fact that with the approval of the minority leader at the beginning of the session it was agreed—I think unanimously—that we would do away with such lists. However, may I express the hope, Madam President, that at the conclusion of the remarks by the present speaker the Senator from Pennsylvania may be recognized.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Madam President—

Mr. SCOTT. I would appreciate it if the Presiding Officer of the Senate would recognize me at that time. I have been available since a quarter to 2, and other Senators have come to the Chamber from time to time since then. I should like to be recognized. Otherwise, I will be constrained to object to unanimous-consent requests under certain circumstances in the future, if it is necessary. I hope the Senator from Montana will understand me—not at this time but, if it is necessary to secure an opportunity to speak on this floor, in the future.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would express the hope to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania—

Mr. SCOTT. I appreciate the generosity of the Senator from Montana, who suggested that I be recognized.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Of course, the authority does not rest with the majority leader. The leader does not lead the Senate but is the servant of the Senate, as we both well know. I would hope that the Senator from Pennsylvania would not either by implication or by indirection pose a difficulty as to getting unanimous-consent agreements later, because I think it is a good idea to maintain comity in the Senate insofar as possible.

Mr. SCOTT. I agree with the Senator from Montana. I appreciate the Senator's attitude and generosity. Having striven in various ways to secure some recognition of the fact that I was the third person who asked to speak today, and having now endured the realities of the Senate from a quarter till 2 until 5:25 p.m., I knew of no better way to bring this to the attention of the majority leader. I hope there are ways and means by which a Member of the minority may be recognized.

Mr. ELLENDER. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Madam President, I yield the floor.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

Mr. SCOTT and Mr. FULBRIGHT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SCOTT. Madam President, I shall speak very briefly, and at the conclusion of my remarks I shall offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute to S. 1.

Madam President, my bill, which is substantially the same as that introduced in the prior Congress, is a proposed area redevelopment act. It differs in some respects from the bill known as S. 1. It is, however, similar in many ways.

For example, the criteria for area eligibility are the same in both bills. Both bills have been introduced for the same general purpose.

S. 1 would establish an area redevelopment administration. S. 6 would establish such an administration within the Department of Commerce. The President has indicated his preference that such a program be administered within the Department of Commerce. I understand a compromise is or will be offered for the appointment of an area development administrator by the President under the Secretary of Commerce, to be a chairman of an advisory council. I would think this would probably accomplish substantially the same result, but I am glad the fact that I have pressed this point for such a length of time may have had some influence on the final compromise decision. Certainly the Secretary of Commerce favors the later compromise, which I have mentioned.

The difference in amounts in the two bills is that the so-called Douglas bill (S. 1) provides for a revolving fund or funds with a total of $100 million for urban areas and $100 million for other areas, to be financed by the Treasury, the first year expenditures under each fund being limited to $30 million.

My bill (S. 6) provides for the same amount for industrial areas, $100 million, but provides $50 million for rural areas to be financed by appropriations. Maximum Federal participation under S. 1 is 65 percent, and under my bill it is 50 percent. Minimum State or local participation under S. 1 is 10 percent, and under mine it is 15 percent, subordinate to Federal loans. Minimum private participation is 5 percent in both cases. The maximum period in the Douglas bill is 25 years, or 35 years if extended, and in my bill it is 30 years, or 40 years, if extended.

The purpose of the loans under the Douglas bill is the development of land and facilities, including, in exceptional cases, machinery and equipment for industrial and commercial usage, construction, and improvement of plants. But in my bill it is for land and facilities only.

There are differences in the interest rate proposals and in the methods of approval of the application. The Douglas bill contains grants for public facilities of $75 million. However, the first year appropriations are limited to $10 million, a provision which does not appear in my bill. Technical assistance grants are substantially the same—$4½ million in the Douglas bill and $4 million in my bill. Both bills provide for vocational training, and both bills provide $10 million for retraining and subsistence payments.

The other similarities and differences are contained in the chart which was prepared by the Committee on Banking and Currency under date of January 16, 1961, and while there may have been some minor changes since then, if this chart has not yet been introduced, I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. SCOTT. Madam President, I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute to S. 1, and ask that it be printed. I have referred to it as S. 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike all after the enacting clause and insert an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator wish to offer his amendment at this time?

Mr. SCOTT. No, I do not request that it be called up at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Madam President—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Madam President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It had been my intention to support the administration's so-called area redevelopment bill this year, although I had opposed similar bills in the past, mainly on the grounds of my fears about the way in which they would be administered. It had been my position that the legislation, as I thought it would be administered, would tend to freeze the present pattern of industrialization of this country and inhibit the development of other areas of the country which in the past had not developed as rapidly.

I was encouraged, then, when I read of the President's proposal to place the administration of the program under the Secretary of Commerce, in whom I have confidence and, therefore decided to support the bill in that form.

In my opinion, the wide powers which this bill provides, particularly with respect to the selection of redevelopment areas, require supervision at Cabinet level. The pressures which will be brought to bear upon the administration to designate this area or that, present great opportunities for favoritism, not to say "boondoggling." To deal with these pressures requires the prestige and power which cannot be found at lower than Cabinet level, and the type of judgment which business background gives.

The Douglas bill, as reported, does not comply with these requirements, in my judgment.

Nor does it comply with the expressed preferences of the President, which, I believe, are entitled to great weight in matters of administration of the executive branch.

Mr. President, the difference between the President's area redevelopment bill and S. 1, the Douglas bill, as reported by the committee, on the point of administration, can be shown very simply from the language of section 3 in each of the bills.

Section 3 of the President's bill reads as follows:

There shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an Area Redevelopment Administrator in the Department of Commerce who shall receive compensation at a rate equal to that received by Assistant Secretaries of Commerce. The Administrator shall perform such duties in the execution of this Act as the Secretary of Commerce (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") may assign.

Section 3 of the Douglas bill reads as follows:

In order to carry out the purposes of this Act, there is hereby established in the Department of Commerce an Area Redevelopment Administration. Such Administration shall be under the direction and control of an Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be compensated at the same rate as that prescribed by law for an Assistant Secretary of an executive department.

I presume that the committee amendment establishing the Area Redevelopment Administration in the Department of Commerce may be pictured as a compromise, but to me it is nothing of the sort. The committee's bill provides that all the powers of the legislation would be vested in an Administrator to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

The President's bill, on the other hand, would have provided that the Administrator should perform such duties as the Secretary of Commerce might assign.

I believe that, the Douglas bill, as reported, presents an impossible administrative setup, particularly so far as the Secretary of Commerce is concerned.

My amendment, when it is perfected, will provide for the administration of the act in precisely the same manner as the President's bill.

I received yesterday from the Acting Secretary of Commerce a letter which recommends my amendment.

I should like to read the concluding paragraphs of this letter, as follows:

While Secretary Hodges is unable to reply personally to your letter today, I am confident that he would express complete endorsement of the amendment which you propose. In the first place, your proposed amendment, if adopted, would make S. 1 consistent with the bill now pending in the House on the same subject—and on which the Secretary testified several days ago. For your convenient reference, I enclose copy of Secretary Hodges' testimony before the House subcommittee. In addition, I enclose copy of his testimony before the Senate subcommittee, at which time he took the same position on the issue of administration of this proposed area redevelopment program.

I would also emphasize that adoption of the amendment which you have proposed would, on the issue of administration, be consistent with the views of the President as reflected in a draft bill on area redevelopment which the President transmitted to the Speaker of the House several days ago. This bill is now pending in the House as H.R. 4569.

It is our very definite opinion that the amendment to S. 1 which you have proposed should be adopted.

The Bureau of the Budget advises that from the standpoint of the administration's program there is no objection to the submission of this letter.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire letter be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE,
Washington, D.C., March 8, 1961.

Hon. J. W. FULBRIGHT,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is in response to your letter requesting the views of Secretary Hodges on your proposed amendment to S. 1, copy of which you enclosed. You asked that you receive this statement of views today.

Secretary Hodges has been in Mexico this week and is en route by plane to Washington today. He is scheduled to be in his office tomorrow.

I understand that S. 1 as reported by the committee provides that the administration of the area redevelopment program shall be "placed" in the Department of Commerce, but under an Administrator who would be completely independent of the Secretary for all practical purposes.

Your proposed amendment would simply provide that authority and responsibility for administering the program contemplated under S. 1 would be placed in the Secretary of Commerce, to be consistent with the basic organizational principles generally applicable to all Federal departments.

While Secretary Hodges is unable to reply personally to your letter today, I am confident that he would express complete endorsement of the amendment which you propose. In the first place, your proposed amendment, if adopted, would make S. 1 consistent with the bill now pending in the House on the same subject—and on which the Secretary testified several days ago. For your convenient reference, I enclose copy of Secretary Hodges' testimony before the House subcommittee. In addition, I enclose copy of his testimony before the Senate subcommittee, at which time he took the same position on the issue of administration of this proposed area redevelopment program.

I would also emphasize that adoption of the amendment which you have proposed, would, on the issue of administration, be consistent with the views of the President as reflected in a draft bill on area redevelopment which the President transmitted to the Speaker of the House several days ago. This bill is now pending in the House as H.R. 4569.

It is our very definite opinion that the amendment to S. 1 which you have proposed should be adopted.

The Bureau of the Budget advises that from the standpoint of the administration's program there is no objection to the submission of this letter.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD GUDEMAN,
Acting Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield, if the Senator wishes to ask a question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Would it discommodate the Senator if I were to ask a question at this time?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Not at all.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask if my good friend from Arkansas is maintaining that the bill which has been introduced in the House by Representative SPENCE is the administration bill.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Exactly; that is the President's bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Do I correctly understand that my good friend from Arkansas is supporting this bill?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. With this amendment I intend to support the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I mean the bill as introduced in the House.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I intend to support the bill before the Senate with my amendment, and my amendment makes it comply with the administration bill exactly in this respect.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator has spoken of the House bill as being the administration bill. In his great anxiety to support the administration, I wonder if he supports the House bill in all its features?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I have not read the House bill. I have read only the first part of it relating to the subject of administration.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is the Senator from Arkansas aware of the fact that the House bill provides for financing the measure by annual appropriations rather than by Treasury financing?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. No. I am open to persuasion on that subject. The Senator from Illinois knows that last year I supported borrowing authority for the DLF. I assume that is what he is coming around to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am coming to it immediately.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I did support that method with regard to DLF. I am not at all sure that it is a perfectly proper method of financing these programs.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad that we are narrowing the issue. I was in some doubt last year as to whether DLF should be financed by annual appropriations or by Treasury issues, until the very able Senator from Arkansas made his plea that the financing by annual appropriations would disrupt the measure and not permit long-term programming. He so convinced me that when we drafted the pending bill we followed the argument of the Senator from Arkansas and provided for financing by Treasury issue.

Now I hope very much that the Senator from Arkansas will not go back on his own child, which we have fostered in this fashion, but will, instead, support the system of financing loans, at least, by Treasury issue.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That method was used in the case of RFC and other agencies, which I cited two years ago in support of such financing for DLF. I am very favorably impressed by it. However, I cannot support the bill if the program is not to be administered in a manner which I believe to be reasonably fair and equitable for the whole country.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wished to narrow the issue with regard to financing. Is the Senator from Arkansas saying that he is in favor of Treasury issues in financing foreign loans? Just what does he favor so far as domestic loans are concerned?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I said that in supporting the DLF provision I cited programs which I had supported in the past, such as the RFC, and other domestic programs.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Arkansas was very eloquent on that point, and he convinced me. Therefore we have adopted the Fulbright provision in drafting the pending bill. I should like to ask the Senator whether he is disavowing his principle in connection with the area redevelopment bill.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I have not said that. I do not know that the Senator has in mind. I have not disavowed anything.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am trying to find out whether the Senator has disavowed that principle. I should like to put that question to him directly. Does the Senator stand for the same principle in connection with the area redevelopment bill that he stood for in connection with the Development Loan Fund? Does he or does he not?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I have said to the Senator from Illinois that if the administration is proper, and if my amendment is adopted, which is in accord with what I think is good administration, I intend to support the bill. I said so in my opening statement.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is the Senator in favor of the system of financing through Treasury issue or annual appropriation in connection with the pending bill?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I have already said that I am generally in favor of long-term programs.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I mean in this particular instance.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I am in favor of long-term financing. What is the Senator trying to do? Is he trying to make a bargain with me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I want to know whether the Senator is consistent. There seems to be a degree of inconsistency in the Senator's attitude. I should like to ask the Senator a further question. Inasmuch as the bill was introduced in the House by Representative SPENCE, is the Senator justified in saying that this is an administration measure, in preference to the compromise proposal that came from the committee, which puts it in the Department of Commerce, with the Department of Commerce exercising the housekeeping function, giving the Secretary of Commerce the chairmanship of the advisory policy board, giving him the power to name another important committee, but confining the actual administration to a separate agency?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The bill in the House was introduced in behalf of the administration. It is the President's bill, and he approves of it. I have introduced a letter into the RECORD, which has been cleared by the Bureau of the Budget. It expresses the view of the Secretary of Commerce, who is appointed by the President.

I believe it is perfectly proper to say that it is the President's bill, the administration bill, as introduced in the House of Representatives. I have not read all the provisions in the bill. The Senator knows that my opposition to similar bills in the past was largely based on the fact that I had no confidence in their probable administration on a limited geographical extent. If the program is given administration which is fair to all the country, and it is administered on the Cabinet level, I am prepared to support the bill. However, I will not support it if the law is to be administered without any control by the Secretary of Commerce. That is exactly in accord with the President's view as to how it should be administered. My present disposition is to support the borrowing authority, but this may well depend upon how it is to be administered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator is in favor of it?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I said that was my present disposition. I am not prepared to make a deal with the Senator from Illinois on the floor of the Senate at this time. I am prepared to offer an amendment, and if it is adopted I intend to support the bill. I do not know whether other amendments will be adopted. I cannot conceive that another amendment would be adopted that would be so offensive to me that I could not support the bill. I have prepared another amendment which I shall offer, relating to the criterion for designation of rural redevelopment areas. However, if my first amendment is adopted, and if I believe that a sufficiently responsible administration is provided, I will not worry about the other matter. I do not know why the Senator charges me with inconsistency.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Arkansas has been a most effective opponent of the measure in times past. He has been one of the most effective Senators on the floor in opposition, and in committee as well. He has been very astute in his opposition, which he has conducted very well indeed. It is interesting to see that he has somewhat modified his view.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator seems to resent my showing any favorable view.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, in the words of the old hymn:

While the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Surely the Senator will not abandon the bill because I am supporting it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No. I have a fear however of Greeks when they bear gifts. I fear the Trojan Horse, which the Senator from Arkansas may now be introducing.

I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas one further question, if I may. He said the bill in the past has been of very limited application. We have in the rear of the Chamber, if the Senator will condescend to look at them, maps indicating not only the scope of the pending bill, but also the scope of preceding versions of the bill. He will find that the areas which would benefit most from the rural sections of the bill are, and always have been, the Southern States, and that his own State of Arkansas would probably benefit as much as any State. Yet year after year the Senator from Arkansas has opposed the measure. Nevertheless, in spite of all the efforts directed toward the Senator from Illinois to cut loose the Southern States I have refused to do so. I will not sell out the Southern States, even though the representatives from the South do not defend their own areas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator completely misapprehends my point. The Senator from Illinois refuses to recognize the point I am making, which is that of administration. It is my conviction that if the administration is to be exercised in an equitable manner, I will be willing to accept it. I do not believe that an administration which is not responsible to the Secretary of Commerce is a proper administration. This is a matter which was dealt with in the Reorganization Act. I see in the Senator's bill a revival of a little empire within a department, which is completely contrary to the recommendations of the Hoover Commission and the provisions in the Reorganization Act.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. First, I express my thanks to the Senator from Arkansas for his basic support of the pending measure. I know the Senator is deeply concerned about the rural aspects of the so-called depressed areas bill. I shall make some comments on that point. They will be very much along the same line that the Senator from Arkansas has stated. I wish to reassure him that in my study of the pending bill I have found it to be national in scope. It primarily affects the areas where the need exists. The need is graphically displayed by the maps in the Chamber. They have been discussed in some detail during the debate today. We might very well wish to emphasize the agricultural or rural areas. I shall do that in my statement.

As I understand, the Senator from Arkansas is amenable to the idea of what we call Treasury financing, because it gives continuity.

The point which I think is at issue is essentially the administration of the act.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct. That has always been the issue.

Mr. HUMPHREY. What the Senate committee did—and I believe I was present at some of the early discussions and deliberations on the bill outside the committee, simply as another Senator—was not to set up a separate agency, removed entirely from the scope of the Department of Commerce or the Cabinet. The committee decided it would place the function of the depressed areas bill—that is, the loan and grant function—within the Department of Commerce, and would make the Secretary of Commerce chairman of the Advisory Board. It would make the Department of Commerce responsible for the records and general housekeeping matters, but would have the administrator of the program directly appointed by the President.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. But not responsible to the Secretary.

Mr. HUMPHREY. When the Senator says "not responsible to the Secretary," he must remember that the Secretary of Commerce is responsible to the President, and so would be the administrator. There is no doubt that with an administrator responsible to the President and a Cabinet officer, the Secretary of Commerce, responsible to the President, there would be coordination; there would be continuity of the program and the policy.

I think it would be wrong—and this is the main point I wish to make—to state that the President would find unacceptable a program or a bill which contained the Senate provisions in terms of administration. To the contrary, such a bill would be acceptable. It is not necessarily the first choice of the administration, but it is an acceptable choice. I can speak in terms of its being an acceptable choice because of discussions I have had with at least some of the advisers to the President. I do not want to inject the name of the President into this matter, because I do not think that is proper. However, I say that the administration does not have objection to the Senate proviso. I believe the administration prefers the financing provision in the Senate bill, and I believe the Senate bill provides a workable instrument for the objectives which the Senator from Arkansas has in mind.

I commend the Senator from Arkansas for his interest in this matter. I understand his concern with it because of his interest in Arkansas and his interest in the people of his State. No one has fought more valiantly for them.

I want to have the RECORD show very clearly that the Senator from Arkansas repeatedly has advocated a community facilities bill. He has worked in behalf of housing measures. He has been deeply concerned over the impact of any kind of economic program on rural areas—and rural areas certainly are involved in depressed areas.

So while the Senator may feel that the administration perfers the close tie-in under the Secretary of Commerce, if he would be willing to accept my word for it—and if need be, I shall, I suppose, have to get the documentary evidence—I can say on my honor as a Senator that the administration would not find unacceptable a bill which provided what the Senate bill provides in terms of administration. I think the administration would prefer a bill in terms of financing as the Senator from Illinois has reported it to us; and I believe the bill itself, when we work over it here, as we are, will meet the basic needs which the Senator from Arkansas had in mind.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I appreciate the Senator's comments. The Senator is entitled to his own views.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am familiar with the letter.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The letter from the Secretary of Commerce contains this paragraph:

It is our very definite opinion that the amendment to S. 1 which you have proposed should be adopted.

When the Senator uses the word "unacceptable," I suppose he is taking the view that if everything else in the bill were acceptable, and the administration were faced with having no bill at all or accepting this bill, they might do it. But the bill which the administration sent to Congress contains the same provision as my amendment, and the Secretary of Commerce endorses it. The acting Secretary of Commerce endorses it, and he refers to the testimony of the Secretary of Commerce himself.

The Secretary of Commerce is a Cabinet officer. He is in a higher, more responsible position, in my judgment, than any administrator could be.

I have said before, and say again, that I think a very important part of this kind of bill, in which wide discretion is given to the administrator, is the placing of responsibility at the highest level. Frankly, I do not wish to be a party to a bill which is subject to such possibilities as this one is in the administration, with anyone less than the Secretary being responsible. I think that is not an improper desire. I am certain it is in accord with at least the preference of the administration; otherwise it would not have been included in the administration's bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. It is in accordance with the views of public administrators who have studied public administration. It amounts to what is called a neat arrangement.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It is in accordance with the reorganization plan of 1950, which the Senator from Illinois supported, in which, in consequence of the Hoover task force reports, it was said that the growth of little empires—that is, independent agencies within agencies—was bad administration. The Senate accepted that report. This proposal is not in accord with that.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Madam President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does the Senator from Arkansas favor having rural electrification administered by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is where it is now.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; the REA Administrator is appointed by the President.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Within the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is within the Department of Agriculture. We propose, in this bill, an organizational setup identical with that of REA.

Mr. HUMPHREY. And identical with the U.S. Public Health Service within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Also identical with the Wage and Hour Division in the Department of Labor. If the Senator from Arkansas has a deep and passionate desire for orderly organizational charts, then he should submit an amendment taking away from the REA Administrator the control of the REA, and putting it into the Department of Agriculture. That would make the Senator very popular in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I would not undertake to amend all the laws of the country in one bill. I do not know whether the matter the Senator has mentioned is under consideration. Is there any reason why we should consider it now? I would never profess the belief that all administrative matters should be exactly the same. There is this great difference: Very wide discretion is provided in the bill, involving a new area of activity. In my opinion, it could easily be subject to great abuse.

The REA has well established the routine procedures of that agency, and they are not likely to be abused.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I appreciate the Senator's courtesy in yielding. He has been very generous.

It is the hope of Congress that the proposed legislation will not have to be permanent legislation. It is the hope of Congress that distressed areas or depressed areas will be rehabilitated or rejuvenated, so that the need for this kind of program will be of limited duration.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator does not mean it will be temporary; its duration will be for a number of years, at least.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I hope it will come about in America that we will not have to be talking about injections of a substantial amount of capital because of mass unemployment or distressed areas. I trust we will achieve a better balanced economy. The problem of distressed and depressed areas has been growing in the last few years. The Secretary of Commerce is a very busy man. He has a host of activities.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. He does not think he is too busy to handle this program. What is the Senator's real objection to having the Secretary of Commerce made responsible?

Mr. HUMPHREY. My objection is not to the program being in the Department of Commerce at all. My desire is to have someone administer the program who will get on to it, ride herd on it, and make certain that it works.

My point is that the only way that will be done is to have that man appointed by the President and able to speak in the name of the President.

Let me say the President made commitments. I see in the rear of the Chamber the map and the photographs of the State of West Virginia. I am rather accustomed to looking at that map. I have traveled on every one of those roads—to little or no avail, I may add—and I think I know a little about depressed areas and distressed areas; and I have a feeling that the President of the United States has an abiding, deep, personal interest in making this bill a workable measure, without any fault, if that is possible.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think so, too.

Mr. HUMPHREY. And I think it can better be done by an administrator selected by the President.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. But the President does not happen to think so. The Senator is very often most complimentary of the President. Why does the Senator disagree in this case with the President?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I say the President would be more than happy to accept a bill as prepared by the Senator from Illinois. I say that the President would find such a bill a workable and a desirable measure.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think the President is interested in the enactment of a proper and adequate bill; and since the Senator has stated the matter in this fashion, let me state that I am quite confident that the President would rather have enacted his bill with this amendment of mine—which he proposes—in it, than to have some other bill, although I am sure he would prefer to have some bill enacted, rather than no bill at all.

I do not know how other Senators will vote on these matters. I have only one vote. But there may be others who think the administration should be at the highest level.

Would the Senator from Minnesota prefer to have no bill at all enacted, rather than to have the President's bill, with my amendment included, enacted?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Of course I prefer to have some bill enacted. But when the President was proposing depressed areas legislation, he called on the Senator from Illinois to head the task force; and the Senator from Illinois did head the task force.

The Senator from Illinois was with the then President-elect, to make his report; and President Kennedy knows the views of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. But despite all that, the President still recommends that the administration be in the Department of Commerce.

Mr. HUMPHREY. But the bill before the House is the administration's bill.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. But the Senator finds fault with it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. For one thing, it contains financing provisions of which the President does not approve. Although I do not want to bandy about the name of the President, I may state that I have been assured by representatives of the President that while, for certain reasons, the House bill will represent the administration's bill in the House, this bill represents the administration's bill in the Senate, and then we can work out the differences in conference.

But let me say to my good friend, the Senator from Arkansas—and I want to be very careful in what I say now—that I do not charge that everyone who is in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas is opposed to the bill, but I do say that everyone who is opposed to the bill is in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Perhaps I had better stop there.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is enough.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. As I recall, the bill passed by a margin of only 2 or 3 votes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes, the vote was very close.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. And I think some persons, including myself, in view of the President's position on it, have felt that they would like to see such a bill enacted, and that it is more acceptable now than it was before—of course, I am trying to say, in view of the fact that we now have a Democratic administration.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not true that the Senator from Arkansas has voted against the bill on every occasion?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not also true that the Senator from Arkansas voted against the bill in every administration?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. One of the differences is that we now have a Democratic administration, a more enlightened administration; and it makes a great deal of difference to me that the bill will be administered by a Democrat, under a Democratic administration. So far as I am concerned, I am quite confident that the various parts of the country will have more equitable treatment under the bill in this administration, under my amendment, than they would have had under a similar bill under the previous administration.

It all goes back to the administration of the bill itself or the probable personalities who will administer it.

Madam President, on January 25, 1961, President Kennedy wrote to the Vice President and the Speaker of the House, recommending the enactment of area development legislation. In his letter, President Kennedy made the following statement:

The proposed legislation will involve more than one existing department of Government. All must be drawn into the effort. In my judgment, the department best equipped to supervise and coordinate the program is the Department of Commerce. However, if the Congress should decide that a new agency would be more appropriate I believe such an agency could also carry out the objectives I have outlined.

On February 20, 1961, President Kennedy wrote the Speaker of the House again, recommending the prompt enactment of legislation on this subject, and enclosing with his letter a draft bill which he urged the House to consider. This bill, which has been introduced as H.R. 4569, vests the powers and functions created by the act in the Secretary of Commerce, instead of creating a new independent agency.

The President has now twice made it entirely clear that he favors vesting these powers and functions directly in the Secretary of Commerce, rather than to create a new independent agency reporting directly to him. I agree with the President.

The President has never indicated his approval of the proposal in S. 1, as reported. The Department of Commerce letter to me, therefore, stands as the viewpoint of the administration on this proposal. The fact is, of course, that it was cleared with the Bureau of the Budget, as shown in the text of the letter; and this makes it quite clear that it represents the viewpoint of the administration.

It seems to me that the President's preferences with respect to organizational matters are entitled to a great deal of weight, particularly, as in this case, where they do not involve quasi-legislative or quasi-judicial powers, but are purely administrative and Executive powers.

The proponents of the amendment to S. 1 have, I think, forgotten the 1950 reorganization plans recommended and supported by the Hoover Commission, which were designed to transfer to the heads of departments the powers and functions of officials within the 12 departments. The proposed arrangement in S. 1 would directly contravene those reorganization plans, and would create again in the Department of Commerce the same situation which was eliminated by Reorganization Plan No. 5 of 1950.

I should like to refer to Senate Report No. 1561, 81st Congress, 2d session. This report dealt with Reorganization Plan

No. 5 of 1950, relating to the Department of Commerce. The resolution disapproving the plan was defeated, and the plan became effective. I should like to read, from page 4 of that report, a part of the section entitled "Hoover Commission Recommendations":

The paramount importance placed by the Hoover Commission on clarity of lines of authority is demonstrated time and again in its reports. That major thesis is first developed in general terms in the text and recommendations of Report No. 1 on general management, and is then followed up in the separate reports dealing with individual functions or agencies of the Federal Government.

REPORT NO. 1, ON GENERAL MANAGEMENT

The introductory chapter of Hoover Commission Report No. 1, on General Management, opens with the following paragraphs:

"In this part of its report, the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government deals with the essentials of effective organization of the executive branch. Without these essentials, all other steps to improve organization and management are doomed to failure.

"Definite authority at the top, a clear line of authority from top to bottom, and adequate staff aids to the exercise of authority do not exist. Authority is diffused, lines of authority are confused, staff services are insufficient. Consequently, responsibility and accountability are impaired.

"To remedy this situation is the first and essential step in the search for efficiency and economy in the executive branch of the Federal Government."

There follow the four numbered recommendations from the same report relative to centralization of functions and an adequate supervisory staff:

"14. Under the President the heads of departments must hold full responsibility for the conduct of their departments. There must be a clear line of authority reaching down through every step of the organization and no subordinate should have authority independent from that of his superior.

"16. Department heads must have adequate staff assistance if they are to achieve efficiency and economy in departmental operations.

"18. Each department head should receive from the Congress administrative authority to organize his department.

"20. We recommend that the department head should be given authority to determine the organization within his department."

REPORT NO. 10, ON THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The above recommendations of general applicability are then developed specifically for the Department of Commerce in Hoover Commission Report No. 10, on the Department of Commerce, as follows:

"We have urged in our first report that the foundation of good departmental administration is that the Secretary shall have authority from the Congress to organize and control his organization, and that separate authority to subordinates be eliminated."

After considerable discussion of Reorganization Plan No. 5 on the floor of the Senate, the resolution of disapproval was rejected. The vote was 29 yeas to 43 nays. I notice that the senior Senator from Illinois was 1 of the 43 Senators who voted to support the reorganization plan—who voted to keep lines of authority clear and to make the Secretary of Commerce master in his own house.

The new Area Redevelopment Administration which would be created by S. 1, as reported, would, in my judgment, be exactly the kind of organization which the Hoover Commission in 1950 was trying to get rid of. I do not think we should deliberately create the confusion the Commission opposed and the President and the Congress eliminated.

I should like to discuss for a moment the nature of this new proposal. An agency is to be established "in the Department of Commerce." It would be headed by a Presidential appointee who gets his powers and functions directly from the act.

What are to be the relations between the Secretary of Commerce and the proposed new Administrator?

Specifically, has the Secretary of Commerce any authority over the designation of redevelopment areas?

Has the Secretary of Commerce any authority over the approval of programs for designated areas?

Has the Secretary of Commerce any authority over the loans which may be made for industrial and commercial projects, or over public facility loans, or over public facility grants?

Has the Secretary of Commerce any authority over the amounts which the Administrator may, with the approval of the President, borrow from the Treasury?

Has the Secretary of Commerce any authority over the Administrator's power under section 12 to select, employ, appoint and fix the compensation of officers, employees, attorneys and agents?

Has the Secretary of Commerce any authority over the Administrator's power to request directly from any executive department information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics?

Has the Secretary of Commerce any authority over the Administrator's agreements and consultations with the Secretary of Labor relating to retraining subsistence payments?

Has the Secretary of Commerce any authority over the appropriations requested by the Administrator for public facility grants, retraining subsistence payments and technical assistance?

The answers to all of these questions hang upon the phrase "in the Department."

I believe it is asking too much to expect the answer to each of these important questions to be derived from this brief phrase.

If the answer to all of these questions is that the Secretary of Commerce does not have the authority indicated, I believe that the amendment proposed in S. 1, as reported, clearly violates the sound principles laid down by the Hoover Commission. If the answer to these questions is that the Secretary of Commerce lacks this authority, I think the proposal to establish the new administration in the Department of Commerce is a mere snare and delusion, designed to give lip service to the wishes of President Kennedy, but to leave the new agency virtually independent.

The proposed compromise is in many ways worse than the original proposal for an independent agency, because it invites all these questions and sows the seeds of discord between the President, the Secretary of Commerce, and the new Administrator. The confusion and conflict which will inevitably result from this proposal will, in my judgment, be harmful to the program.

It is for these reasons that I urge that S. 1 be amended so as to vest all of these powers clearly in the Secretary of Commerce, so that there can be no question of the responsibility for this program or of the authority for this program.

My amendment was based upon a committee print of S. 1, dated March 7, 1961. The committee made a number of minor amendments to the bill before it was actually filed. Consequently, a large number of the page and line references in my amendment need to be revised. In addition, I should like to revise my amendment so as to include in it the creation of a new official in the Department of Commerce to perform such duties in the execution of this act as the Secretary of Commerce may assign. With the revisions I am making in my amendment, my proposal will revise S. 1 so that, with respect to its administration, it will be just the same as President Kennedy's bill.

Madam President, I withdraw my amendment 3-7-61—B, dated March 7, 1961, and submit in lieu thereof a new amendment which I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD.

Madam President, this amendment conforms precisely to the relevant provision in the bill sent by the President to the House, to which I have previously referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table; and, without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment submitted by Mr. FULBRIGHT is as follows:

On page 40, strike out lines 9 through 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATOR

"SEC. 3. There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an Area Redevelopment Administrator in the Department of Commerce who shall receive compensation at a rate equal to that received by Assistant Secretaries of Commerce. STATEMENT BY FORMER PRESIDENT TRUMAN

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Madam President, in today's issue of the New York Herald Tribune there appears a statement under a heading "Harry Truman, Historian." In the article it is stated that Mr. Truman, when addressing a gathering of the AFL-CIO, said his study of American history indicated that the Nation's great Presidents are followed by men of lesser ability, and presumably weak Presidents are followed by men of greatness. Mr. Truman is quoted directly as follows:

As one of the great ones I can make that statement.

Madam President, surely no one takes exception to Mr. Truman's opinion of his own greatness. But I regret that in expressing that opinion, his remarks were such that they can be interpreted as casting a reflection upon one of America's respected Presidents, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

I simply cannot conceive that in making those remarks, former President Truman intended to belittle the greatness of President Roosevelt—when Mr. Truman emphasized that "great Presidents are followed by men of lesser ability" and then proceeded to emphasize his own greatness.

Mr. KEATING. Madam President, will the Senator from Delaware yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. Madam President, I was surprised, too, when I read the above referred to article in the New York Herald Tribune. After all, I represent a number of the members of the Roosevelt family: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who has the respect of persons of both political parties, the wife of the distinguished former President; Mr. John Roosevelt; and Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. I also think in this connection of our colleague in the other body, Representative JAMES ROOSEVELT. I wonder how they must have felt to have it stated that history showed that strong Presidents have always followed weak Presidents, and then to have it stated by the gentleman who was speaking that he was one of the great ones.

The Senator from Delaware and I frequently were in disagreement with some of the views expressed by former President Franklin D. Roosevelt. But all of us respect his memory, and certainly I would be the last person to call him a weak President.

I regretted that our former colleague here in the Senate, and the former President of the United States, saw fit to add this footnote to history. While he was, of course, referring to our former colleague, the present President of the United States, for whom all of us have respect, whether we find ourselves in agreement or disagreement, he was also seeking to cast some aspersions upon another great President, President Eisenhower. On reflection, I would not be at all surprised if former President Truman decided at some point that he was in error.

Not that we could expect him to belittle his own accomplishments, but, certainly, in retrospect, he might feel that, at the very least, there was an exception in his case and that he was following a strong President. All of us, of course, have heard him speak in the highest terms of former President Roosevelt. I appreciate the Senator's yielding to me. I thought I should say these few words in behalf of the Roosevelt family, so many of whom are respected constituents of mine.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I thank the Senator from New York. As I stated earlier, I would not take exception to Mr. Truman's estimate of his own greatness, because I am sure he has great confidence in his ability. I respect him also as one of our former Presidents. But I did regret that his statement cast what surely must have been an unintended reflection upon former President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Certainly Mr. Truman would not want his remarks to be taken as belittling the memory of former President Roosevelt. I hope this will develop, as has happened on previous occasions, as another case of his being misquoted.

Mr. KEATING. Madam President, if the Senator will yield again, this seems a particularly inauspicious time to make a remark like that, especially in light of the fact that we are now considering a memorial, and the form that memorial should take, for former President Roosevelt. It seems inappropriate now to belittle his memory in any way.

FEED GRAINS PROGRAM FOR 1961

Mr. HUMPHREY. Madam President, I ask that the chair lay before the Senate S. 993.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 993) to provide a special program for feed grains for 1961.

STATEMENT BY FORMER PRESIDENT TRUMAN

Mr. HUMPHREY. Madam President, I cannot resist the opportunity to express my personal profound appreciation and gratitude to my beloved colleagues for their solicitous and warm remarks about a beloved great President, the late Franklin Delano Roosevelt. This, of course, comes a little late, but there are those who wait a long time before they arrive at a proper judgment of greatness and make their decisions relating to a veracity of history.

I would be less than appreciative if I did not say that when the distinguished Senator from New York and the distinguished Senator from Delaware both give forth their sincere, deep, and lovable esteem of a great President, a fallen leader, one who gave his life to his Nation, it just touches the heart of this Senator as one American; and I want to thank them bountifully and generously for their words.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I knew that there was a colloquy between the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from New York, but it was conducted with such rapidity and so virtually sotto voce, that I was unable to follow it.

Am I to understand from the Senator from Minnesota that both these gentlemen actually praised the late Franklin Delano Roosevelt?

Mr. HUMPHREY. There was a rather rapid crossfire and discussion, but through it all there was a constant thread of respect and admiration for the late and beloved President Roosevelt; and I must say it is something that gladdens my heart.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. May I first yield to one of the authors of this most recent tribute?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I may say to the Senator from Illinois that the reason I felt moved to make this defense of the memory of a great President was that former President Truman was quoted as saying that he regarded himself as one of America's great Presidents and pointed out that, in a review of history, great Presidents followed weak Presidents and weak Presidents followed great Presidents. He said he felt qualified to make this statement because he was one of "America's great Presidents." I do not take exception to his opinion. I felt that this was perhaps an unintended reflection on the greatness of our respected and former President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who immediately preceded him in office.

Mr. HUMPHREY. We now have testimony from both great men, and I think we ought to end it there, because the Senator from Delaware has great respect for Mr. Truman, and both Senators have great respect for former President Roosevelt, and I think this is a good time to quit.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Madam President, one of the mysteries of geology and the vast underground rivers that flow underneath the surface, unknown to people, but which gush out in unsuspected places. I had never thought that there was such a deep undercurrent of affection and regard for Franklin D. Roosevelt on the part of the Senators from Delaware and New York, but now it has gushed out, with all its majesty, as we witness this flow of affection and regard. I, too, wish to thank them.

Mr. KEATING. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I point out to my friend from Illinois what he may not know; namely, that one of former President Roosevelt's sons was very active in my campaign for the Senate in order that I might sit here in this body with such great Senators as the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Illinois. John Roosevelt was a significant factor in my election and I very much appreciate what he did on my behalf. I did not want any possible aspersion cast on his father, whom we all respect so greatly.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from New York is always a gentleman, and we are so grateful for this consideration.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

Mr. THURMOND. Madam President, the Senate will soon be called upon to consider a general Federal aid to education bill, and there will probably be much haste urged by the proponents of this proposed legislation in obtaining action on the Senate floor. So that the Members of the Senate might have an opportunity to consider material which I feel to be most informative, interesting, and helpful on the subject of Federal aid to education, I have been placing in the RECORD from time to time various articles which I feel merit the attention and consideration of the Senate. I have recently read two excellent articles, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of these remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. THURMOND. Madam President, one is an article from the March 1961 issue of Nation's Business. It is entitled "False Claims in School Control Drive," and was written by Mr. Roger A. Freeman, a gentleman who is widely recognized as an authority on public finance and Federal-State relations. He is the author of two recent books entitled "Taxes for the Schools" and "School Needs in the Decade Ahead." Mr. Freeman directed research for the Education Committee of the President's Commission on Intergovernmental Relations in 1954-55 and served as consultant on school finance to the White House Conference on Education in 1955.

The other article is entitled "Federal Control of Education: A Case History" and was printed in the March 10, 1961, issue of Human Events. It was written by Dr. Claude J. Bartlett, assistant professor of psychology, George Peabody College for Teachers, Nashville, Tenn.

FALSE CLAIMS IN SCHOOL CONTROL DRIVE

(By Roger A. Freeman)

A powerful movement is underway to shift control over your local school policies to a nationally organized bureaucracy.

The 87th Congress is being told that Federal funds will quickly solve the public schools' financial problems and raise the quality of education to higher levels.

In reality, enactment of a Federal aid program would be detrimental because:

1. It would hinder progress toward urgently needed improvements in local school systems, such as fuller and more effective use of available manpower and facilities.

2. It would shift control over school policies from parents, lay boards, and communities to a remote group of bureaucrats.

3. It would be a fateful step toward the absolute concentration of governmental powers in Washington to transfer responsibility for the largest domestic service—education—to the national level.

4. It would damage civic morale and set a bad example for youth by demonstrating that the way to get the things we want is not to work and pay for them but to seek a way to shift the cost to somebody else.

At the heart of the education controversy is not the question of how much money the public schools need and how it can be provided, or how many classrooms or teachers they should have, or how much the teacher should be paid. The fundamental issue is big Government versus home rule.

The drive for Federal control, although a century old, will be pushed with special vigor this year because Federal aid proponents know that unless a bill is passed soon the arguments for it will disappear.

The growth of school finances, the building of classrooms, the addition of new teachers have far surpassed what friends and foes of Federal school aid dreamed of only a few years ago. The White House Conference on Education in 1955 proposed that school funds be doubled within 10 years. In the 6 years since then, school support rose at a decennial rate of 152 percent. States and communities have been increasing their school appropriations by about $1 billion each year for almost a decade.

It is not likely that State and local officials would keep doing so if Congress showed a willingness to raise the needed funds either through boosting taxes or by deficit financing. Federal aid might have the effect of pushing the need for higher taxes, or greater deficits, to the Federal level. In the end, then, the schools' total resources would not be larger but the policy direction would be transferred to Washington.

To be sure, most Federal aid bills include a clause prohibiting Federal control of school programs. This declaration is necessary because the overwhelming majority of the American people want to keep control at the local level.

But when the professors of education and the school administrators talk, not to Congress, but to each other, they speak a different language. Let's listen to some of them.

An editorial in the Nation's Schools (September 1960) said:

"There is something quite naive in the way we school people talk about Federal control of education. Some of us seem to think that Federal influence on education can be prevented simply by stating that it shall not exist. Federal direction is inherent in any Federal law or any Federal court decision pertaining to education."

An editorial in Overview (formerly the School Executive), monthly magazine of the school administrators, said in November 1960:

"The United States is inexorably moving toward a national system of education. The long-held views that education is largely a personal concern and that educational policy should be made by local units of government will have to go. The national welfare demands a national system of education."

"GRASSROOTSISM" ATTACKED

Other educators demand a gradual weakening of local autonomy over the school and a gradual emergence of control mechanisms

HIGHLIGHTS: Senate passed feed grains bill. House committee voted to report sugar bill. Senate debated depressed areas bill.

SENATE

1. FEED GRAINS. By a vote of 52 to 26, passed with amendment H. R. 4510, to provide a special program for feed grains for 1961, after substituting for its text the amended language of S. 993 (pp. 3466-3508, 3513). Conferees were appointed (p. 3508).

Agreed to the following amendments to S. 993:

By Sen. Cooper, to permit farmers with less than 20 acres to include their entire production under the terms of the bill, rather than reducing it by 30 percent as provided in the bill as reported by the committee. pp. 3486-7

By Sen. Dirksen, to require the Secretary, not later than 90 days after enactment of the bill, to submit to the Congress a detailed report on the operation and administration of the program. p. 3501

The committee amendment of the bill as reported, which was an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the text of the bill as introduced, as amended by the above amendments of Sens. Cooper and Dirksen. p. 3507

Rejected the following amendments to S. 993:

By Sen. Dirksen, to provide that, with respect to the marketing year for the 1961 crop of any feed grain commodity for which price support is made available under the bill, CCC shall not sell any such commodity at less than 25 percent above the current support price for such commodity, plus reasonable carrying charges. p. 3473

By Sen. Miller, to require a 30 percent reduction in feed grain acreage. Sen. Ellender explained that the proposed amendment "would permit a corn or grain sorghums producer to increase his corn acreage and still be eligible for price support and payments so long as his total acreage of feed grains in 1961 did not exceed 70 percent of his 1959-60 average acreage of all feed grains." pp. 3499-3501

2. DEPRESSED AREAS. Continued debate on S. 1, the depressed areas bill (pp. 3508-10). Agreed to a unanimous-consent agreement providing that, effective Tues., Mar. 14, debate on this bill will be limited to 2 hours on each amendment and to 6 hours on the question of final passage (p. 3467). Sen. Long, La., submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill during debate (p. 3459).

As reported by the Banking and Currency Committee S. 1, the depressed areas bill, includes provisions as follows:

Establishes an Area Redevelopment Administration in the Department of Commerce to be headed by an Administrator appointed by the President and subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Authorizes an Area Redevelopment Advisory Policy Board to advise the Administrator, to be composed of the following members, all ex officio: Secretary of Commerce as Chairman; Secretaries of Agriculture; Health, Education, and Welfare; Interior; Labor; and Treasury; and the Administrators of the Housing and Home Finance Agency and the Small Business Administration.

Requires the Secretary of Commerce to appoint a 25-member National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment, to be composed of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, State and local governments, and the general public.

Authorizes the Administrator to designate two types of redevelopment areas, rural and nonrural. Directs the Administrator to designate as redevelopment areas those areas which he determines are among the highest in numbers and percentages of low-income families, and in which there exists a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment. Requires detailed standards upon which such designations must be based. In the formulation of these standards, the Administrator is required to consider, among other relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families in the various rural areas in the U. S., the proportion of such low-income families to the total farm families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of the families in each such area to the general levels of income in the U. S., the current and prospective employment opportunities in each area, the availability of manpower in each area for supplemental employment, and the proportion of the population receiving public assistance. In making determinations concerning redevelopment areas, the Administrator is to be guided by studies made and the available information compiled by the various Federal agencies, State and local governments, universities, and private organizations.

Provides for two $100 million revolving funds, one for industrial projects in nonrural redevelopment areas, and the other for industrial projects in rural redevelopment areas.

Authorizes a $100 million revolving fund to be used for loans for qualified public facilities projects in redevelopment areas.

Authorizes appropriation of $75 million for grants to provide additional financing for eligible public facilities projects in redevelopment areas.

Authorizes the Administrator to obtain funds for making loans by borrowing from the Treasury in amounts not exceeding $300 million outstanding at any one time.

Authorizes the Administrator to extend to parties located in redevelopment areas and other areas technical information, market research data, and other forms of assistance obtainable from other Federal agencies.

Authorizes appropriation of $4.5 million annually for technical assistance to redevelopment areas and to other areas which have need of such assistance to alleviate or prevent excessive unemployment or underemployment.

Authorizes an annual appropriation of not more than $4.5 million for occupational training in redevelopment areas.

Authorizes an annual appropriation of not to exceed $10 million for retraining subsistence payments to unemployed or underemployed persons.

Requires the Administrator to submit a detailed and comprehensive semi-annual report to Congress.

Authorizes the Administrator, with the approval of the President, to delegate appropriate functions to other Government agencies.

. COTTON; TEXTILES. Sen. Scott stated that he was "deeply disturbed over the effects of the newly announced Government support level for cotton," and contended that it would result in higher prices of cotton textile products, and inserted his television debate with Sens. Humphrey and Clark on the matter. pp. 3464-5

. 4-H CLUBS. Sen. Stennis commended the 4-H Club program as a "bright one with a brighter future than ever before." p. 3466

RECORD and lie on the desk, as requested by the Senator from Minnesota.

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 64) to authorize the President of the United States to award posthumously a medal to Dr. Thomas Anthony Dooley III, introduced by Mr. HUMPHREY, was received read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in recognition of the gallant and unselfish public service rendered by Doctor Thomas Anthony Dooley III in serving the medical needs of the people of Laos living in the remote areas of the Laotian jungles, and of peoples in other newly developing countries, the President of the United States is authorized to award posthumously to Doctor Thomas Anthony Dooley III, in the name of Congress, an appropriate gold medal. For such purpose, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to cause to be struck a gold medal with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions to be determined by the Secretary. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $2,500 for this purpose.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause duplicates in bronze of such medal to be coined and sold, under such regulations as he may prescribe, at a price sufficient to cover the cost thereof (including labor), and the appropriations used for carrying out the provisions of this section shall be reimbursed out of the proceeds of such sale.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that an article from the American Medical Association News of March 6, 1961 paying tribute to Dr. Dooley be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMA BOARD PAYS TRIBUTE TO DR. DOOLEY

The late Thomas A. Dooley, M.D., founder of Medico and world renown for his work in Laos, was honored by the board of trustees of the American Medical Association in a testimonial adopted at its recent meeting.

Dr. Dooley, who died of cancer in January at the age of 34, was praised as one who "carried to the underdeveloped areas the image of the healer—selfless, interested in helping rather than getting."

"Dr. Dooley represented medicine in its finest traditions," said the testimonial, "and the AMA hopes his work will serve as an inspiration to others to serve the sick and suffering in other lands."

MEDICAL AMBASSADOR

"Recent events have demonstrated, as never before, the necessity for greater understanding among the world's peoples. Medical ambassadors, such as Dr. Dooley, can be mighty weapons in the relentless cold war since they carry both good will and benefit to humanity in their satchels.

"Because the health of all peoples is interrelated, the AMA has embarked upon a new program of international health with projects to assist medical missionaries and cooperative programs with the World Medical Association, the World Health Organization and other national medical associations.

"Since the world looks to America to provide leadership in many fields, including medicine, we will encourage young physicians to help fight disease wherever it may be. We will also encourage more programs which provide medical students the opportunity to study in underdeveloped areas under American physicians now serving in those areas."

THE GOOD AMERICAN

"The work of Dr. Dooley provided a bridge for bringing together peoples widely separated in space and customs, and thereby increasing mutual understanding and good will so vitally needed.

"Dr. Dooley won the reputation of 'the good American' for his dedication to the art of healing and constructive work for peace. Others are needed to carry on this work in Laos and other underdeveloped areas throughout the world.

"What he lacked in modern medical facilities, he made up in human warmth and compassion. His hospitals became symbols around which men of good will rallied. And he carried to the underdeveloped areas the image of the healer—selfless, interested in helping rather than getting. For 'whatsoever house he entered, there he went for the benefit of the sick.'"

AREA REDEVELOPMENT, 1961—AMENDMENTS

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I submit amendments, intended to be proposed by me, to the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas. I ask unanimous consent that a statement explaining the amendments be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be received, printed, and will lie on the table; and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement presented by Mr. LONG of Louisiana is as follows:

Senator LONG's amendment concerns the continued activation or reactivation of permanent military installations in redevelopment areas and in other areas. This amendment would operate in four different cases:

1. Where the permanent military installation is in a redevelopment area and is to be closed or moved for reasons of economy, the Long amendment would prohibit the closure.

2. Where a permanent military installation is in a redevelopment area and has been closed or moved within the past 5 years, for reasons of economy, but is useful for military purposes and justified in other respects, the Long amendment would require the installation to be reactivated.

3. Where a permanent military installation is not in a redevelopment area and is to be closed or moved for reasons of economy, the Long amendment would require an investigation of the effects of the closure, including the gain or loss of money to all levels of government, and a report of the investigation to the Secretary of Defense and to the Congress before the deactivation could take place.

4. Where a permanent military installation is not in a redevelopment area and has been closed or moved for reasons of economy within the past five years, the Long amendment would require an investigation of the effects of the closure, including the gain or loss of money to all levels of government, and a report of the investigation to the Secretary of Defense and to the Congress upon which a possible decision to reactivate the installation could be made.

The importance of the third and fourth categories is emphasized by the fact that a decision taken in the name of economy may in actuality have the opposite effect. For example, it is possible that the closure of a military base might result in the saving of $2 million in the operating budget of the Army, but be accompanied by a $20 million loss on FHA-guaranteed mortgages. If it is necessary to reactivate the base within 10 years, there would have been a net loss to the Government, although there would have been a saving to a single department. These are the kind of economies "which break the taxpayer's back." Presently, there is no agency to consider the overall aspects of such decisions.

Res. 289) relating to the time for filing a report on renegotiation by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and it was signed by the Vice President.

THOMAS E. STAKEM, CHAIRMAN, FEDERAL MARITIME BOARD

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, among the host of appointments made by the President, one indisputably excellent choice is that of Thomas E. Stakem as Chairman of the Federal Maritime Board. Mr. Stakem possesses broad experience and knowledge of maritime affairs, and shipbuilders and ship operators alike look to him with confidence and continuing hopes for a rejuvenated industry.

In Wednesday's Baltimore Sun, an editorial entitled "Maritime Man" summarizes succinctly the qualifications of Mr. Stakem, concluding:

Mr. Kennedy can be certain of one thing: Mr. Stakem is an advocate of a stronger merchant marine under the American flag.

I believe that the President can also be certain that the maritime industry approves wholeheartedly his choice for Chairman of the Federal Maritime Board, whose duty to preserve and strengthen the American merchant marine is more urgent today than ever before.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial in the March 8 edition of the Baltimore Sun, entitled "Maritime Man," be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARITIME MAN

Members of the Federal Maritime Board are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The President alone holds the right to choose the Chairman from among the members and the man so chosen heads the Maritime Administration—the agency which administers the Federal Government's shipbuilding, ship operation and port development programs. The reasons for Maryland's special interest are obvious: We have one of the leading ports of the country with a heavy investment in shipbuilding and ship repairing.

Last June when Vice Adm. Ralph E. Wilson, Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Logistics, retired from the service, President Eisenhower appointed him to the Maritime Board and then named him Chairman. President Kennedy has now made a change; he has selected member Thomas E. Stakem for that post.

There was some wholly groundless objection to the Wilson appointment and designation; it was even claimed on the west coast that while Admiral Wilson was born in Colorado and reared in Oregon he was a resident of Chevy Chase, Md., and so would be inclined to give special consideration to Maryland.

We have heard no such claim about Mr. Stakem but it is interesting to note that he was born in Midland, Md., and his wife is from the same community. However, he is now a resident of Arlington, Va. But one thing is clear: Mr. Stakem is well prepared for his job. He began his civil service with the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He joined the old Maritime Administration as chief investigator in 1943. Ten years ago he became assistant to the Deputy Maritime Administrator. In 1956 he became a member of the Board. Mr. Kennedy can be certain of one thing: Mr. Stakem is an advocate of a stronger merchant marine under the American flag. Whether this can be taken as an indication of the Kennedy view remains to be seen.

SHELLFISH PROBLEMS

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, for centuries Maryland and oysters have been as synonymous as Virginia and baked ham, Boston and baked beans, Florida and orange juice. But of late the Maryland oyster industry has been threatened by a deadly blight which has worked its way down the Atlantic coast and into the lower reaches of Chesapeake Bay. Fortunately, Maryland has not yet been attacked by the blight organism, but every attempt is being made to research this mysterious blight.

That research, Mr. President, is being conducted on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. In the words of a recent front page article by Maurice Rimpo, editor of the Cambridge Banner, "the Nation's oyster industry is looking to the Eastern Shore for answers to the problem of the disappearing oyster." The article goes on to describe the work of the Bureau of Commercial Fisheries' new biological laboratory in Oxford, Md.

In an accompanying editorial, the Banner newspaper emphasized the importance of accepting scientific fact as the basis for conservation policy, for without this acceptance, the oyster industry may fall so far that it will never rise again.

The editorial somberly remarks:

It is hard to see much future for the seafood industry unless current attitudes change. The short-range outlook is not good even though scientists tell us Maryland's production prospects are brighter than any other area in the Nation.

In view of the national importance of the biological laboratory and the commonsense contained in the aforementioned editorial, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the article "Nation Looks to Oxford Lab for Answers to Its Shellfish Problems," and the editorial "Unless Attitudes Change," both in the March 8 edition of the Cambridge Banner, printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article and editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

INVESTIGATION OF MATTERS RELATING TO MIGRATORY LABOR—CALENDAR NO. 61, SENATE RESOLUTION 86

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, yesterday, during consideration of various resolutions from the Committee on Rules and Administration, the Senate passed over Calendar No. 61, Senate Resolution 86, relating to migratory labor. This appears on page 3331 of the RECORD.

The Daily Digest, however, shows this resolution to have been adopted. It does not appear on today's printed calendar of business. For the information of the Senate, however, I announce that the resolution was in fact passed over yesterday, and was not adopted.

It is the intention of the leadership to consider this resolution at an early date.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, after consultation with the distinguished minority leader and other interested Senators, I send to the desk a proposed unanimous-consent agreement and ask that it be read and considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the proposed agreement.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Ordered, That, effective on Tuesday, March 14, 1961, at the conclusion of routine morning business, during the further consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas, debate on any amendment, motion, or appeal, except a motion to lay on the table, shall be limited to 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the mover of any such amendment or motion and the majority leader: Provided, That in the event the majority leader is in favor of any such amendment or motion, the time in opposition thereto shall be controlled by the minority leader or some Senator designated by him: Provided further, That no amendment that is not germane to the provisions of the said bill shall be received.

Ordered further, That on the question of the final passage of the said bill debate shall be limited to 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the majority and minority leaders: Provided, That the said leaders, or either of them, may, from the time under their control on the passage of the said bill, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any amendment, motion, or appeal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I wish to clarify two points:

First, must an amendment which is to be subject to this debate limitation, or entitled to the benefit of it, be now on the desk? May it be offered subsequently?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It may be offered subsequently.

Mr. JAVITS. The second question deals with a matter which has sometimes been called into question. I understand that the leaders may yield time from the time on the bill to debate a particular amendment, longer, perhaps.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is provided for.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BUSH. I am sorry I was late. May I ask what the suggested agreement is?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It would limit the debate to 2 hours on any amendment or substitute, and to 6 hours on the bill; and the limitation would start after the morning hour on Tuesday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

FEED GRAINS PROGRAM FOR 1961

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 993) to provide a special program for feed grains for 1961.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I am delighted that the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the chairman of that committee, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], are on the floor. I wish to announce to the Senate that there is a strong possibility that there may be a yeas-and-nays vote on final passage of the feed grain bill. Does the Senator from Louisiana have anything to say on that subject?

Mr. ELLENDER. So far as I am concerned, I shall not ask for a yeas-and-nays vote. If any other Senator desires to do so, that is his privilege, of course.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know what may develop in the course of the debate. It is not my intention at this time to request a yeas-and-nays vote.

Mr. KEATING. I shall be very happy to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JAVITS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUSH. I make the same request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands this request to be for a yeas-and-nays vote on final passage. Is that correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

The yeas and nays were ordered on final passage of the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senate is now on firm ground and on notice.

Mr. AIKEN. The reason why I said I would not request a yeas-and-nays vote is that I believe the Senate bill is very much better than the House bill. The yeas and nays have now been ordered, and that is that. I should like briefly to speak on the bill itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. Those who desire to converse will please retire to the cloak-rooms.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, the bill which is now before the Senate is definitely a more acceptable bill than the one which was passed by the House yesterday. I wish to give credit for its improvement to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, who has done a great deal of work in trying to bring about legislation which will be as beneficial as possible and the least harmful as possible.

I do not believe that the bill as it is now written is going to do as much good as its proponents expect it will. On the other hand, the House bill contains section 3, which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to sell feed grains at 17 percent below the support price. The purpose of the provision, I believe, is to permit him to use that authority as a persuader to encourage more producers of feed grains to enter the program. However, that provision in the House bill

If present and voting, the Senator from Wyoming would vote "nay," and the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. FONG], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROUTY] is absent by leave of the Senate because of illness.

The pair of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] has been previously announced by the Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS].

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPP] is absent on official business, and his pair has been previously announced by the Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING].

If present and voting, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 26, as follows:

So the bill (H.R. 4510), as amended, was passed.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table. The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and request a conference thereon with the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. TALMADGE, Mr. AIKEN, Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, and Mr. HICKENLOOPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I move that the bill be printed with the Senate amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I voted against passage of the bill just passed because I believe it cannot accomplish the good results which undoubtedly have motivated those who have drafted and supported it. Particularly have I been unwilling to be too active in my opposition, because it is an emergency, 1-year bill, and because the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the chairman of our committee, worked so hard to improve the bill as it came to our committee and did improve it greatly. I wish the RECORD to show, however, that no citizen of my State—not one single citizen—has asked me to support the bill. To the contrary, the Farm Bureau Federation, the largest organization of farm people in my State, is strongly opposed to it. The cattle people likewise are opposed to it.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point three telegrams which I received yesterday. One is from the president of the State Poultry Producers Association of my State, the second is from the president of the State Dairymen's Association, and the third is from the president of the Florida Hatchery & Breeders' Association. All of them are vigorously opposed to the bill.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAMPA, FLA., March 9, 1961.

Senator SPESSARD HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:
The Florida State Poultry Producers Association goes on record as opposing Senate bill 993.

Sincerely yours,

J. E. HARVEY,
President, Florida State Poultry Producers Association.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., March 9, 1961.

Senator SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

As purchasers of millions of dollars worth of dairy green feeds annually we urge your opposition to Senate bill 993 which it appears would further increase the prices we pay for these feeds.

JOHN ADKINSON,
President, Florida State Dairymen's Association.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA., March 9, 1961.

Senator SPESSARD HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

Urge your opposition to Senate bill 993. Raised feed grain supports make profitable poultry and egg production difficult without similar supports.

JOHN P. WALLACE,
President, Florida Hatchery and Breeders Association.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the Senator from Florida on his statement and to say that, like him, I voted "no" on passage of the bill. I also wish, however, to join him in complimenting the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, who brought to the floor of the Senate a far better bill than the House bill. While it does not follow some of the ideas that we have, I know that the Senator from Louisiana has worked hard to improve on the emergency situation. I compliment him on it.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of Senate bill 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the majority leader about the schedule for next week.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The pending bill is the only bill under general orders on the calendar at the present time. As the Senator knows, unanimous consent agreement was entered into earlier, under which 2 hours of debate has been allocated to any amendment, and 6 hours to the bill itself, beginning at the conclusion of the morning hour on Tuesday next.

I anticipate that we shall probably spend Tuesday and perhaps a part of Wednesday, at least, on the consideration of the depressed areas bill.

Then it is my hope that we will follow the consideration of that bill by consideration of the OECD Treaty, and perhaps the Columbia River Basin Treaty, which probably will have been reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations by that time.

Then, if the Committee on Finance reports the extension of unemployment compensation bill, that bill likewise will be taken up next week.

There will be no further votes tonight, and, so far as I can foresee at the present time, there will be no votes on Monday. However, from Tuesday on every Senator should be on notice to be present.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the Senator.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, through the proposed legislation before us we seek to provide means whereby economically depressed communities and areas might take appropriate actions for redevelopment in order to provide more job opportunities and to improve their economy.

West Virginia has been much in the news and under discussion as a State with an inordinately high percentage of unemployment and the misery which accompanies persistent joblessness.

Our State is literally honeycombed with areas of chronic labor surplus.

I regret the necessity of verifying that the situation not only has failed to improve, but, in fact, has worsened since we considered similar proposed legislation in the 86th Congress.

Within the past few hours I have received from the director of the West Virginia Department of Employment Security the latest report—for the week ending March 4, 1961—concerning the unemployment situation in our State.

Not only do the chronic labor surplus areas retain the "chronic" label—the "substantial and persistently chronic" label—but, in fact, the report for March 4, 1961, reveals that initial claims for unemployment compensation were 23.7 percent higher than a year ago, the number of continued claims were 55.8 percent higher, and the total of all claims increased by 50.7 percent over the total for the same period in 1960.

Even the most sanguine of us, Mr. President, will not, I am sure, subscribe to a belief that this type of an area redevelopment measure—or any similar legislation—will solve all of the economic problems of West Virginia or any other State; nor will it fashion the means by which all of the unemployed will be provided with job opportunities.

It is important for me at this point to state that, insofar as chronic labor surpluses are concerned, I conceive this bill to be the foundation—or at least the cornerstone of the foundation—on which economic rebuilding must proceed. Unless these communities, represented on the charts and maps, which have been presented to the Senate by my esteemed colleague from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], are provided the tools offered by this proposal, there cannot be any substantial refurbishing of the economic structure as the required first step toward establishing a basis for new jobs and new growth.

The 85th and the 86th Congresses established the principle that area redevelopment legislation is a necessary part of the arsenal of means which must be available to our Government in this era of rapid and even revolutionary technological change.

I say in the presence of the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], who has led the fight, and I say it in the presence of other Senators on the floor, that only through the dedicated service such as we have had from the Senator from Illinois has this legislation progressed so satisfactorily. The task force has assisted. Members of Congress have worked with him, and we come again today pleading our cause.

The 87th Congress must and will reaffirm this principle and provide the means which, we are certain, will not this time be denied our people by the stroke of the Executive pen.

Congress has acted affirmatively. We know that this bill will not be killed by Presidential action in the form of a veto. The present Chief Executive is vigorous in his support of this type of legislation.

Mr. President, one of the arguments registered against the proposed measure—by some spokesmen of industry, as well as by Members of this body—has been generated by a concern for the bill as a possible instrument for luring or "pirating" industry from one region of the country to another. Though evidence and questioning during committee hearings on this measure, and the language embodied in the bill as it has been presented, indicate safeguards against its use for any such purpose, I shall make my own position on the matter definite and clear.

The Senator from Illinois has recognized this problem in his understanding manner.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Section 6(a) states:

Such financial assistance shall not be extended (1) for working capital or (2) to assist establishments relocating from one area to another.

Is not that a direct prohibition against pirating?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Senator is correct. I appreciate confirmation of this provision of the bill which, of course, is important.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I should like to have the Senator from West Virginia know that I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the Senator from Washington. I know he will vigorously support the proposed legislation.

In addressing this point during the committee hearings, Secretary Hodges referred to his own philosophy as Governor of North Carolina when he was so highly successful in bringing new industries to that State. He formulated his position, and that of the State of North Carolina at that time, in the following words:

We don't want anybody to move anything they have got to North Carolina. We don't want anybody to come down for low wages under any conditions. The country is growing. We want whatever part we deserve of the expansions that you are going to have in this growing economy.

Mr. President, Secretary Hodges is to be commended, as Secretary and as the former Governor of North Carolina, for his forthright position on this issue. And speaking as a West Virginian, I concur most heartily in the Secretary's statement. Our concern for the proposed legislation is motivated by no desire to benefit the State of West Virginia by losses to another State or region. Our experience with the ravages of unemployment has been too long and too severe for us to desire to have any part in extending the problem to others. And I emphatically add, in view of some of the recent unfortunate differences of opinion that have arisen between my section and another, that the assurances I have just expressed are offered with particular reference to my honored colleagues from New England.

Mr. President, as an avid advocate of legislation of this type, as one who feels very keenly the need for it, I believe it is incumbent upon me to discuss briefly, at least, two general features of the proposed measure as it has been reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The first of these is the question of a unified administrative authority for area redevelopment. The importance of this factor and the concern for it on the part of the proponents of the bill are evidenced by its frequent recurrence in the hearings before the Subcommittee on Stabilization.

On no less than four occasions, during the testimony of Secretaries Freeman, Goldberg, and Hodges, the issue was raised, not only by the astute chairman of the subcommittee, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], but also by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE]. It was our regard for this need that led the author of the measure and those of us who cosponsored the Douglas-Cooper bill in the 86th Congress to press for an independent Area Redevelopment Administration. However, the views of the administration and of a majority of the members of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee were opposed to this, and their views have apparently prevailed.

Yet the problem of assuring unity and coherence in the administration of area redevelopment activities still persists; and, speaking for myself, at least, I must confess that my anxiety on this point has not wholly been alleviated by reading the testimony of Secretary Hodges. On this issue and on the administrative structure proposed by the Secretary of Commerce, the chairman of the subcommittee posed the following question during the hearings:

Suppose you get an area such as the northern or western Appalachians or the southern or eastern Appalachians, where you have a whole area involved, and you need an area plan which will involve some community facilities, such as industrial water, industrial parks, which will involve a farm program, which will involve a retraining program, which will involve the bringing in of manufacturing concerns or possibly other industries, is there not a danger of excessive fragmentation * * *? You would be farming these projects out, and where would you get coherence and a balance between these plans? Would not, under this system of fragmentation, the applicants run themselves quite dizzy running around from one place to another?

This inquiry, Mr. President, goes to the very core of the issue. I say with some regret, but with every respect for the integrity and the capability of Secretary Hodges, that his answer to the question posed by the senior Senator from Illinois was somewhat less than reassuring. In the last analysis, it appears, the Secretary of Commerce would have the authority to veto conflicting decisions taken by other participant executive agencies—that is, by the Department of Agriculture, the Labor Department, the Housing and Home Finance Agency, and others. But an untutored applicant—and we must remember such applicants—might wear thin his shoe leather when shuttling from one agency to another, before the Department of Commerce resolved the problems which inevitably will be inherent in most community project applications which will come from the areas of chronic unemployment.

I say this with no reflection upon the highly capable and conscientious executives who recently have been placed at the head of the respective departments and agencies that would be involved in the administration of area redevelopment activities as interpreted by the Secretary of Commerce.

On the contrary, I believe that the very measure which we are considering will create what may become—and I weigh my words—a hydra-headed creature of irresolution and conflicting authority, despite the best of intent and purpose on the part of participants involved. It is asking much, Mr. President, to expect three or four executive departments and two or three agencies to function promptly, harmoniously, and effectively in administering a single, unified, and coherent policy. It may be done, and I hope that it will be done. But if it is, I suspect that it will be an event unique in the annals of the history of the Federal bureaucracy.

I want the RECORD to show my skepticism on this point, Mr. President, and my belief that the pending measure places an extremely heavy burden upon the future Administrator of this program. We often hear the cliché that ours is a Government of laws, not of men. But ours is, in fact, a government of men who are administering laws. And when the Congress passes inadequate, ineffective, or cumbersome laws, it places an additional burden upon the executives whose responsibility it is to administer them. The American people have been exceptionally fortunate in the high quality of the executive personnel who have been drawn to President Kennedy's New Frontiers. But we have not always been so fortunate, and we may not assume that in the future we shall always have such good fortune.

Too much time already has been lost in connection with the process of bringing legislation of this type into being as a statute. We should already have behind us 2 years of experience with such a statute, and we would have had this degree of experience if the Douglas-Payne bill of 1958 had not been subjected to a pocket veto. Hence, I would not wish to cause further delay in our progress on this legislation, by engaging in a frontal attack upon its provisions for administration. But I frankly note for the RECORD the fact that I would deplore a fragmentation of the administration of the various facets of the program embraced by this measure.

Mr. President, I feel that the results of the enactment of the bill will, in the main, be most productive. I do not believe that any miracle will be wrought; but this bill is a meaningful measure, and I believe its prompt enactment will bring into being forces which will benefit the areas of the country in which chronic unemployment has cut so deeply into the lives of our people.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I want to thank the Senator from West Virginia for his very understanding address. No one has been a stronger supporter of the general purpose of this measure than has the Senator from West Virginia. He was a consultant to the economic task force and was of tremendous help.

I, too, would have preferred a separate administration; but out of a desire to reach a moderate compromise, if that was possible, we agreed to put the administration in the Department of Commerce, but under a separate administrator appointed by the President. I had hoped that this attempt at compromise would be satisfactory to all groups.

I was deeply surprised and pained, therefore, when the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] objected to this compromise and insisted on having the whole administration in the Department of Commerce, subject to the Secretary of Commerce, and with only delegated powers given to the administrator. I am afraid that this action will lead to cross purposes, and that we shall have the Department of Commerce passing on agricultural projects, on housing and home finance projects, and on Department of Labor projects.

So I hope very much that this sincere effort at moderation and compromise can be maintained when we come to a vote next Tuesday, and I want to thank the Senator from West Virginia for his very understanding comments.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I delay the Senate only a minute to say that I share the concern of the Senator from Illinois. I also commend him for what I am sure are his successful efforts in compromise. I hope my words are not negative, because sometimes it takes as much courage to compromise as it does to stand for a certain position and not alter that position.

I know that what the Senator from Illinois and his colleagues on the committee made real effort to reach at least some area of understanding, with mutual respect and appreciation of the problems, so we can move forward to passage of this bill, hoping and believing it will be helpful, and knowing that any errors which creep into its administration we shall later move to correct.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, so I may ask the Senator from Illinois a question?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if the bill he has reported to the floor of the Senate is, in his opinion, a bill which is in line with the President's program in regard to this matter, including his views.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I believe so. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] made a statement last night that it was his understanding that, so far as the administrative features of it were concerned, they were not unsatisfactory to the President.

Mr. MORSE. So far as I am concerned, that factor is a major one with me. I intend to support the bill as reported by the committee, because, in my judgment, it is in line with the President's original proposal in this field. What we are doing is adopting a bill here which seeks to carry out what the President has said over and over again is one of the "must" measures that he thinks should be adopted in his administration.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I shall not labor the point. The objective of the President is reached in the bill, and it is a measure I support. I do believe we would have provided for a more effective administration of the bill if it were placed under an independent agency, rather than tied into the Secretary of Commerce and the other agencies of government. That is the only reason why I have brought it to the attention of the Senate. I certainly hope my fears are unfounded. The task is so vital, the need is so real, the challenge is so pressing, that I sincerely trust no failures of administration of the act will weaken the purpose which is sought by its proponents.

PREVENTION OF SERVICE OR CONSUMPTION OF HARD LIQUOR ABOARD COMMERCIAL PASSENGER AIRCRAFT

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article which was published in the Washington Evening Star of March 8, 1961.

The events related in the article give added emphasis to the need for passage of S. 887, introduced on February 9 by Senator THURMOND and cosponsored by Senator HUMPHREY, Senator CARLSON, and myself. The bill is designed to prevent the service or consumption of hard liquor aboard commercial passenger aircraft. In view of the difficulties experienced on this flight mentioned in the article, I respectfully request that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee schedule early action on the proposed measure.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GREENSBORO, N.C., March 8.—A plane made an emergency stop here yesterday so medical attention could be given to a passenger from Washington.

While the plane was on the ground, someone thought the passenger—who later was charged with public drunkenness—said, "There's a bomb under my seat."

Passengers were unloaded and baggage searched, but nothing was found amiss. And the passenger, identified as Charles Edward Turner, 39, of the 800 block of L Street NW., said that what he had told sheriff's deputies was, "There's a bottle under my seat."

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON MIGRATORY LABOR,
February 27, 1961.

Memorandum to: Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD, chairman, Committee on Rules and Administration.

From: Senator HARRISON A. WILLIAMS, JR., chairman, Subcommittee on Migratory Labor.

Re: Senate Resolution 86, authorizing a comprehensive study of migratory labor.

During the 1st session of the 86th Congress, the Senate in approving Senate Resolution 267 on March 24, 1960, authorized the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, "to examine, investigate, and make a complete study of any and all matters pertaining to migratory labor." The resolution also authorized the committee to expend a sum not in excess of $50,000 for this purpose. The committee in turn authorized the Subcommittee on Migratory Labor to carry on the investigation called for by Senate Resolution 267.

The Subcommittee on Migratory Labor had been in existence prior to the adoption of the resolution. It had been created by the full committee on August 5, 1959, under my chairmanship, and had as its majority members, Senators RANDOLPH and MURRAY, and its minority members, Senators GOLDWATER and JAVITS.

As reported by memorandum last year to the Committee on Rules and Administration, the subcommittee held several hearings in the autumn of 1959, both in Washington and in the field, for the dual purpose of obtaining the views of interested parties on bills that had been referred to the subcommittee relating to agricultural minimum wages, child labor, and crew leader registration, and also to obtain firsthand information about conditions of migratory life and work.

After the subcommittee began operating under authority of Senate Resolution 267, additional hearings and field trips were conducted in various parts of the country. In toto, the subcommittee examined conditions and obtained testimony in eight States and the District of Columbia, ranging from New York to Florida and from the upper Middle West to California.

The hearings have been printed in two parts, and, in addition, a subcommittee print entitled, "The Migrant Farm Worker in America," which is a basic background document, has enjoyed wide distribution and stimulated great interest. An interim report describing in detail the activities of the subcommittee under Senate Resolution 267 is in preparation and will be duly submitted to the Senate.

In accordance with the provisions of Senate Resolution 267, which specified certain areas of study to be examined, the subcommittee has investigated the wages of migratory workers, their working conditions, transportation facilities, housing, health, and educational opportunities for migrants and their children. It has also begun a comprehensive analysis of the nature of and relationship between the programs of the Federal Government and the programs of State and local governments and the activities of private organizations dealing with the problems of migratory workers. Finally, the subcommittee has made certain determinations with respect to the degree of additional Federal action necessary in this area.

The subcommittee in 1960 recommended a number of legislative proposals which are now ready to be processed into law. These proposals included S. 2865, to provide modest grants to States for instruction of migrant adults in basic techniques of modern healthful living; S. 2864, to provide certain payments to assist in improving educational opportunities for migrant children; and S. 2928, to provide financial assistance for housing for migrants. The first two bills were favorably reported to the full Committee on Labor and Public Welfare during the last session, but time factors curtailed further action.

In addition, the subcommittee's work has helped make clear the Federal role with respect to such matters as crew leader abuses, child labor, and minimum wages. Legislative proposals dealing with these aspects of the problem are in preparation at the present time.

In the course of its investigation, the subcommittee has also looked into the patchwork of State laws affecting migrant labor. These laws, despite conscientious serious enforcement efforts behind them, have made little, if any significant impact on the lives of our migratory workers. It has become clear, therefore, that most of the critical problems facing migrant workers are predominantly interstate in character and beyond the reach of State action. The subcommittee is convinced that it must continue studies in depth concerning the interstate characteristics of those problems not yet sufficiently delineated to permit definition of what role, if any, is appropriate to the Federal Government.

Subcommittee savings in the form of unexpended budget funds in the amount of approximately $25,000 will be returned to the contingent fund of the Senate. Such savings were possible because the services of Mr. Frederick R. Blackwell, counsel to the subcommittee, were retained without charge to the subcommittee. In addition, the services of Mr. Robert Locke, subcommittee research assistant, were retained without charge to the subcommittee for a period of 3 months.

The diversified activities of the subcommittee which will be required during the coming session, as well as the greater need for the use of expert consultants and technical advice and assistance, will require a budget equal to that authorized last year. It is of interest to note, however, that despite contemplated diversification and increased scope of the general workload, the number of staff personnel requested in the pending resolution will be no greater than that approved by the Senate last year. In accordance with procedures established by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, the proposed resolution makes provision for the appointment of a minority staff member.

The subcommittee requests the approval of the pending resolution by your committee, and submits the attached budget.

HARRISON A. WILLIAMS, JR.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Calendar No. 63 (S. 1), a bill to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1), to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, which, without objection, will be considered for the purpose of amendment as original text and not as an amendment in the first degree.

PEACE CORPS

Mr. MUSKIE. Madam President, in no other area has the imagination and the brilliance of the Kennedy administration shone more brightly than in the establishment of the Peace Corps. In his actions setting up this program to carry the American dream beyond our shores, the President has drawn on the best in our traditions as exemplified in our Declaration of Independence, our Constitution, the Emancipation Proclamation, the New Freedom, the Four Freedoms, point 4, and the Marshall plan. The response given this program demonstrates very clearly that our people are ready and willing to respond to a challenge for higher service in fulfilling the promise of freedom for all peoples.

With the enthusiasm which has greeted the Peace Corps, the administration and the corps' Director, Sargent Shriver, will receive more than their quota of ideas and recommendations as well as personnel. I hesitate to add to the magnitude of their task. At the same time, the problem of international education has been a matter of concern to me, for some time. This area of activity has been assigned top priority in the Peace Corps. In considering the long-range implications of the program, I wish to put forward some suggestions which may be helpful to the administration and to my colleagues in Congress.

I am confident that the Peace Corps will move beyond its present status under Executive order and be given specific authorization under an act of Congress. Although the outlines of the program have not been filled in, it is not too early to look ahead to more permanent emphases and well-defined, specific goals.

As I have said, the President has given top priority to education in the overall objectives of the Peace Corps. He, and members of the staff of the corps, have mentioned specifically language education, vocational and technical training, programs similar to our Agricultural Extension Service training projects for home and farm, and the construction of rural schools. I am sure that in his planning, Mr. Shriver has in mind a clearly defined set of goals and objectives. I do not anticipate that under this administration we will see any proliferation of unrelated projects.

In an effort to bolster this approach, and to expand it beyond the brief list of projects I have mentioned, I wrote to Mr. Shriver, last week, suggesting another area of education in which the corps might work. It was my intention to point out the benefits which could be gained by stressing teacher training, with appropriate tools drawn from our experience in the use of modern teaching devices, including audiovisual aids, so-called teaching machines, and other teachers' aids.

By utilizing a program of teacher training, we would have a means of multiplying our efforts through the resources and manpower in the countries in which the program is operating. We would contribute to the long-range development of free nations, especially in those newly emerging countries, by helping to create the professional class which is so essential to a modern society. These highly trained personnel would be able to run industry, to run their government, to train their young people, and above all, to provide leadership.

It is this multiplication factor which intrigues me most. We may train individuals for specific tasks to benefit themselves, but unless we set the stage for expanded training opportunities under local leaders we will condemn these countries to be dependent on us much longer than we or they wish. No greater evidence of our interest in their welfare, as opposed to our own short-term political benefits, could be given than our determination to give them the means to lead themselves.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD my letter to Mr. Shriver.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 11, 1961.

HON. SARGENT SHRIVER,
Director, Peace Corps of the United States,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SARGENT. It is evident that the President's Peace Corps is an exciting new idea which has captured the imagination of Americans in all sections of the country.

I am sure you are swamped by the applications of those eager to contribute their services as members of the Corps. I suspect, also, that you do not lack suggestions for useful tasks to which the Corps might apply itself. I cannot resist the urge to add my own.

Since World War II, in our efforts to be of assistance to underdeveloped areas of the world, we have offered economic, military and technical aid. The objective has been to help create conditions under which free institutions could germinate and flourish.

The achievement of this objective has been complicated and made difficult in areas which have never known individual liberty, where the exercise of individual initiative and enterprise are unknown experiences among the masses of the people, where the average citizen is not equipped by education and training to comprehend his own potential and talents, let alone to develop and to apply them. As someone has perceptively stated it: "It is hard to sell democracy to hungry people who cannot read and write."

If these observations have any validity, it seems to me they pinpoint the overriding importance of education to these countries, to their growth and development, to their orientation toward freedom, and to peace in the world.

What are they doing in this connection? What have we done to help them? I am afraid the answers to these questions, in the light of the importance of the objective and the enormity of the task to be performed, must be discouragingly little.

In view of this, the President's statement that the initial emphasis of the Peace Corps would be on education is most encouraging. Certainly this is the greatest single contribution, outside of the fact of the corps itself, which these citizens will be able to make. The list of teaching activities given by the President and members of your staff—including language training, technical and practical training for vocations and improved living conditions, and rural school construction—represents an excellent framework for direct action in education in underdeveloped areas.

I would like to expand upon this program, however, and suggest several areas which could multiply the impact of our program far beyond the individual teaching experiences we are planning.

What must be done? These underdeveloped nations need their own educational systems. They need their own teachers, their own teacher-training facilities. They need their own programs, geared to their own needs, their own people, their own developing cultures, and they must make the major effort themselves. But, to attain these objectives, they must close a gap represented by centuries of accumulated knowledge and educational programs as we have known them. They need guidance.

We can help them to close that gap. We can help them to teach teachers, to organize programs. In helping them we can put to effective use tools whose potential we have not fully explored in our own education programs; e.g. education films, film strips, the so-called teaching machine, and other educational aids. These can accelerate the progress they so badly need.

The modern aids to education which I have mentioned are ideally suited to rapid training in basic skills. They reduce the problems of language barriers, and they take advantage of our knowledge of better methods of communication. By emphasizing the training of teachers we would be multiplying our effectiveness in those areas where the Peace Corps is in operation. We would be making a major contribution to the development of a pool of skilled teachers and community leaders.

Certainly the unhappy experience in the Congo should teach us the unfortunate effects of a failure to train and develop teachers and administrators in a newly emerging nation which must leap from a relatively simple culture into the complex culture of modern technological society. The people of these countries should enjoy some of the benefits of this society, not simply suffer from its burdens.

This need not involve the expenditure of huge sums of money by us. The core of the idea is not the construction of a large physical plant in each country involved, but rather to help develop the ability to teach and the opportunity to learn. A teacher and a pupil on either end of a log can be an adequate schoolroom; but such a system will not bridge the gap between one culture and another as rapidly as it must be done. Let us help provide the essentials necessary to begin. If we help the underdeveloped countries make a good beginning, they will do the rest. In the name of economic aid we have done things infinitely more expensive and infinitely less constructive.

It seems to me the Peace Corps is an ideal vehicle to provide the manpower to implement such an effort. What could be more appropriate than to send free citizens of our great democracy to carry knowledge and the means to acquire it, not as propaganda, but as an enlightening, invigorating force into the far reaches of the underdeveloped world through establishing the base and developing the leaders in these countries to spread this knowledge quickly and effectively. Such a gift, and the giver, would never be forgotten by those who receive it.

Sincerely yours,

EDMUND S. MUSKIE,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. MUSKIE. I have recommended the approach of teacher training to the administration to indicate my conviction that this offers great possibilities to give permanent impact and value to our efforts. I bring this to the attention of my colleagues, today, so that we can be prepared to act on legislation when it is sent to us by the President. Any long-range program, in my opinion, should include this approach, with the necessary appropriations to carry it into effect.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. MANSFIELD. Madam President, for the information of the Senate, following the disposal of the depressed area bill, on which a unanimous-consent agreement has been entered into, it is the intention to take up, although not necessarily in the order given, the OECD Treaty, the Columbia Basin Treaty, if it is reported by the Foreign Relations Committee tomorrow, and the temporary unemployment compensation measures, both as they affect those under social security and those who operate under the Railway Labor Act.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Madam President, may I ask the majority leader whether it is his hope to complete consideration of all those measures this week?

Mr. MANSFIELD. We live in hope.

CORRECTION OF THE DAILY DIGEST OF THE RECORD

Mr. MILLER. Madam President, I ask that a correction be made in the permanent RECORD of Friday, March 10, 1961. The Daily Digest, in reporting the action taken on H.R. 4510, the emergency feed grain bill for 1961, has an error on page D147 when describing the purpose of my amendment to this bill. As printed Friday, it now reads:

Miller amendment to make grain and sorghum producers eligible for price support so long as they reduce total acreage of feed grains by 70 percent.

It should be corrected to read:

So long as they reduce total acreage of feed grains by 30 percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made.

NARCOTICS ADDICTION—A NEW APPROACH IS NEEDED

Mr. KEATING. Madam President, one of the most troublesome and controversial areas in Federal law enforcement today is the field of narcotic drug control. I am especially concerned with this problem, since New York, and particularly New York City, is reported to have the largest concentration of drug addicts, and the most smuggling and illicit traffic, of any jurisdiction in the country. The basic disagreement among those who are trying to solve this problem arises over the status of the addicts themselves and whether we should deal with them by treatment as opposed to punishment.

There are clearly two sides to this question, because people involved in this vicious traffic do not fall neatly into clear categories. At one end of the scale there is the nonaddicted peddler who is making fantastic profits from his cruel and predatory exploitation of the traffic. No one in this country has ever been heard to suggest anything but the most severe punishment for him. The Federal law makes it possible to impose very long sentences for peddling, and even the death penalty if the offense involves the corruption of a minor, and I would be the last to suggest any change in this.

On the other hand, at the other end of the scale there is the addict, hopelessly caught up in his enslavement of the drug, who is plainly the victim of this traffic, and who is at the mercy of the peddler because he has absolutely nowhere else to turn for help or relief. Many people have questioned whether this addicted person should also be inescapably caught up in the same pattern and subjected to the harsh mandatory prison sentences which the law now provides.

The real difficulty is that most addicts sooner or later wind up as real law-breakers because they are driven to steal, to engage in prostitution, to commit other petty crimes or, worst of all, to peddle dope themselves, in order to get money to pay the peddler's price and to meet their own need for drugs.

Our State, with California and a few others, has been in the forefront with experimental provisions for the treatment and rehabilitation of drug addicts. But the efforts and resources we have been able to muster in this effort are only a drop in the bucket. And I must say candidly that no one is yet sure about the success, on any large scale, of rehabilitation and so-called cures.

Our finest experience has been with two splendid Federal hospitals, at Lexington, Ky., and Fort Worth, Tex., where Federal prisoners are presently sent, though their statistics on long-range followups are still inconclusive.

My distinguished colleague [Mr. JAVITS] and I now have in preparation a bill for a new compromise approach for the Federal Government in this field. The bill would make no change in the present penalty structure of the Federal narcotic drug laws, but it would give the courts, when they pass sentence on drug offenders, the option of deciding that the particular offender and the particular offense are motivated by drug addiction, and that the offender would benefit from being exposed to treatment and rehabilitation efforts instead of being merely sentenced to prison. When the judge makes this determination he would be able to turn the prisoner over to the custody of the Surgeon General for a period of not more than 3 years. If the prisoner cooperated and responded to treatment the criminal charges against him would be dismissed and he would assume, in effect, the status of a patient, though the bill also provides, as a safeguard, that anyone who proved to be intransigent and unfit for treatment could be turned back to the prosecutor and made to answer for the crimes charged against him.

The bill closely parallels proposals now being actively advanced in New York for revision of the State laws on this subject. District Attorney Frank Hogan has been the moving force behind this effort to improve the machinery of justice for the treatment of addicts. The American Bar Association and the American Medical Association, through the work of a joint committee on narcotic drugs have expressed their concern about this problem of the status of the drug addict, and currently the American Bar Association, through the American Bar Foundation, is going forward with additional studies on the legal aspects of the problem. Other responsible groups are also working to find a better solution, and carrying on studies and experiments to throw more light in this area. I hope very much that this subject will be given careful study by Congress, because it is an extremely urgent one, particularly to those of us who represent States with large metropolitan centers.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

Mr. KEATING. Madam President, I want to take a few minutes today to discuss some of the matters of greatest concern to me in S. 1, the bill presently before the Senate.

Let me say first of all that I agree that the Congress must take every possible step to increase employment, to relieve the suffering of the unemployed and their families, and to deal with the problems of serious pockets of joblessness throughout our Nation. What concerns me is that, before we pass an area redevelopment bill, we give very serious and very diligent study to several aspects of the bill which I think are of special significance.

I was interested to note the statement yesterday by the Secretary of Commerce, Secretary Hodges. He said he felt that we had reached the bottom, and that we were on the way up. I believe this is the way he put it. This, of course, has come about without any major economic legislation being enacted by the Congress.

It has been brought about almost entirely by the natural force of events in our economy. This very clearly illustrates the way in which our economy has often functioned in the past, and I believe, will continue to function, unless we seriously alter the basic structure of our free, competitive enterprise system.

Madam President, I support the basic premise and the overall objectives of S. 1; but, I want to express myself on several aspects of this legislation which I feel warrant special consideration. Let me list them. Above all, we must not permit this legislation to simply result in the shuffling of industries from one area to another. If it becomes a program to encourage industrial "pirating" then it is no good. What we should be concerned about is creating new jobs. I am grateful to my colleague Senator BUSH for the excellent work which he has done in the Banking and Currency Committee to make this proposition absolutely clear.

Another thing, Madam President, it would be a mistake to create a big new bureaucratic halfbreed to administer this program. It fits logically in the Commerce Department and I agree with those who would put it there. I intend to support the amendment to accomplish this purpose.

Thirdly, I have serious qualms about letting this money be used for machines and equipment. This would seem to permit an unfair competitive advantage to manufacturers benefiting from this program.

I am also concerned about the dangers and pitfalls involved in having this program another backdoor spending scheme. The Congress is supposed to keep an eye on our Federal purse strings. Why must the Federal area redevelopment program be an exception?

I have some qualms, too, about certain features of the rural redevelopment assistance sections of S. 1. I think it is all well and good to build up industries in what are fundamentally rural areas. But, it is not wise or sound to encourage industrial development in areas in which such development would probably not work, because of a lack of adequate transportation facilities or for many other reasons.

There are in New York State several areas in which unemployment is presently very serious. Of the 103 areas which would presently qualify under S. 1, 6 of them are in New York State.

The following New York State communities would presently qualify: Amsterdam, Auburn, Gloversville, Jamestown-Dunkirk, Ogdensburg-Massena-Malone, and Plattsburgh.

In addition, Madam President, present conditions in Utica-Rome and Buffalo have reached the danger mark. Unemployment in these areas has been well above the required minimum for over 2 years. The most recent figures show unemployment in Buffalo, as of January 1961, was 11 percent. In January 1960, it was 7.8 percent. Annual unemployment for 1960 in Buffalo was 8.1 percent, and for Utica-Rome 8.2 percent.

Overall unemployment in New York State is 7.3 percent, the highest rate since the recession of 1949. In mid-January 557,231 New Yorkers were out of work.

With special references to Utica-Rome and Buffalo, it is my impression that these areas could, if present trends continue, be made eligible by the Administrator before January 1962. The discretionary authority of the Administrator is clearly described on page 15 of the report, as follows:

The Administrator may also, at his discretion, designate other areas as eligible for assistance where substantial and persistent unemployment has existed and which have unemployment conditions generally comparable to those of the areas of mandatory designation.

For example, this is intended to give the Administrator the necessary discretion to designate as a redevelopment area and an area which has suffered from a sudden, severe or catastrophic loss of employment opportunity and which might not otherwise become eligible for assistance until at least a year had passed.

I would not want to give the impression that I am solely and exclusively concerned about my State. I realize very well that the most serious "pockets" of joblessness are in other areas. While I am not at all happy about this situation, I am glad that overall conditions in New York are relatively good at the present time.

We all, of course, have a responsibility to deal with problems which affect Americans everywhere. S. 1 is a limited answer to our present unemployment difficulties. It will not create enough jobs and help enough people, but at least it will be a start in helping distressed communities help themselves.

Fundamentally, the "self-help method" is the only thoroughly effective way out of the present economic doldrums of the area about which we are concerned today. Concerted efforts on behalf of civic leaders and public officials at the local level constitute the best and most direct approach to these problems. S. 1 will help these officials, but it will not do the job unless they want to have it done and are willing to work to do it. I am under no illusions. While this bill will be beneficial, the answer is not in our hands.

Present economic conditions may be serious, but they have been a lot worse. What we do this week on S. 1 must be done in a positive and constructive spirit.

We must avoid, wherever we can, ranting and raving and bemoaning the fate of our economy. Our Nation's economy is by far the strongest in the world. It has more potential, more inherent strength, a better long-term record, a better industrial system than the economy of any other nation in the world. We must build upon this record. We must recognize rigidities and problems in our system, but we must not be misled as a result of unwarranted and unnecessary fears about these conditions. The truth of this statement was borne out very effectively by the recent remarks of the distinguished Secretary of Commerce, which I referred to above.

PERSONAL STATEMENT BY SENATOR MORSE

Mr. MORSE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an article entitled "Morse Meanderings," written by George Dixon, a nationally syndicated author, and published in the Washington Post of this morning, March 13, 1961. The article contained references to the senior Senator from Oregon.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MORSE MEANDERINGS
(By George Dixon)

Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Abraham A. Ribicoff was ready and eager to testify on aid to education, but Chairman WAYNE MORSE kept the busy Cabinet official waiting while he indulged in a meandering monolog about the hearing not being a theatrical performance.

No one had suggested it was, but Senator MORSE went into a long rigamarole about some unidentified group wanting to appear before the subcommittee in historical costume. Mr. MORSE said in several thousand words he wouldn't stand for it, then announced he was too busy to preside any longer and offered the chair to Senator JENNINGS RANDOLPH, of West Virginia.

Senator RANDOLPH declined the honor, but MORSE succeeded in impressing Senator JOSEPH S. CLARK, of Pennsylvania, into the satrap's seat, whereupon MORSE left witness Ribicoff still twirling his spectacles, and started from the chamber.

When he passed the press table we asked him to identify the historical group that desired to turn the hearing into a period pageant.

"I won't say another word about it," snapped MORSE, who already had said many thousand too many. Then he strode from the room.

I hadn't really cared two hoots about who wanted to testify in costume, but this out of character clamup by the chairman intrigued me. I grabbed a house phone and called his office.

The girl who answered reported unhesitatingly that a man named Edward Hart, representing himself as leader of a Protestant group, had made the request.

MORSE's girl said Hart wanted to appear as Thomas Jefferson and bring another guy made up as James Madison. They desired to stage a living portrayal of Jefferson and Madison turning over in their graves at the thought of aid to parochial schools.

I could appreciate Senator MORSE's rejection of the skit because the hearing chamber, while commodious, has no facilities for historical characters turning over in their graves. But I couldn't fathom why MORSE was so anxious to protect the identity of the would-be whirlers, especially as his girl told me that Hart had threatened, if turned down, to pay his own way out to Oregon and launch an anti-MORSE crusade.

But this was by no means Senator MORSE's only baffling performance of the day. Before deserting the hearing he voiced regret that Senator RANDOLPH could not participate in the interrogation of Secretary Ribicoff because the West Virginian was in Atlantic City at the American Road Builders Congress.

I stared up at the dias where Senator MORSE was presiding, and two seats away from him was an astonished-looking gentleman, the spitting image of Senator RANDOLPH. The eminent legislator's astral body may have been with the Road Builders in Atlantic City, but his corporeal one (which is ample enough to be discernible) definitely was with the aid-to-educationists in Washington.

The Morsemen also heard Senator NORRIS COTTON, of New Hampshire, urge that 25 percent of the Federal tax on cigarettes be turned over to the States for education.

Senator COTTON said he would be glad to sacrifice some of his cigarette money to learning. It was all I could do to keep from bellowing out that an unofficial survey I conducted recently showed that only a minority of the Senate could be called upon to share the sacrifice.

More than 60 percent of the Senators do not smoke cigarettes. Let me rattle off a batch of nonsmokers at random—RANDOLPH, SYMINGTON, JACKSON, ELLENDER, YARBROUGH, CLARK, HILL, SPARKMAN, GOLDWATER, JAVITS, CHURCH, MCGEE, MCCARTHY, HUMPHREY, GRUENING, STENNIS, KERR, DOUGLAS, MORSE himself, and the two lady Senators, SMITH and NEUBERGER.

The Senate's a submarginal field for cigarette taxing.

ing the service. This seems to me to be highly uneconomical for the railroads and may be adding something to their difficulties. There seems to me to be something wrong if the low-cost carrier is not allowed to assert his inherent advantage. Commonsense would suggest that in a situation where two-thirds of the rail traffic is being carried at less than cost, the ICC, or perhaps the Congress, ought to develop some rule of rate-making which will preserve the lower cost, more efficient, small operator.

This has successfully been accomplished under the antitrust laws for industry generally. Competition should certainly be encouraged, but where a rate is lowered to meet competition, and this produces discrimination, as selective rate cutting always must, then a rate lower than necessary to meet the competition, or so low that it eliminates competition, should be clearly unlawful.

Another important area which vitally affects the cost of goods to the consumer is the proper coordination of all transportation services.

Congress insisted no less than six times in the Interstate Commerce Act that reasonable joint rates and through routes be set up between water carriers and railroads. Exhaustive reports to the Senate, both by the Merchant Marine Subcommittee last August, and by General Doyle's study group, have brought out into the open the widespread evasion of this congressional intent.

Despite years of effort on the part of the water carriers, the clear intent of Congress has been ignored; and what is even more shocking, the Interstate Commerce Commission appears to have condoned this evasion.

Such flouting of congressional intent, stated so explicitly so many times, calls for thorough investigation and action. The clear result of years of evasion is that the benefits of river navigation are being unnaturally restricted to river valleys.

With proper cooperation, low-cost river navigation could be joined to low-cost rail transportation to bring lower prices to communities hundreds of miles from the rivers. I am told, and it seems logical to me, that connecting railroads would greatly benefit from barge-rail coordination, but fear to cooperate because of the retaliation of other railroads.

The Congress should be able to find ways to solve this problem.

Common carriers are the backbone of our free enterprise transportation industry. We are beginning to be alarmed by the decline of the common carriers, in every line. Certainly, if the common carriers disappear, those hurt will be the hundreds of thousands of small businesses who cannot afford to own their own transport services.

No greater stimulus could be given to the development of monopoly than to destroy an equitable public system of distribution. Hence, it is only commonsense to bring under regulation those elements of transportation which are unfairly threatening the health of the common carrier.

This should not be too difficult a problem. Where necessary in the public interest, we have regulated industries before. If we are careful to respect the rights of those already operating by a proper grant of grandfather authority, there should not be too great a difficulty.

No discussion of the river carriers is complete without a reference to tolls. This is a hard-fought issue. The Democratic Party is on record against tolls on the river. I endorse that position.

One problem of the river carriers is precisely the fact that they do not run a passenger service. We know a lot about the airlines because we frequently ride them. We know about the railroads because we ride on them; and from our private autos we see the work of the fleets of trucks on our highways. But we do not see a river towboat unless we seek one out.

There are few more modern industries in our country. In my home city of St. Louis are two major barge lines operating the most modern towboats. The latest in radar keeps them operating on the narrow river channels in fog, rain, or snow. Automatic pilots, electronic depth indicators and gyroscopic swing indicators are most interesting to see.

Did you know, for instance, that a complete revolution in Rhine River transportation methods is now taking place as a result of the work that has been done on our rivers? The Rhine bargemen are switching to push towing.

This industry is a heartening example of free enterprise at its best—modern, progressive, dedicated to the public interest. It is an instrument of the enormous programs of water resource development which are before us today.

It is an industry that is small—even the large companies have gross revenues of under $20 million a year.

As our Nation grows and companies properly become larger to accommodate that growth, we can easily lose sight of the need to keep these small, efficient companies with us. They must not be destroyed.

Just as many facets of our transportation system must be strengthened and preserved, so we of the Congress must be ever alert to any danger to the preservation of our small business enterprises.

This particular small business plays a very important role in keeping down the cost of living for our people. It is because of this fact that I now bring the problem to the attention of my distinguished colleagues.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

Mr. ENGLE. Madam President, it is 6 years since the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] first proposed legislation to help the economically distressed areas of this country.

In these 6 years the problem has become greatly aggravated. Six years ago we had a few dozen distressed areas.

Today we have more than 100 chronically distressed areas. Unemployment in these areas averages about one-eighth of the labor force, and in some communities it has reached the alarming proportion of 20 percent. Nor has the passage of time cured the problems of the many low-income areas. We have in the United States hundreds of communities where the average family income is below $1,500 a year, or about one-fourth of the national average.

Without some Federal help there is little hope that the economic conditions in these communities will improve.

Senator DOUGLAS' area redevelopment proposal has a practical answer to the problem. S. 1, which I have cosponsored, contains a program that is based on the sound and tried proposition of stimulating cooperative efforts on the part of all levels of Government with private enterprise. It embodies a program that will induce productivity and inject new vitality into areas of chronic joblessness. It holds out the prospect of work, of new jobs, of increased production, of expanding business, of fuller utilization of our human resources. Above all, it aims at implementing this program primarily through self-help measures.

Senator DOUGLAS is an eminent economist, and he has never claimed that his proposal will provide a cure for our grave unemployment problem, currently the worst since 1941. The objective of S. 1 is to provide a stimulus for communities to appraise their economic potential, both physical and human, and to supply the necessary seed capital to channel new enterprises into chronic labor surplus areas.

S. 1 is not regional legislation. It is an attack upon a national problem. At present, my own State of California may not benefit directly by this legislation, but I believe that a program attacking chronic unemployment and underemployment prevailing in many States will also help California. The experts have estimated that communities in at least 27 States need the help offered by S. 1. Distressed people in distressed areas are poor customers for the products of California. We cannot afford to be economic isolationists because we cannot have a sound and healthy national economic growth when we have hundreds of communities in the United States that are in a chronic economic plight.

Whatever the specific cause of chronic local distress may be, the problem cannot be solved by a local effort alone. Once a job is lost in a persistent labor surplus area, it is not easy to find another one. And the solution does not lie in telling thousands of people to pick up and move away. Persistent unemployment and underemployment in many communities of this country must be tackled by the Federal Government—not only because of the untold human suffering in the affected areas but also because these conditions threaten the welfare and security of the whole Nation.

I have checked the history of this legislation. During the past 5 years hearings on the subject in three different Congresses have filled some 4,000 closely printed pages. The Senate passed the measure three different times. The problem has been studied, analyzed and scrutinized far more carefully than any other during my 17 years in Congress. The Federal Government's responsibility for our distressed areas has been fully established.

Certainly the affected people in the depressed communities of the United States are finding it hard to understand the double-standard we have employed in accepting our responsibility to help the distressed areas abroad while turning a deaf ear to the distressed areas in our own backyard. A point 4 program is as necessary and constructive for the underdeveloped and distressed areas in our country as it is for the economically needy areas in foreign lands.

The whole country has a stake in restoring our chronically distressed areas to a state of health and vigor. I urge the 87th Congress to move quickly in sending S. 1 to the President for signature.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ENGLE: Madam President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 46 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 14, 1961, at 12 o'clock meridian.

EIGHTY-EIGHT-MILE, TEXAS-SIZE NATIONAL SEASHORE RECREATION AREA ON PADRE ISLAND FAVORED BY MOST TEXANS

MR. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, the hundreds of thousands of Texans and other Americans who are supporting my proposal, S. 4, to establish a national seashore recreation area on Padre Island were highly encouraged by President Kennedy's recent endorsement of the project.

In his message to the Congress on natural resources, President Kennedy urged the Congress to establish three new national seashore recreation areas, one of which would be located on Padre Island.

Although field investigators for the National Parks Service have recommended an 88-mile-long seashore recreation area, as provided in S. 4, certain major property owners and a few others favor a much smaller area for public use and a larger area for private exploitation for the fortunate few of considerable wealth.

Congressional action this session to preserve 88 miles of 118-mile-long Padre Island, America's longest, southernmost unspoiled beach, will assure that we can preserve enough of this place of natural beauty to meet the needs of all Americans.

Moves to reduce the size of the national recreation area and to force the construction of a highway the length of the island, if successful, would constitute a tragic giveaway of public heritage and an unconscionable waste of taxpayers' money. The speculators and promoters would like to see the Federal Government establish a 50-mile park in the middle of the island, much of which is less desirable shell bank area, and build a four-lane highway from Corpus Christi to Brownsville. They would have some 68 miles of high priced choice beach property—made high price and choice by the action of the Federal Government in building a highway where there is now none—located on a taxpayer financed highway that they could peddle for considerable profit at the tax expense of the majority of the people who couldn't afford the luxury of owning such beach property.

As one who has introduced three bills providing for establishment of this national seashore recreation area and after having spent many hours studying and considering the present and future need for public preservation of Padre Island, I am unalterably opposed to those who would see this project degenerate to a windfall for a few private promoters.

The letters and other reports that I am receiving from Texas strongly indicate that the people of our State are alert to this danger, and that most Texans and other people across the country who are interested in national parks, conservation, and the preservation of beaches and parks agree with respect to the need for the full 88-mile size national seashore recreation area on Padre Island.

TRIBUTE TO PAUL C. JOHNSON

Mr. JORDAN. Mr. President, as chairman of the Subcommittee on the Senate Restaurant, I think it fitting that I take this occasion to mark the latest milestone of the most senior employee on Capitol Hill. I refer to Paul C. Johnson, whom all of us know as the friendly, tactful, and efficient headwaiter in our Capitol dining room. On December 24, last, Paul completed his 60th year as an employee of the Senate Restaurant.

When Paul was only 17 years old, he left his home in Culpeper, Va., and came to Washington. His first job at the Capitol was as a substitute bus and pantry boy under a Mr. Page, who was then the restaurant manager. He was recommended for a permanent position by Senator Daniels of Virginia. By his commendable industry, he worked his way from busboy to waiter and finally to headwaiter in 1935. Throughout the years, he has worked under the supervision of some 20 managers, all of whom found his services of the highest order.

Paul was married for the first time in 1905. His wife died in the late 1930's, and he married again in 1940. He has one child by his first wife and expects to become a great-grandfather around the first of April. His hobby is botany, with a particular interest in yellow Texas roses. His most memorable experience during the time he has been employed here was a bomb explosion in the Senate Reception Room during the First World War.

I am sure all of my colleagues appreciate the diplomacy it requires to care for the requirements of the Senators and their many distinguished guests within the limitations of our dining room seating capacity. Paul has always proved himself worthy of the task. Although he is nearly 78 years old, he has the physique of a man in his early sixties. He is blessed with a remarkable memory and can talk with intimate recollection about Senators who have long since gone from our midst.

I feel sure that I speak for all the Members of this body when I say, "Congratulations, Paul, on your 60 years of dedicated service. May the good Lord see fit to keep you in good health so you may continue as our headwaiter in the new enlarged Senate dining room soon to be available."

ARTS COUNCIL OF GREAT BRITAIN ANALOGOUS TO U.S. ARTS FOUNDATION (S. 1250)

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, my proposal for the establishment of a U.S. Arts Foundation is closely analogous to the Arts Council of Great Britain, which has been in operation since 1946; a Canadian Arts Council is also now in operation. The experience and example of the Arts Council of Great Britain have considerable significance in any program for the encouragement and diffusion of the performing and visual arts in the United States. Headquarters of the British Arts Council are in London with special committees functioning in Scotland and Wales, and it operates on a total appropriation of £1,500,000, or 7d. per capita. Its annual report is a printed document of 124 pages, and to illustrate its activities I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, significant excerpts which I have made from the "Fifteenth Annual Report, 1959-60, of the Arts Council of Great Britain."

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM THE 15TH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE ARTS COUNCIL OF GREAT BRITAIN, 1959-60

Without their present subsidies from the Arts Council there would be no Royal Ballet, no Covent Garden Opera, no Sadler's Wells or Old Vic, and it is more than doubtful whether such fruitful experiments as those of the English Stage Co. at the Royal Court Theater or the Mermaid Theater at Puddle Dock would have been possible without the support and association of the Arts Council. For many years now London has enjoyed an international art exhibition of outstanding quality, organized entirely by the arts council. The latest of these is the great Picasso exhibition which packed the Tate Gallery this summer. Outside London none of the five permanent symphony orchestras would have survived without arts council grants, nor would the 30 repertory theaters in England and Scotland which are nowadays the thin red line of defense against the total mechanization of drama. Since the war many annual festivals of the arts have been initiated or revived, and again, without the cooperation of the arts council it is unlikely that Edinburgh, York, Leeds, Norwich, Aldeburgh, Bath, Cheltenham, King's Lynn and Swansea would continue to mount these exemplary and festive demonstrations of the fine arts.

NECESSITY FOR PUBLIC PATRONAGE

The arts in this country maintain in general a high level of performance, and they are attracting audiences very much larger than those of prewar years; yet their economic condition is such that without a national levy of 7d. a head they would have to put up the shutters tomorrow. The audiences contribute around 2 million pounds a year to the music, drama, opera, ballet and art exhibitions provided by the bodies the arts council supports, yet a contribution of another million and a half from public funds is essential to keep those arts alive.

It regards its major responsibility as being to maintain in the metropolis a few national institutions: Covent Garden Opera, the Royal Ballet, Sadler's Wells Opera and the Old Vic. A related obligation is to insure that these national institutions are also seen, as far as possible, outside London.

Of the grants made by the arts council, in the current year, 60 percent will be given to bodies based on London and 40 percent to bodies based outside. But when the figures are adjusted to take into account the subsidies required to send on tour Covent Garden, the Royal Ballet, Sadler's Wells, the Old Vic and the London Philharmonic Orchestra, the proportions of arts council money spent in London and in the rest of Britain work out approximately at 50-50.

PROVINCIAL PRIORITIES

The Arts Council recognizes that it has certain primary obligations outside London as well as in London. In the English provinces it endeavors to consolidate a limited number of regional strongholds of music and drama. Thus it makes substantial grants to the four permanent provincial symphony orchestras—Halle, Royal Liverpool, city of Birmingham and Bournemouth (a total of £115,000 in 1960-61, compared with £79,000 the previous year). These orchestras perform not only in the towns on which they are based, but they also visit many other places within their regions, apart from occasional long-distance forays. In the English provinces, again, the Arts Council follows the policy of supporting a limited number of repertory companies—25 of them at present (at a cost of £100,000 in 1960-61, compared with £50,000 the previous year). These repertory theaters, like the orchestras, endeavor to serve audiences outside as well as inside the towns on which they are based, and the Arts Council's scheme of special transport subsidies to bring audiences in from a reasonable radius has proved a valuable instrument of diffusion.

Finally, in its list of primary obligations in the English provinces, the Arts Council includes a group of festivals, some annual, some triennial, which serve as focal points for the occasional presentation of the fine arts at a level much more ambitious than any which such places could normally sustain.

AMATEUR INFLUENCE

Another factor which bears closely on this problem of diffusion is the important role played by the organized amateur movements in music and drama * * *. The amateur orchestras, choirs and theatricals may be short of high professional competence—although bodies like the British Drama League and the National Federation of Music Societies now give them considerable guidance in various ways—but they can certainly foster an interest in the arts and, within their accepted limits, they are a powerful auxiliary of diffusion * * *. For reasons of finance and policy the Arts Council concentrates its aid upon the professional performances of the arts; yet it recognizes the amateur element as being a valuable auxiliary of diffusion and is this year distributing nearly £50,000 among amateur music societies and arts clubs of various kinds.

IMPACT OF TELEVISION

Since the Arts Council was set up in 1946 there has been developed the most potent instrument of diffusion yet to appear—television * * *. If TV is to be accepted, however, as the major mode of diffusion in the future, those who command its resources must be aware of their duty to replenish the arts they consume on the screen. They must accept their share of maintaining those powerhouses of the living arts on which they ultimately depend for what they put out. It is in the theaters, opera houses and concert halls of this country that there will continue to be found and trained the actors, singers, dancers, composers, decorators and producers on whom TV must so deeply depend for its creators and technicians * * *. This logical alliance between the powerhouses of the arts and the vast networks of TV transmission is one which needs every encouragement.

AID FOR THE ARTIST

The arts council applies the bulk of its annual income to opera and ballet companies, repertory theaters and orchestras, all of which are self-governing bodies wholly responsible for their own policies and programs. But for several years now the arts council, recognizing its obligations to the individual artist, has set aside money to assist and encourage a number of such artists, and several private benefactors have also entrusted money to the arts council for the same purpose. Twelve young dramatists have been awarded bursaries to enable them to develop their talent, ten producers and three designers have been given travel grants to visit theaters abroad and observe what is being done in the European playhouses. A further method of giving young and promising talent a chance it might not otherwise get is the council's policy of offering theater managements limited guarantees to stage productions of new plays which would be deemed too speculative a risk in the usual way of business. In music the council administers funds of about £2,000 a year to assist young artists to pursue more advanced studies and to launch themselves in the professional field.

The largest expenditure of this kind occurs on the visual arts. At present the arts council is setting aside £5,000 a year for the purchase of paintings, sculpture and drawings by contemporary artists.

These methods of encouraging practitioners in all the arts are at present costing the arts council some £10,000 a year.

The arts council rejects this simple arithmetic of equal shares. It applies a means test to all applicants, and calls for estimates of income and expenditure over the trading year before determining what grant or guarantee it will make to an orchestra or a theater company. It also requires periodic trading returns from these bodies so as to observe the course of business, and appoints an arts council officer as an assessor at all meetings of the management committees of the bodies it assists. The arts council must see all the figures, including the occasional profits a company makes from a foreign tour, the income of a rare legacy, or the timely contribution of a supporters' club * * *. The arts council recognizes the anxiety some of its beneficiaries feel about the present system of annual grants. These would be obvious advantages if the arts council were enabled to operate, like the university grants committee, over a given period of 3 or 5 years, and thus give stronger assurances of support than it can offer at present. A long-term pattern of development is difficult to design on the basis of grants that have to be sought annually and sought, sometimes, in a period of squeeze and restriction.

HUNGARIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, March 15 marks the 153d anniversary of the Hungarian revolution of 1848. This day is celebrated by Hungarians the world over in commemoration of the freedom fight of the Hungarian nation against the Hapsburg dynasty and which was finally crushed by the United Austrian and Russian Armies.

It is indeed tragic, Mr. President, that in this era of emerging, independent nations, Hungary, with a history of a thousand years' independence, is under bondage to the Soviet Union. And this bondage continues despite another world-shaking freedom fight in 1956—a freedom fight suppressed by the iron boot of the Kremlin, but which won the hearts and sympathy of free people throughout the world. Those Hungarian heroes of the 1956 revolt will not soon be forgotten, and it is our profound hope that they will not have died in vain.

Moscow is not, nor will it ever be, the true spokesman for its captive nation. People who will fight and die for their individual freedom and national independence will never be stilled, regardless of the form of imperialism under which they must suffer. We have a glaring example of the sociopolitico imperialism of the Soviet Union in the Baltic States—Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia.

But, Mr. President, our interests and efforts in the name of personal and national independence must include the nations enslaved under the label of Slavic brotherhood. The Hungarian people, despite secret trials and executions; despite collectivization of agriculture; and, despite the violation of human rights are still—and will remain—a people who want, desire and should have the right to institute their own form of government—if necessary, under the auspices of the United Nations. I can only urge, Mr. President, that the 12 political resolutions adopted by the United Nations General Assembly since the Hungarian revolution be enforced; that basic human rights and the rights of self-determination be restored.

Our Government was founded on the principle that self-determination of the governed will determine the type of government they shall have. I would wish this freedom of choice for all nations, and it is one of my fondest hopes that through the United Nations we shall employ facilities to enable those now enslaved to have free elections, spiritual, personal and political independence reinstated.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I call up my amendments designated as "3-9-61-D," which I discussed when I presented it on Thursday, March 9.

These amendments will provide for the administration of the area redevelopment program under S. 1 in exactly the same manner in which the President has requested.

On January 25, 1961, President Kennedy wrote to the Vice President and the Speaker of the House recommending the enactment of area redevelopment legislation. In his letter, President Kennedy made the following statement:

The proposed legislation will involve more than one existing department of Government. All must be drawn into the effort. In my judgment, the department best equipped to supervise and coordinate the program is the Department of Commerce. However, if the Congress should decide that a new agency would be more appropriate I believe such an agency could also carry out the objectives I have outlined.

On February 20, 1961, President Kennedy wrote the Speaker of the House again, recommending the prompt enactment of legislation on this subject and enclosing with his letter a draft bill which he urged the House to consider. This bill, which has been introduced as H.R. 4569, vests the powers and functions created by the act in the Secretary of Commerce, instead of creating a new independent agency.

The President has now twice made it entirely clear that he favors vesting these powers and functions directly in the Secretary of Commerce, rather than create a new independent agency reporting directly to him.

The difference between the President's area redevelopment bill and S. 1, the Douglas bill as reported by the committee, on the point of administration, can be stated very simply.

Section 3 of the President's bill reads as follows:

There shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an Area Redevelopment Administrator in the Department of Commerce who shall receive compensation at a rate equal to that received by Assistant Secretaries of Commerce. The Administrator shall perform such duties in the execution of this Act as the Secretary of Commerce (hereinafter referred to as the Secretary) may assign.

Section 3 of the Douglas bill reads as follows:

In order to carry out the purposes of this Act, there is hereby established in the Department of Commerce an Area Redevelopment Administration. Such Administration shall be under the direction and control of an Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be compensated at the same rate as that prescribed by law for an assistant secretary of an executive department.

My amendment on the point of administration reads exactly as does the President's bill.

It had been my intention to support the administration's bill this year, although I had opposed similar bills in the past, mainly on the grounds of my fears about the way in which they would be administered.

In my opinion, the wide powers which this bill provides, particularly with respect to the selection of redevelopment areas, require supervision at Cabinet level. The pressures which will be brought to bear upon the administration to designate this area or that, present great opportunities for favoritism, not to say boondoggling. To deal with these pressures requires the prestige and power which cannot be found at lower than Cabinet level, and the type of judgment which business background gives.

The President has never indicated his approval of the proposal in S. 1, as reported. The Department of Commerce wrote me under date of March 8, and I read from that letter as follows:

While Secretary Hodges is unable to reply personally to your letter today, I am confident that he would express complete endorsement of the amendment which you propose. In the first place, your proposed amendment, if adopted, would make S. 1 consistent with the bill now pending in the House on the same subject—and on which the Secretary testified several days ago. For your convenient reference, I enclose copy of Secretary Hodges' testimony before the House subcommittee. In addition, I enclose copy of his testimony before the Senate subcommittee, at which time he took the same position on the issue of administration of this proposed area redevelopment program.

I would also emphasize that adoption of the amendment which you have proposed would, on the issue of administration, be consistent with the views of the President as reflected in a draft bill on area redevelopment which the President transmitted to the Speaker of the House several days ago. This bill is now pending in the House as H.R. 4569.

It is our very definite opinion that the amendment to S. 1 which you have proposed should be adopted.

The Bureau of the Budget advises that from the standpoint of the administration's program there is no objection to the submission of this letter.

After the receipt of that letter, the Secretary of Commerce called me and stated that this was his personal view. He endorsed the letter. He called to clear up the matter because the letter had been written in his absence.

Thus, the Department of Commerce letter to me stands as the viewpoint of the administration on this proposal. The fact is, of course, that it was cleared with the Bureau of the Budget as shown in the text of this letter, and it represents the viewpoint of the administration.

As I said on last Thursday, it seems to me that the President's preferences with respect to organizational matters are entitled to a great deal of weight, particularly, as in this case, where they do not involve quasi-legislative or quasi-judicial powers but are purely administrative and executive powers.

This same principle ought to apply to activities placed in a department. That is, the views of the Secretary of Commerce, in the absence of any overriding consideration, certainly should govern on the question of administration.

The Douglas bill would place the administration in the Department, but the Secretary would have no control whatsoever over the powers of the Administrator.

The placing of the Area Redevelopment Administration in the Department is not a compromise at all. In my opinion it is worse than an independent agency. It invites all sorts of questions with respect to the relations between the Administrator and the Secretary of Commerce and sows the seeds of discord between the President, the Secretary, and the Administrator. The confusion and conflict which inevitably will result from this proposal in my judgment will be harmful to the program.

When I spoke last Thursday, I invited attention to the fact that the committee amendment flies in the face of the first principles of the Hoover Commission. The 1950 reorganization plans recommended and supported by the Hoover Commission were designed to transfer to the heads of departments the powers and functions of officials within the departments. Reorganization Plan No. 5 of 1950, dealing with the Department of Commerce, was adopted. The Senate report on the resolution dealing with the plan included the following statement:

The paramount importance placed by the Hoover Commission on clarity of lines of authority is demonstrated time and again in its reports. That major thesis is first developed in general terms in the text and recommendations of Report No. 1 on general management, and is then followed up in the separate reports dealing with individual functions or agencies of the Federal Government:

"Report No. 1, on general management

"The introductory chapter of Hoover Commission Report No. 1, on general management, opens with the following paragraphs:

"In this part of its report, the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government deals with the essentials of effective organization of the executive branch. Without these essentials, all other steps to improve organization and management are doomed to failure * * *.

"Definite authority at the top, a clear line of authority from top to bottom, and adequate staff aids to the exercise of authority do not exist. Authority is diffused, lines of authority are confused, staff services are insufficient. Consequently, responsibility and accountability are impaired.

"To remedy this situation is the first and essential step in the search for efficiency and economy in the executive branch of the Federal Government.

"There follow the * * * numbered recommendations from the same report relative to centralization of functions and an adequate supervisory staff:

"14. Under the President the heads of departments must hold full responsibility for the conduct of their departments. There must be a clear line of authority reaching down through every step of the organization and no subordinate should have authority independent from that of his superior.

"18. Each department head should receive from the Congress administrative authority to organize his department * * *.

"20. We recommend that the department head should be given authority to determine the organization within his department."

The new Area Redevelopment Administration which would be created by S. 1, as reported, would be exactly the kind of organization which the Hoover Commission in 1950 was trying to get rid of.

In the debate on my amendments last Thursday, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] cited three examples of agencies within departments which would be, as they said, set up in a manner identical to the Area Redevelopment Administration under the Douglas bill. The examples they gave were the Rural Electrification Administration in the Department of Agriculture, the Public Health Service in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the Wage and Hour Division in the Department of Labor.

They were wrong in all three instances. On the contrary, the status of these agencies within their respective Departments is the same as the status of the Area Redevelopment Administration under my amendment and under the President's plan.

The REA is administered by the "Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture."

The Public Health Service is administered by the Surgeon General "under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare."

With respect to the Wage and Hour Division, the functions are vested, under the provision of Reorganization Plan No. 6 of 1950, in the Secretary of Labor, and the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division administers those functions delegated to him by the Secretary.

The examples cited by the two Senators are, or ought to be, proof of the validity of my position.

I think the President and the Secretary of Commerce are entitled to our support, or at least their views are entitled to overwhelming consideration in the absence of some really persuasive reasons to the contrary on matters dealing solely with administration within their own Administration or Department. I ask Senators to support the President and the Secretary by voting for my amendments.

I hope the Senate will adopt the amendments.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think the amendments offered by the Senator from Arkansas are a mistake. I argued this matter last week. I then made it clear that we have no objection to the Secretary of Commerce or to his Under Secretary or to his Assistant Secretaries, but that the record of the Department of Commerce in the past has been one of very vigorous opposition to the whole idea of area redevelopment. I stated that the staff of the Department of Commerce carries over into the new administration, and that they cannot be expected, as conscientious men, quickly to change their minds.

Furthermore, I pointed out that the Business Advisory Council, of 60 members, which is very close to the Department of Commerce, represents primarily big business enterprise and really consists of the moving spirits in the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce, and that those two organizations have consistently opposed this measure and continue to oppose it. I said, therefore, that I thought it would have been putting the measure in danger if its administration were lodged in the Department of Commerce.

I think it is significant that virtually every organization which has opposed and is opposing the measure wishes to have it lodged in the Department of Commerce, and that virtually every Senator who is opposed to the measure wishes to have it lodged in the Department of Commerce. I have been very careful to say that I do not believe that everyone who wishes to have the administration of the act lodged in the Department of Commerce is necessarily opposed to the measure; I simply have said that those who are opposed to the measure are in favor of having it administered by the Department of Commerce. There is good reason for this. If they cannot defeat the measure in an outright fashion, they wish to have it placed in a body which has been unsympathetic to it in the past and which they believe is still controlled by groups which are unsympathetic. So I think the amendments may be a grave mistake, and I wish to make my own record clear.

However, we have been counting noses, and I think it is apparent that the amendments would carry; and, of course, the views of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, who is always influential, will have great weight. So, as in war, it is sometimes necessary to retire from the front lines to a prepared position. I am ready to accept the amendments, provided the Senator from Arkansas can assure us that they come from a friendly heart and are not merely a prelude to a further series of gutting amendments which would take virtually all the vigor and benefit from the bill. I should like some assurance from the Senator from Arkansas as to how he feels about certain other portions of the bill before I formerly accept his amendments.

I am in a very cooperative mood. In the interest of harmony and peace, as well as with a recognition of the fact that on a yea-and-nay vote we might lose, I am ready to accept the Senator's amendments. However, I hope the Senator from Arkansas will not subsequently join those who are attempting to gut what remains of the bill.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, first, I should not have to remind the Senator from Illinois that since the days he mentioned, there has been an election. There is a new Secretary of Commerce, and I feel certain that there will be a number of new members of the Advisory Council, if not a completely new Council.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is a mistake which the Secretary of Commerce fell into in his broadcast on Sunday. The members of the Business Advisory Council are not named by the Secretary of Commerce. It is a self-perpetuating body, the members of which choose their successors. This is a very important point to consider.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I was only reminding the Senator that one of the very prominent members of that Council resigned.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; he did not resign from the Council; he resigned as its chairman.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Well, he resigned as chairman. However, the Secretary of Commerce has stated that he has under consideration the whole matter of what to do about the Business Advisory Council. In any case, the Secretary is a new Secretary, and the administration is a new administration. The attitude of this administration is quite different from that of the previous one with respect to the proposed legislation.

I do not mind saying to the Senator from Illinois that my own view about the character of the administration and its quality is greatly influenced by the change in administrators. Perhaps the Senator from Illinois is not affected as much as I am by the difference in the parties, but the change makes quite a difference to me.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think I am even more affected by it than is the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. On the matter of supporting the bill, I have stated my position. I will pursue the Senator's other comment at a different time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator started it, so I replied.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. My State seems to do better in supporting the party nationally than does the State of the Senator from Illinois. My State has not deserted the party for many more years than the Senator's State. He has nothing to brag about concerning the loyalty of the State of Illinois to the Democratic Party.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think the State of Illinois has done very well. I am ready to match the voting record of the senior Senator from Illinois with that of the junior Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In the last election, the result in Illinois was so close that it is still undetermined.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, it is not undetermined at all. However, I do not wish to enter into a debate with the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, because I know that his accents are much more polished than my own. I will not enter into a shouting match. I am ready to accept the Senator's amendments.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Then I have nothing more to say, if that is all. Let us vote.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, on these amendments I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, before the Senator yields back his time, will he yield to me?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not speak in opposition to the amendments. I support the amendments. They are substantially the same as the provision contained in the bill which I introduced, S. 6, and I am very happy to see it become a part of the bill now under consideration.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendments were agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I do not ask to have the amendment read; instead, it can be reported by title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD, without being read at this time.

The amendment submitted by Mr. DIRKSEN is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Area Assistance Act of 1961".

DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The Congress declares that, even during periods of prosperity for the Nation as a whole, some of our communities suffer substantial and persistent unemployment; that such unemployment causes hardship to many individuals and their families and detracts from the national welfare by wasting vital human resources; that to overcome this problem the Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, should help areas of substantial and persistent unemployment to take effective steps in planning and financing their economic development; that Federal assistance should enable communities to achieve lasting improvement and decrease economic vulnerability by the establishment of stable and diversified local economies; and that new employment opportunities should be created rather than merely transferred from one community to another.

AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

SEC. 101. (a) The Secretary of Commerce, hereinafter referred to as the Secretary, may designate as an area of substantial and persistent unemployment any area certified as eligible for such designation by the Secretary of Labor.

(b) To assist areas in the United States designated as areas of substantial and persistent unemployment, the Secretary is authorized—

(1) to make grants for technical assistance for such areas in accordance with the provisions of section 106 (a) of this Act; and

(2) to provide loans for such areas in accordance with the provisions of section 107 of this Act.

(c) The Secretary is also authorized—

(1) to extend the full cooperation of the Federal Government to all areas in the United States (including Puerto Rico) in promoting the more effective use of local resources, in the establishment of new industries based on local resources, and in the expansion of existing industries; such cooperation to be provided through technical advice and consultation and, when necessary, through the conduct of special studies.

(2) to decrease, through grants made in accordance with the provisions of section

106(b) of this Act, the economic vulnerability of (i) towns predominantly dependent on one industry, (ii) small towns which could serve as centers for economic diversification of low-income rural areas, and (iii) other low-income rural areas not subject to assistance as in (ii), by helping them to develop manufacturing, processing, and other activities calculated to diversify and improve their economies; and

(3) to coordinate his functions under this Act with those of the Secretary of Agriculture and other officials administering Federal programs affecting local economic conditions.

(d) As used in this Act:

(1) The term "United States" includes the several States and the District of Columbia;

(2) The term "State" refers to an individual State or the District of Columbia; and

(3) The term "loan" includes loans, immediate participation in loans, and purchase of evidences of indebtedness.

AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF LABOR

SEC. 102. (a) The Secretary of Labor shall from time to time, or upon the request of the Secretary, certify the existence of areas eligible for designation as areas of substantial and persistent unemployment whenever he finds, on the basis of available labor force data, or studies which he initiates when he deems necessary that—

(1) the rate of unemployment in the area, excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal factors is currently 6 per centum and has averaged at least 6 per centum for the qualifying time periods specified in (2) below; and

(2) the annual average rate of unemployment in the area has been at least—

(A) 50 per centum above the national average for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

(B) 75 per centum above the national average for two of the preceding three calendar years, or

(C) 100 per centum above the national average for one of the preceding two calendar years.

(b) In the case of labor market areas for which appropriate historical labor force data have not been compiled, the Secretary of Labor shall certify as eligible for designation as areas of substantial and persistent unemployment those areas in which the unemployment rate and duration, based on a survey of available labor force data, generally equals or exceeds the rate and duration specified in section 102(a).

(c) The Secretary of Labor may also certify under subsection (a) or (b) of this section the existence of eligible areas upon request of any appropriate State government agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision.

(d) The Secretary of Labor is authorized, upon request and whenever he determines that such studies are needed, to undertake, or to provide assistance to others in studies of the size, characteristics, skills, adaptability, occupational potentialities, and related aspects of the labor force of an area certified under this section.

(e) When skills of the labor force in an area designated under section 101 are not such as to facilitate full utilization of the human resources in such area, the Secretary of Labor is authorized to provide advice and technical assistance in developing and carrying out a program to improve the utilization of such labor force.

(f) Whenever the Secretary of Labor finds a need for vocational education services in an area designated under section 101 and when such area has an economic development program as provided in section 107(b)(9) he is authorized to assist interested agencies to determine the vocational training needs of unemployed individuals residing in the area, and he shall notify the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare of the vocational training or retraining requirements of the area. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, through the Commissioner of Education, is authorized to provide assistance, including financial assistance when necessary or appropriate, to the State vocational education agency for the provision of such services in the area. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $1,500,000 annually for the purpose of providing financial assistance under this subsection.

AUTHORITY OF HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE ADMINISTRATOR

SEC. 103. Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, is amended by adding the following new heading and section at the end of title I:

"AREAS OF SUBSTANTIAL AND PERSISTENT UNEMPLOYMENT"

"SEC. 113. (a) When the Secretary of Commerce certifies to the Administrator (1) that any county, city, or other municipality (referred to as 'municipality' in this section) is situated in an area designated by the Secretary of Commerce pursuant to the Area Assistance Act of 1961 as an area of substantial and persistent unemployment, and (2) that there is a reasonable probability that with assistance provided under the Area Assistance Act of 1961 and other undertakings the area will be able to achieve lasting improvement in its economic development, the Administrator is authorized to extend financial assistance to a local public agency in any such municipality under this title and the provisions of this section.

"(b) The Administrator may provide such financial assistance under this section without regard to the requirements or limitations of section 110(c) of this title that the project area be clearly predominantly residential in character or that it will be predominantly residential under the urban renewal plan.

"(c) Financial assistance under this section may be provided for any project involving a project area including primarily industrial or commercial structures suitable for rehabilitation under the urban renewal plan for the area.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this title, a contract for financial assistance under this section may include provisions permitting the disposition of any land in the project area designated under the urban renewal plan for industrial or commercial uses to any public agency or nonprofit corporation for subsequent disposition as promptly as practicable by such public agency or corporation for the redevelopment of the land in accordance with the urban renewal plan: Provided, That any disposition of such land to such public agency or corporation under this section shall be made at not less than its fair value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan: And provided further, That the purchaser from or lessees of such public agency or corporation, and their assignees, shall be required to assume the obligations imposed in conformity with the requirements of section 105(b) hereof.

"(e) Following the execution of any contract for financial assistance under this section with respect to any project, the Administrator may exercise the authority vested under this section for the completion of such project notwithstanding any determination made after the execution of such contract that the area in which the project is located may no longer be an area of substantial and persistent unemployment.

"(f) Not more than 10 per centum of the funds authorized for capital grants under section 103 after June 30, 1960, shall be available to provide financial assistance under this section."

SEC. 104. (a) The first sentence of section 202(c) of title II of the Housing Amendments of 1955 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) In the processing of applications for financial assistance under this section, the Administrator shall give priority to applications of counties, cities, and other municipalities and political subdivisions for financing needed public facilities in areas determined to be areas of substantial and persistent unemployment under the Area Assistance Act of 1961: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce certifies there is reasonable probability that with assistance made available under the Area Assistance Act of 1961 and other undertakings such areas will be able to achieve lasting improvement in their economic development; and equal priority to applications of smaller municipalities for assistance in the construction of basic public works (including works for the storage, treatment, purification, or distribution of water; sewage, sewage treatment, and sewer facilities; and gas distribution systems) for which there is an urgent and vital public need; the Administrator shall give a first priority above all others to applications for financing needed public facilities in connection with, and that will directly serve, a project eligible under section 107 of the Area Assistance Act of 1961."

(b) The first sentence of section 203(a) of title II of the Housing Amendments of 1955 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) In order to finance activities under this title, the Administrator is authorized and empowered to issue to the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time, and to have outstanding at any one time in an amount not exceeding $100,000,000, notes and other obligations, which limit shall be increased by such amounts, not exceeding $100,000,000, as may be specified from time to time in appropriation Acts."

URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

SEC. 105. Paragraph (3) of section 701(a) of the Housing Act of 1954 is amended by inserting after "Cities, other municipalities, and counties which" the following: "(A) are situated in areas designated as areas of substantial and persistent unemployment under section 101(a) of the Area Assistance Act of 1961, or (B)."

GRANTS FOR TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 106. (a) In carrying out section 101(b)(1), the Secretary is authorized to make grants for technical assistance including studies evaluating the needs of, and developing potentialities for, economic growth of areas designated under section 101(a). These grants may be made without regard to section 3648 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U.S.C. 529). Appropriations are hereby authorized for these grants in an amount not to exceed $1,500,000 annually.

(b) In carrying out section 101(c)(2), the Secretary is authorized to make similar grants for the benefit of towns and areas described therein. Negotiations taking into account the financial ability of the grantee and other relevant considerations shall be made for contributions to costs of projects undertaken hereunder. These grants may be made without regard to section 3648 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U.S.C. 529), and appropriations therefore are hereby authorized in an amount not to exceed $2,000,000 annually.

LOANS

SEC. 107. (a) In carrying out section 101(b)(2) of this Act the Secretary is authorized to purchase evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (including immediate participations therein) to aid in financing any project within an area of substantial and persistent unemployment for the purchase or development of land and facilities for industrial usage, for the construction of new factory buildings, for rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied factory buildings, or for the alteration, conversion, or enlargement of any existing buildings for industrial use. Such financial assistance shall not be extended for working capital, for purchase of machinery or equipment, or to assist establishments relocating from one area to another.

(b) Financial assistance under this section shall be on such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines, subject, however, to the following restrictions and limitations:

(1) The total amount of loans and loan participations (including purchased evidences of indebtedness) outstanding at any one time under this section shall not exceed $75,000,000;

(2) Such assistance shall be extended only to applicants, both private and public, approved by the State (or any agency or instrumentality thereof concerned with problems of economic development) in which the projects to be financed shall be located;

(3) The project for which financial assistance is sought is reasonably calculated to provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment within the area of substantial and persistent unemployment wherein it is, or will be, located;

(4) No such assistance shall be extended hereunder unless the financial assistance applied for is not otherwise available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on reasonable terms;

(5) No loans shall be made unless it is determined that an immediate participation is not available;

(6) No evidences of indebtedness shall be purchased and no loans shall be made unless it is determined that there is a reasonable assurance of repayment;

(7) No loan, including renewals or extension thereof may be made hereunder for a period exceeding thirty years and no evidence of indebtedness maturing more than thirty years from date of purchase may be purchased hereunder: Provided, That the foregoing restrictions on maturities shall not apply to securities or obligations received by the Secretary as a claimant in bankruptcy or equitable reorganization or as a creditor in other proceedings attendant upon insolvency of the obligor, or if extension or renewal for additional periods, not to exceed, however, a total of ten years, will aid in the orderly liquidation of such loans or of such evidence of indebtedness;

(8) Each loan shall bear interest at a rate equal to the interest rate currently payable under section 108(e) on advances from the Treasury, plus one half of 1 per centum per annum for administrative expenses and a reserve for losses on loans;

(9) (A) Not less than 15 per centum of the aggregate cost to the applicant (excluding all other Federal aid in connection with the undertaking) of acquiring or developing land and facilities, and of constructing, altering, converting, rehabilitating, or enlarging the building or buildings of the particular project shall be supplied by the State or any agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision thereof, or by a community or area organization, as equity capital or as a loan repayable only after the financial assistance hereunder has been repaid in full according to the terms thereof, and, if such loan is secured, its security shall be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing the financial assistance hereunder;

(B) Of the remaining 85 per centum of the aggregate cost, 35 per centum of the aggregate cost may be loaned by the Secretary under the terms of this Act and security for such a loan may be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens which secure any loan or financing other than funds required by section 107(b) (9) (A).

(C) Loans shall not be available hereunder unless other funds are available in an amount which, together with assistance provided hereunder and funds provided under section 107(b) (9) (A), shall be sufficient to pay such aggregate cost; and

(10) No such assistance shall be extended unless there shall be submitted to and approved by the Secretary an overall program for the economic development of the area and a finding by the State, or any agency, instrumentality, or local political subdivision thereof, that the project for which financial assistance is sought is consistent with such program: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall authorize financial assistance for any project prohibited by laws of the State or local political subdivision in which the project would be located.

AREA ASSISTANCE FUND

SEC. 108. (a) There is hereby authorized to be established in the Treasury of the United States a revolving fund to be known as the area assistance fund (hereinafter referred to as the "fund"), which shall be available to the Secretary for the payment of all obligations and expenses in connection with the loans authorized under section 101(b) (2).

(b) When requested by the Secretary, advances shall be made to the fund from the appropriations made therefor. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of making advances to the fund, without fiscal year limitation, an amount not exceeding $75,000,000.

(c) Receipts arising from the loan program shall be credited to the fund.

(d) Any moneys in the fund determined by the Secretary to be in excess of current needs shall be credited to the appropriation from which advanced to be held for future advances to the fund.

(e) There shall be paid into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury at the close of each fiscal year interest on advances to the fund at rates which shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury at the time the advances or commitments for advances are made after taking into consideration the current average market yields of outstanding marketable obligations of the United States having maturities comparable to loans made by the Secretary.

(f) Contributions shall be made from the fund to the civil service retirement and disability fund, on the basis of annual billings as determined by the Civil Service Commission, for the Government's share of the cost of the civil service retirement system applicable to employees (and their beneficiaries) performing activities authorized under section 101(b) (2). Contributions shall also be made to the employee's compensation fund, on the basis of annual billings as determined by the Secretary of Labor, for the benefit payments made from such fund on account of employees performing activities authorized under section 101(b) (2). The annual billings shall also include a statement of the fair portion of the cost of the administration of the respective funds, which shall be paid by the Secretary into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

SEC. 109. Whenever the Administrator shall determine that employment conditions within any area previously designated by him as an area of substantial and persistent unemployment have changed to such an extent that such area is no longer eligible for such designation under section 101(a) of this Act, no further assistance shall be granted under this Act, with respect to such area and, for the purposes of this Act, such area shall not be considered an area of substantial and persistent unemployment: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall—

(a) prevent such area from again being designated an area of substantial and persistent unemployment under section 101(a)

of this Act if the Administrator determines it to be eligible under such section or

(b) affect the validity of any contracts or undertakings with respect to such area which were entered into pursuant to this Act prior to a determination by the Administrator that such area no longer qualifies as an area of substantial and persistent unemployment. The Administrator shall keep the departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and interested State or local agencies, advised at all times of any changes made hereunder with respect to the designation of any area.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 119. In addition to appropriations specifically authorized by sections 106 and 108, appropriations are further authorized for the carrying out of other provisions and purposes of this Act.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I believe I am entitled to be recognized by the Chair for 1 hour, to speak in support of my amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, for 1 hour.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, momentarily I withdraw my amendment, in deference to the distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, who has an amendment to submit.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I call up my amendments identified as 3-7-61—A.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments offered by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the amendments in extenso and to have them printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the amendments were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 49, line 25, strike out "raised" and insert in lieu thereof "appropriated".

On page 53, line 6, strike out "raised" and insert in lieu thereof "appropriated".

On page 56, beginning with line 14, strike out all through line 15 on page 57, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. (a) When requested by the Administrator, advances shall be made to the revolving funds, established under sections 6(c) and 7(f) of this Act, from appropriations made therefor. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of making advances to such funds, without fiscal year limitation, an amount not to exceed $300,000,000.

"(b) Receipts arising from the loan programs authorized in sections 6 and 7 shall be credited to the appropriate revolving fund. Any moneys in any such fund determined by the Administrator to be in excess of current needs shall be credited to the appropriation from which advanced to be held for future advances to such fund.

"(c) There shall be paid into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury at the close of each fiscal year interest on advances to any such fund at rates which shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury at the time the advances or commitments for advances are made after taking into consideration the current average market yields of outstanding marketable obligations of the United States having maturities comparable to loans made by the Administrator under this Act."

On page 57, line 16, strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)".

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, the amendments present no new question for us. Ever since the days of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, we have been confronted with the question raised by the amendments. We did not have much cash, and we did not know how much money Congress wanted to put into the rehabilitation of banks, railroads, and other defunct businesses, and so we resorted to an unfortunate device. It is known as back door financing. Under that device, we authorize an agency to borrow money, whatever it says it needs, directly from the Treasury, and the agency offers its notes. Presumably, the loans will be repaid, but I am sure anybody who reads this bill will agree that many loans made under the bill will never be repaid.

S. 1 would establish three revolving funds for three lending programs. The money for these revolving funds would be borrowed from the Treasury Department under the so-called borrowing authority or back door financing.

I have long been opposed to the use of the borrowing authority as a device to bypass the appropriations process. This device not only bypasses the Appropriations Committee; it also bypasses the basic principle that all money bills must be initiated in the House of Representatives.

The Constitution of the United States provides, in article I, section 9, that:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

This constitutional mandate has been implemented in both Houses of the Congress by the adoption of rules establishing the standing Committees on Appropriations. Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate sets forth explicitly the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee. Under the rule, all proposed legislation dealing with the appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government must be referred to that committee. Identical language is contained in rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, which states the jurisdiction of the House Appropriations Committee.

As all of us know, proposed legislation creating a new governmental activity is considered by some other committee than the Committee on Appropriations. In order to provide for the financing of such new activities, the basic legislation generally provides authority to obtain an appropriation, by the use of language such as "There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for," and so forth.

In January 1932, in order to meet the emergency situation caused by the depression, the Committee on Banking and Currency adopted a new procedure, with little or no precedent, to finance the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act authorized the RFC to sell its obligations directly to the Secretary of the Treasury, with the purchase of these obligations to be treated as a public-debt transaction. By borrowing directly from the Treasury in this manner, there was no necessity to secure the approval of the Committee on Appropriations for the expenditure of these funds.

This method of appropriating funds from the Treasury in a legislative bill was used from time to time during the depression years and World War II. Perhaps this procedure can be justified in emergency situations, but its use in recent years has become increasingly commonplace.

It is surprising that over the years this procedure for authorizing direct borrowing from the Treasury in the legislative bill has not been tested by a point of order in the Senate. On many occasions the reverse situation, legislation in an appropriation bill, has been ruled out of order. It is obvious that any language in a bill which orders the payment of money from the Treasury without the necessity of further action by the Congress is an appropriation, and the Senate rules require such legislation to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Those who defend the right of committees other than the Appropriations Committee to include an appropriation in a legislative bill claim exemption from rule XXV of the Senate because of the language in that rule "for the support of the Government." According to that claim, the Government, for which appropriations must be handled exclusively by the Appropriations Committee, consists of the three branches of the Government—executive, judicial, and legislative—and nothing more. But that interpretation would exclude the biggest appropriation bill for defense. On the other hand, if we admit that the Armed Services Committees of the House and Senate could not bypass the Appropriations Committees and report appropriation bills for the Defense Department, we are forced to admit that the words "support of the Government" mean any duly authorized operation of the Government, and that covers everything that the Congress is authorized by the Constitution to do.

Frankly, it was a sad day for those of us who believe in economy as well as in States rights when the Congress claimed that the general welfare clause was a general grant of power instead of a limitation upon the taxing power, and that claim was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States, because, if we place no constitutional limitation upon what Congress can do, confusion arises concerning terms used at a time when the Government was exercising no powers except those granted by the Constitution, expressly or by necessary implication. The Government is now engaged in a multiplicity of actions never dreamed of when rule XXV was originally adopted. Clearly, therefore, it would be an improper construction of rule XXV to say that it included some functions of the Government, and not all functions.

Again, it has been claimed that a legal right to bypass the Appropriations Committee has been established by precedent. Under the English common law, and I assume under the laws of all States, it is possible to gain possession of real estate by adverse possession, but there is nothing in the rules of the Senate or in the history of those rules to indicate that any rule of the Senate can be legally changed simply by frequent violations of it.

While admitting that members of the Senate Appropriations Committee have been negligent through the years in the protection of their exclusive jurisdiction in the handling of appropriations bills, it should be apparent to all that the time has come when Members of the Senate must make a definite decision on how they prefer to make appropriations and to manage the national debt.

If the Banking and Currency Committee can use this procedure to finance any new program its members desire, there is no reason why all the other committees cannot do the same. I would not be at all surprised if an attempt is made in the near future to finance the entire foreign aid program by direct borrowing from the Treasury, thus avoiding the risk of having these funds cut by the Appropriations Committee. In fact, there already is precedent for such action. The $3.7 billion loan to England in 1946 and the $60 million loan to Spain in 1950 were financed by direct borrowing from the Treasury. If the violation of rule XXV is permitted to continue, an endless number of Government programs could be financed in this manner.

I realize there may be emergency situations in the future necessitating the use of the direct borrowing procedure. In such situations, the orderly legislative procedure would be to waive the rule by unanimous consent. In this manner the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee would be recognized and the entire process would be open and above-board.

There are those who argue for use of the borrowing authority in the case of loan programs and the use of the appropriations processes in expenditures programs. I do not agree with this position, but even its adherents should hesitate to use the borrowing authority for the loan programs under S. 1. The loans will be secured, if at all, by third and fourth and fifth mortgages. They will be made for long terms—25 years in the case of industrial and commercial facilities, and up to 40 years in the case of public facilities. There is no requirement that they should be amortized. Under the original bill a small sinking fund was provided for of one-fourth of 1 percent per annum, but under the amended bill, not even this tiny percentage need be set aside in a sinking fund.

Senators should remember that these loans are to be made in distressed areas where outside financing is not available, where the redevelopment program may or may not succeed over the next 25 to 40 years, with no amortization required, and perhaps no security whatever. It seems to me entirely vain to hope that any substantial part of these loans will ever be repaid.

What has happened under the Defense Production Act borrowing authority may well happen again. The agency may well become insolvent as a result of having to pay interest on money borrowed from the Treasury which has gone down the drain. The administration, like those administering the Defense Production Act borrowing authority, may soon be back pleading to have the interest waived, pleading to have the interest canceled, and pleading to have the losses forgiven. By that time it will be too late for the Appropriations Committee or any other congressional committee to review the programs and to see whether any caution or discretion has been used in administering them.

In short, I oppose the use of the borrowing authority under S. 1, both because it conflicts with what I consider sound principles of constitutional government and because the loan program is so loose and so vague that the only results will be losses of funds.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I concur with the views expressed by the Senator from Virginia in regard to back-door financing. I should like to ask a question dissociated from the subject of the discussion today. I invite the Senator's attention to the community facilities bill which was passed either last year or the year before. How did that bill differ in its provisions from the section of the bill we are now considering for lending funds to build community facilities?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The community facilities program, or more precisely the public facilities program in the community facilities administration is part of the housing bill. As the Senator from Virginia recalls, they were included in a general back-door financing program.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The community facilities bill which we passed provided for loans to do practically all the things covered by the pending bill in regard to community facilities, except that the pending bill provides for grants as well as loans.

Mr. ROBERTSON. It would be really just a duplication, so far as the loan program in S. 1 is concerned.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The community facilities aspects of S. 1 are a duplication of what was provided in the community facilities bill passed a year or two ago?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The overall answer is, "Yes."

Mr. LAUSCHE. Do the two bills differ from the standpoint that one provides for loans and the other provides for grants?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Both provide for loans.

Mr. LAUSCHE. And grants?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The bill passed 2 years ago did not provide for any substantial grants. The pending bill provides for grants.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I believe $75 million is provided in this bill for direct grants to build community facilities?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Seventy-five million dollars.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Under the community facilities bill could moneys be loaned to build sewer systems, water supply lines, sidewalks, and other such things?

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is correct.

Mr. LAUSCHE. So we now are asked to provide a duplication of what was provided in the community facilities bill?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator is correct. The Senator from Virginia is opposed to this duplication.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Why are we duplicating it?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so that I may answer that question?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I will yield to the author of the bill. He put in the provision. He is the duplicator, not the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the Senator from Illinois to explain the duplication.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, there is no duplication. As the Senator from Ohio said, the community facilities bill was designed primarily to provide sidewalks, water mains, sewer systems, and so forth, to improve the living conditions within the communities concerned.

The bill now before the Senate would provide $75 million in grants for public facilities for—and these words are significant—industrial and commercial purposes. In other words, these facilities would be used to help to attract industries to the redevelopment areas.

The area redevelopment bill and the community facilities program were designed primarily to cover two different sets of facilities. One relates to the provision of industrial water, as distinct from water which goes into households. There is a need for industrial lakes for modern industry, which increasingly uses water in the process of manufacturing.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Under the grants?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Grants and loans.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Grants and loans.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The area redevelopment bill would also provide assistance for industrial parks; namely, a group of small buildings, or a large building which can be subdivided, connected with the main highway by access roads and connected also with water systems, sewer systems and power systems, so that the area can be subdivided and leased to a series of small industries.

The two measures have entirely different purposes. We are now considering a bill to provide industrial and commercial facilities intended to attract industry. The community facilities bill was designed for the improvement of living facilities within a community. The two approaches are quite different.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator from Ohio has heard the explanation of the patron of the bill, that there is no duplication.

Another explanation as to why there is no duplication is that the original act was administered by the HHFA. The HHFA administered the act very carefully and narrowly.

The pending bill provides a broad program, so that these people can proceed with what they could have done before, and go beyond anything they did before.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Then do I correctly understand that the community facilities provision in the Housing Act was deemed to be inadequate, so a decision has been made to create a new division of loans and aid for industrial development? Does the Senator from Illinois take the position that under the Housing Act no money could be loaned or granted for community facilities unless they were definitely dissociated from industrial use.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think the language is sufficiently vague so that, if stretched, the money could be used for such purposes.

Mr. LAUSCHE. It is my understanding the money can be used.

Mr. DOUGLAS. May I finish? In practice, as of last summer no such loans had ever been made. In practice, the Housing and Home Finance Administration interpreted these authorizations in existing law very narrowly. Now there is some dispute as to whether the existing language could be broadened. The purpose of the pending bill is to make it perfectly clear that this type of assistance should be provided for industrial and commercial public facilities.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Does the Senator take the position that if an Administrator should find that a loan is not sound, based upon the circumstances surrounding it, and that the prospects of repayment are not good and therefore the loan should not be made, we then should pass a new bill to enable unsound loans to be made?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; not at all.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Does not the Senator believe that the bill would lead to that result?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Not at all. The Senator from Ohio is caricaturing this point of view. We merely say that in order to attract industry, we need something more than sidewalks or sewer systems or water mains. In many cases—but not in all—we shall need industrial lakes to supply large quantities of industrial water to manufacturing concerns. In many cases we shall need industrial parks, which I have defined as either a large building or a series of small buildings, with access connections of roads, utility facilities, and so forth, so that such parks can be subdivided and leased to a series of small plants.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Would the buildings be used for operating plants?

Mr. DOUGLAS. For manufacturing. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Then the taxpayers of Ohio would be giving money to the Federal Government to be used by the Federal Government to give to communities to build industrial plants to be occupied by those who wish to engage in business.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As the Senator from Ohio probably knows, there are two provisions in the bill governing public facilities for industrial and commercial purposes. There is a revolving loan fund of $100 million. There is also an authorization for grants of $75 million. $100 million of the $175 million would be utilized for loans. The remaining $75 million would be a grant program.

The position we take, the principle which underlies the entire bill, is that there is a national responsibility and a national obligation to help areas which, through no fault of their own, have suffered prolonged and persistent unemployment. It is not the fault of the coal miners and the coal-mining communities of West Virginia or Illinois that employment in the coal-mining industry has shrunk to about one-third, or more, leaving many communities in distress. It is not the fault of the copper miners on the Upper Peninsula of Michigan that the copper mines around Houghton have become largely exhausted. It is not the fault of the men mining iron ore in Minnesota that the Mesabi Range is being exhausted. It is not the fault of the people in West Virginia that their mining industry has deteriorated, nor is it the fault of the people in Lowell, New Bedford, and Fall River, and in the textile centers of the North, that the textile industry has moved South. Under those circumstances we say that it is sound national policy to try to bring new industry into those localities so that these people can return to work.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Is the answer to my question that the taxpayers of Ohio would be giving their money to the Federal Government which in turn would give it to communities to build parks—

Mr. DOUGLAS. Industrial parks.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Industrial plants to be occupied by business? Is the answer "Yes"?

Mr. DOUGLAS. To a limited degree. If the Senator from Ohio wishes to repeal the Constitution, and if he wishes to say that the National Government has no responsibility for the general welfare, he can do so. I happen to believe in the Constitution, and I believe that the Nation was in part founded to promote the general welfare as well as the common defense. That statement is made in the preamble and in article I of the Constitution, giving to Congress power to levy taxes and spend money in behalf of the general welfare.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Senator from Illinois does not believe in the Constitution any more deeply than does the Senator from Ohio, and no more deeply than does any other Senator in this body.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not claim to have a monopoly on virtue.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I have some qualms about the ability of the Congress to declare by legislation an area to be suitable for business, when it is lacking in the attributes that attract business. I cannot understand how we would create an area that is acceptable and suitable for the settlement of business from an area which is remotely situated from the consuming public and the raw materials which it needs, and an area in which there is an indifference to the maintenance of law and order, and the protection of life and property.

I differ with the Senator from Illinois in his belief that the U.S. Congress, by some magic wand and the provision of money, can do things that are completely inconsistent with natural laws and natural experience. In my judgment that is what is sought to be done by the bill.

I believe that if the bill is passed, Ohio will be in the position of witnessing Federal money being used to build plants and parks, taking businesses away from Ohio, denying Ohio the right to attract new businesses, and channeling into other areas business that would be in competition with the products of Ohio. I am grateful to the Senator from Virginia for yielding.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I thank my colleague.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time. If Senators who are opposed to my amendment will yield back the remainder of their time, we can have a vote.

Mr. METCALF. I yield such time to the Senator from Illinois as he desires.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, if the amendment is adopted we may as well say goodbye to an effective bill.

Before I start to argue the point, let me indicate what is at stake. Under the bill there are three revolving loan funds of $100 million. One would be set up to help finance loans to industry in industrial areas of high and persistent unemployment. There would be another loan program of $100 million to finance industry in rural areas of high underemployment and low farm income. There would be another loan program of $100 million for the public facilities which we have been discussing.

I understand that my good friend from Ohio is opposed to all three of these provisions, because that is what he has seemed to be arguing.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I did not hear what the Senator from Illinois said.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I said that I thought my friend from Ohio was arguing against loans to help establish new industries in industrial areas of high unemployment, and new industries in rural areas of high underemployment and low farm income, as well as the revolving loan fund for public facilities, and that his objection was directed to all three of the $100 million loan funds.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I would subscribe to a lending program properly financed by the Federal Government through current taxes and not through back-door financing.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I understand.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I do not subscribe to an extension of the gift program of the Federal Government.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I understand. In addition to the three $100 million revolving funds there is authorization for $94 million in grants and appropriations; $75 million in grants for public facilities; $10 million for retaining subsistence payments; $4½ million for retraining; and $4½ million for technical assistance.

We provide for authorizations for all current expenditures and then, later, appropriations by the Appropriations Committees. The issue is on the $300 million in the revolving loan fund. We are asking that this sum be provided upon Treasury issue rather than by annual appropriations. That is the question before us. The Senator from Virginia made quite an argument, implying that this was a heinous thing. I would like to show that this is a well established practice with many precedents going back for more than 40 years.

Similar authority was granted in 1918 to the Federal land banks. In 1932 it was provided for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In 1933 it was provided for the Federal home loan banks. It was granted in 1934 to the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. In 1936 it was granted to the Rural Electrification Administration. Also in 1936, it was granted to the U.S. Maritime Commission; to the Public Housing Authority in 1937, in 1938 to the Commodity Credit Corporation.

In addition, it has been provided for a whole series of other agencies or programs, among them, the Farmers' Home Administration, the Economic Cooperation Administration, urban renewal; the Veterans' Administration; for college housing; the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation; the U.S. Information Agency; the International Monetary Fund; and many others. I ask unanimous consent that there may be inserted in the RECORD, at this point in my remarks a list of statutes which have provided for the financing of Federal programs through public debt transactions rather than through current appropriations.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUTHORITY TO USE FUNDS BORROWED FROM TREASURY

The following is a list of statutes that have provided financing for Federal programs through public debt transactions, rather than appropriations. The statutes cited are the original statutes granting the authority; there have been numerous later amendments. In some cases the statute listed below authorized the operating agency to borrow from RFC, which in turn borrowed from the Treasury. In each such case, however, a later statute has eliminated this intermediate step, authorizing the agency itself to borrow directly from the Treasury:

Mr. DOUGLAS. In addition, I also submit for the RECORD a list of legislation dealing with expenditures for veterans which might never have passed Congress if the principle of the amendment of the Senator from Virginia had been always used in the past. I ask that that statement may also be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. Grants for specially equipped automobiles for disabled veterans.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I would now like to argue the substance of the amendments offered by the Senator from Virginia, and not confine myself to precedents. Before I do so, however, it is very interesting to note that some of those present have allowed some of these precedents to continue to exist and have not objected to them. But when a measure is introduced which would try to help the unemployed of our country, they object to this method of government finance. That is very significant. If these people wish to be consistent, then let them introduce bills to do away with all these precedents. However, that has not been done.

Let us now turn to the question of the arguments in the case. In considering this bill we must distinguish between current expenditures and investments. This is also a crucial distinction which every private business observes. Current expenditures are those which keep the business running to carry out current activities. They are expenditures for wages, for raw materials, for depreciation, for taxes, and so forth.

In addition to these expenditures, there are investments made to increase the productivity capacity or the earnings of the concern in the future.

Current expenditures should be met, of course, out of current revenues. However, there is no requirement that investments and increases in the capital assets of a private concern must be met out of current income. In public utility financing the common procedure is for the public utility to issue bonds, which will permit the construction of new plants. And, in certain cases the improvement of existing plants is similarly financed.

This has been the prevailing business practice, although it is true that in recent years manufacturing firms have been financing expansion to a further degree out of net profits. However, the basic distinction in accounting, which should always be drawn, is between current expenditures and investment or capital expenditure.

In our Federal budget, it is true that we have not always observed this distinction. As a matter of fact, we normally do not do so. I believe this is an error in Federal financing. The present accounting procedure leads to an exaggeration of the indebtedness of the Federal Government. The Committee on Government Operations of the House has published a table which shows the assets of the Federal Government in terms of original cost, not reproduction cost; not market value, but original cost. This table indicates that the assets of the Federal Government are approximately equal to the outstanding national debt, and that there is, therefore, no net indebtedness of the Federal Government. If we were to use the reproduction costs or current market values as the basis for valuation, I am confident that the assets of the Federal Government would exceed the outstanding obligations.

Let me point out that this principle is precisely the principle incorporated in the pending bill in its present form. Current expenditures are to be met by appropriations. Capital investments are to be met by direct borrowing. The Federal Government is to lend $300 million to private concerns and to local groups for capital investment. In the case of private concerns, the loans will be used for plant and buildings, up to a certain percentage of the cost, plus, in rare cases, for machinery and equipment.

In the case of the public facility loans, they will be used, as I have said, for facilities for industrial and commercial purposes, such as industrial water and industrial parks. These will be income-yielding or income-generating projects.

As a matter of fact, the amounts loaned will have to be repaid within 25 years, so far as the industrial and rural private loans are concerned, and repaid with interest at a rate one-half of 1 percent higher than the rate at which the Government borrows money on issues of comparable maturity. The one-half of 1 percent loading is intended to meet the administrative cost of making loans and cover losses, and in my judgment it will be adequate.

So we are confident that there will be no loss of capital on the part of the Government. The money which is borrowed will be reloaned at a higher rate of interest. Therefore, I see no reason why we should go to the antiquated system of accounting which would require capital investments to be financed out of the current tax revenues of the Federal Government.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. BUSH. That is where the original money comes from; is it not?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; it comes from the money market; from investment funds in the capital markets.

Mr. BUSH. Does the Senator mean that the Treasury does not get its money from the taxpayers?

Mr. DOUGLAS. In this case the Government will borrow money from the general money market and will pay the current rate of interest. It will relend the money at that current rate of interest, plus one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. BUSH. The Government will not borrow the money if it has the money. It may borrow if it is in deficit, but it will not necessarily borrow it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, but we can assume that the money will be borrowed.

Mr. BUSH. Is that something new to this administration?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; I think any administration would do it.

Mr. BUSH. As I see it, the whole purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia is to provide congressional review of this proposal once a year, when the appropriations are made for the succeeding year. I cannot see why the Senator from Illinois objects to having this kind of review year by year by the Committee on Appropriations—by Congress. After all, that is a very useful idea.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is a useful idea if one is opposed to the measure.

Mr. BUSH. No. I think the measure will work just as well one way as the other.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Under the bill, Congress will have ample opportunity to review. Under section 9(b), the Administrator will be required to prepare and submit annually a budget program in accordance with sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Government Corporations Control Act. This will require the submission, as a part of the President's annual budget, of complete information about the Administrator's financial activities.

Furthermore, the Committee on Banking and Currency will have the duty to watch over the activities of the Administrator.

Finally, a new section 27 was inserted in the bill. The Senator from Connecticut gave valuable service in helping on this change. This section requires the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency to make a complete review of the act after it has been in operation for 2 years; to report to the Senate on its review; and to make such recommendations as the committee deems desirable. So there is full provision for review, but there is no provision for electrocution.

Mr. BUSH. There is a provision for one review, and it is in the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. There is a continuing review under the various provisions of the bill.

Mr. BUSH. I am glad the Senator from Illinois acknowledges my help, together with that of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE], in getting that provision into the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. BUSH. What the Senator is talking about is an annual review by the Committees on Appropriations, by the Senate, and by the House of Representatives. That is all. That is what happens with our defense appropriations and with almost all of the other big appropriations.

I hope the Senator from Illinois will yield to us on this point. He may get some support for the bill if he will yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. In other words, if I agree to kill the bill, the Senator from Connecticut will support it. Is that correct?

Mr. BUSH. I do not agree this amendment would kill the bill. With this and a few other amendments, I might well vote for it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I understand the purpose of the Senator from Connecticut. I do not intend to be beguiled in this fashion.

There is another factor which needs to be considered, if the financing of the program is to be reviewed by the Committee on Appropriations each year. The Secretary of Commerce will now be in charge of the bill. He will not have the opportunity to prepare a thorough program, because he will not know what will happen in the future in regard to financing. This is a continuing program. The applications for loans will go through many stages, and an application started in one year cannot be concluded, frequently, until another year. We will be putting a bludgeon over the head of the Secretary of Commerce and the Administrator, with the result that at any moment the program could be called off. By such an amendment, we would virtually prohibit any efficient long-range program.

Furthermore, this amendment, if adopted, could lead to excessive commitments. The Secretary of Commerce and the Administrator, as the year draws to a close, and they face the prospect of their appearance before the Committee on Appropriations, will say, "let us get rid of this money as quickly as we can, because nobody knows when the iceman cometh," so we might find them making all kinds of commitments which, if they had a longer time in which to consider the matter, they would not approve.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, who is always amiable, and who is now as slender of girth as when he played on the Yale baseball team years ago—

Mr. BUSH. The Senator from Illinois has a wonderful memory.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I remember admiring the Senator when he was a college student. He was not only a good baseball player, but a fine singer and his rendition of the "Whiffenpoof Song" touches all hearts.

Mr. BUSH. I am embarrassed among all these visitors.

Some of us look upon this program as a rather experimental program. The Senator from Illinois speaks of it as though it were as well established as the college loan program and some other programs which have been in force and effect for a good many years and have proven themselves to be satisfactory.

I think one of the best arguments for the amendment of the Senator from Virginia is that this is definitely an experimental program. It is different from anything we have ever done in the history of Congress. It is quite different, even, than the Small Business Administration. It is really a great adventure, and it may turn out to be a very useful one.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Not if the Senator from Connecticut can help it.

Mr. BUSH. Wait a minute. The Senator from Illinois must not say things like that, because the Senator does not know whether I will vote for the bill or not. I told the Senator in committee that if he was reasonable about some amendments, I might well support the bill, and I may.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Connecticut seems to want to cripple the bill with amendments, so that it will be unworkable.

Mr. BUSH. The Senator from Illinois must be careful not to impute any motives to me or to any other Senator. I do not impute to him anything except the highest motives.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I assume the Senator from Connecticut is acting in what he believes to be the best interest of the Nation.

Mr. BUSH. So long as it is an experimental or a sort of pilot project—and the Senator from Illinois must agree that that is what it is—why not give the Senate and the House of Representatives a chance and a duty, under the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia, to review the act from year to year until it establishes itself as a worthy project to proceed on a revolving basis or until it has demonstrated that it simply will not work. That is my point. Why is not the Senator from Illinois willing to yield that much?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I simply ask, Why should not Congress pass on these matters? Why should we delegate this power to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BUSH. No; Congress has the power.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I hope the Senate will uphold the position taken by the Senator from Illinois, who has worked so long and arduously on the bill. He has made trips into the depressed areas of the country. He has devoted considerable time and energy, not only this year, but in the past several years, to this particular proposal. He has shown that he is willing to go halfway by accepting the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. I hope that on this amendment the Senate will support the Senator from Illinois and retain the amendment in the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I feel very much better after that very forthright statement by the distinguished majority leader.

Now I wish to make some comments to my good friend, the Senator from Connecticut, if he will permit me to do so.

Mr. BUSH. I should like to ask a question, if the Senator from Illinois will yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. BUSH. Did the Senator from Illinois accept the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas? I ask the question because I was momentarily off the floor when that matter was being handled.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes; I accepted it.

Mr. BUSH. I congratulate the Senator.

Mr. DOUGLAS. But I wish to say that now that some of the opponents of the bill have tasted blood, they are moving in for the kill. [Laughter.]

Without drawing any analogy between human beings and sharks, let me say that when I was in the South Pacific, I learned something about the habits of sharks. They can be swimming peacefully along; but if there is a little blood in the water, it stirs them, and they attack human beings as well as each other.

Let me say that I have shed a little blood, here on the floor, by accepting the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas; and now there is blood on the carpet, and it has excited the opponents of the bill, and is giving them a great sense of victory, and they are moving in for the kill. I felt all along that was the case, until the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] came to my rescue in this fashion, and made his statement which gave us the prospect of more votes.

Now I should like to reply to the Senator's statement.

Mr. BUSH. I was hoping the Senator would. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. Now I have to say something which all of us know, although we seldom speak about it: I refer to the bipartisan, unholy alliance which exists in this body, and also in the House of Representatives, between the conservative Republicans and the conservative Democrats of the South.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, that is the sheerest nonsense I have ever heard spouted on the floor of the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is one of the truest statements ever made. I thought that would stir up the alliance. But that statement is true.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, that is an untruth; and if that is a violation of the rule, I shall submit to discipline by the Senate, because we shall cite the record. This business of talking about "unholy alliances" is the sheerest "stuff." [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, it was well stated by Mr. HALLECK, in the House of Representatives; he openly admits the fact.

Mr. President, I am ready to entertain a motion that I be compelled to take my seat; and then I shall argue the issue.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, no, Mr. President; I simply let my words stand, too; and if the Senate wants to take them out, that will be all right.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Well, Mr. President, let mine stand, also.

Mr. President—

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. BUTLER. If that is an "unholy alliance," cannot the Senator engineer a little more of it—because I think the country needs a little more of it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then the Senator admits that it exists, does he?

Mr. BUTLER. I admit nothing; the Senator from Illinois stated it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. But the Senator from Maryland does not deny it. After all, it is known to everyone.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield for a very polite question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to finish my statement.

Mr. BUSH. But I should like to ask a question before the Senator from Illinois leaves this very interesting point.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am not going to leave it, I assure the Senator.

Mr. BUSH. I refer to the Senator's reference to "the unholy alliance."

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall continue to refer to it in that fashion.

Mr. BUSH. Will the Senator from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. BUSH. Suppose it did exist—although I am not a member of it, and I do not know anyone who is—but suppose it did exist: Why does the Senator from Illinois call it unholy?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Because it is a combination of the conservative elements of both parties, which is seeking to prevent the consummation into law of the will of the people as registered in the presidential elections.

Mr. BUSH. Does the Senator from Illinois mean that it was registered recently by an overwhelming vote? [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. Well, the only way we have to decide matters of this sort is by majority vote. This year, the majority was not as large as I would have liked it to have been; but in 1948 it was larger; and in 1944 it was very much larger; and in 1940 it was larger. But ever since 1938, this alliance—holy or unholy—has dominated the Senate and has dominated the House; and this alliance is opposing this bill, today. There is no use denying it. Why do we as Senators deny what everyone knows to be true?

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Of course.

Mr. CAPEHART. I wish to ask which part of the "alliance"—the conservative Republicans, or the conservative Democrats—is "unholy." [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is the chemical combination. Although individually they may be very fine persons, when they are put together they have a chemical effect which is not good; and the Senator from Indiana is well aware of the nature of such chemical combinations—in other words, two chemicals which are very beneficial can, when mixed together, have a final result which is very adverse.

So although I would say that individually these persons are very fine gentlemen, and all of us like them as friends—for instance, I like my colleague from Illinois, and we get along personally very well, although we seldom agree. But when we return home, we do not attack each other; and I am ready now to display my friendship. In fact, to demonstrate it, I now shake him by the hand. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. President, I say that when these two groups join together as they commonly do they threaten the enactment of legislation which the vast majority of the American people vote for when the Presidency is at stake.

Mr. CAPEHART. Would it be an "unholy alliance" if we on this side of the aisle were to line up with you liberals? That would not be an "unholy alliance," would it? [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would say it would be the beginning of virtue; and "while the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return."

Mr. CAPEHART. That is a typical remark by an extreme liberal.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Oh, I am a very moderate man.

I argued to the Fulbright amendment at the request of the Department of Commerce—in order to obtain agreement and harmony. But, as I said, the sight and the taste of blood have excited a desire to kill this bill by means of crippling amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. First, I should like to finish my comment, because we have lost sight of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I was going to say that the Appropriations Committee serves as a magnet to draw together a very large proportion of the members of this unholy alliance; and the members of the alliance are stronger in the Appropriations Committee than they are on the floor of the Senate. When I make that statement, it is not a reflection on any individual member. Of course, I know that many members of the Appropriations Committee, such as the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, are not members of this alliance in any respect. Many of those who are members of the alliance—in fact, all the members of the alliance—are individually very fine persons; and there is no reflection on them, personally. But the Appropriations Committee is one of the strongholds of the alliance; it is one of their castles; and they are saying, "Put the fair maiden into this secret recess, separate her from the light of day, and let murder or worse things be committed upon her."

Now I yield to the Senator from Delaware. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. It is my understanding that in the recent election President Kennedy endorsed the reelection to the Senate of every southern Senator on the Democratic ticket, and strongly supported all of them. In fact, can the Senator from Illinois name one member of the conservative Democratic group, either in the South or in the North, who was not supported by Mr. Kennedy in the recent election?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think the President was more cooperative than many of those candidates were, but I think in many cases it was an unrequited affection. In fact, that has been our experience: We lavish affection and help on our southern brethren, but it is not always returned. I do not know how much longer we should do it. We live in hope, but our hopes are always dashed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Will the Senator from Illinois admit that every Member of the Senate who comes from the South and who was seeking reelection in the last election was supported by Mr. Kennedy?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Is the "unholy alliance" the group of which the Senator from Illinois speaks when he refers to lavishing affection on the southerners?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I say it is an alliance of persons of the two parties who, although basically good, form a chemical combination which is adverse.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Does the Senator from Illinois mean that he lavishes affection when he charges the existence of an "unholy alliance"? [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. I lavish all kinds of affection on them, individually.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If that is affection, I do not want the Senator from Illinois to love me. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, in spite of being spurned by the Senator from Arkansas, let me say that I still have affection for him.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I repeat that under such circumstances I do not want the Senator from Illinois to love me.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, even though the Senator slaps me on one cheek, I will turn the other. Even though he will not walk with me the first mile, I will walk with him the second. Even though he takes my coat from me, I will give him my cloak.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator from Illinois is about to join the "unholy alliance," if he keeps walking. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I do not wish to see this bill confined to the mercies of the Appropriation Committee each year, and I hope very much this amendment will be defeated. Very frankly, if the amendment is agreed to, we shall have to consider whether or not we will go on with the bill, or whether, perhaps, it will not be better for it to be withdrawn.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Massachusetts in the chair). Does the Senator yield time from the time allotted to him in order to have a quorum call?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think, technically, under the rules, it should be charged to me. If my good friend and colleague [Mr. DIRKSEN] is willing to share the time with me, I will appreciate it. I do not ask for it; I merely make that suggestion.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes, Mr. President; I may resort to the same procedure after a while. So I suggest that we have a quorum call, not to be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President—

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, in order to keep the proceedings in order, I point out that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] is momentarily off the floor. Normally, the time would come under my control. I shall be glad to yield such time as the Senator from Connecticut wishes. I take it he is in favor of the amendment.

Mr. BUSH. I am for the amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield the Senator from Connecticut 10 minutes.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, after all these unkind remarks, and I am sure the senior Senator from Illinois means all these unkind remarks very kindly, he should be reminded that those of us who are supporting the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Virginia are also supporting the administration's bill. We are supporting President Kennedy in his message to the House of Representatives, when he told them what he wanted in this part of the bill. He wanted to eliminate back-door financing, and to return to the appropriation process. So in this "unholy alliance" the Senator is talking about, we are only supporting the President of the United States on the New Frontier.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I am very glad that there has just hurried into the Chamber the distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the majority whip, who has a message which, in language of the Napoleonic wars, comes, I think, from the horse's mouth; and I think he can state what the attitude of the White House is on the question of financing either by annual appropriations, as the Senator from Connecticut is advocating, or by Treasury issue.

I may say that I am somewhat startled to find the Senator from Connecticut has suddenly become a great defender of the President of the United States. This is really like a Confederate putting on a Federal uniform and coming across the lines.

Mr. BUSH. It is exactly the reverse, I say to the Senator. Nevertheless, I ask the Senator if I am not correct in what I stated about the wishes of the President of the United States in respect to the proposal.

Mr. DOUGLAS. May I have permission to yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BUSH. I have the floor.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BUSH. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota if he desires to have me do so. Otherwise, I shall be glad to yield the floor and let the Senator seek it in his own right.

I do so, Mr. President. I yield back whatever time I have remaining from the time allotted.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is time yielded to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BUSH. I was yielded as much time as needed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I am glad to yield time to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I think the issue is not, particularly, what the President may have indicated to the Senator from Connecticut or to the Senator from Minnesota. The real issue is, Which is the better way to proceed? In other words, what kind of program would we like for area redevelopment? How do we wish to initiate the program in order to give it the impetus and the impact which is needed?

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. BUSH. The Senator was not in the Chamber when his good friend on his right accused me and other Senators of being in an unholy alliance with certain Members of his party. I rose a moment ago to remind the Senator that the so-called unholy alliance, which is in fact not an alliance at all—nevertheless, what the Senator thinks of as such—was only supporting the new President of the United States in respect to the particular issue.

Mr. HUMPHREY. When the Senator speaks of an unholy alliance I say that I require no religious test on any of these political issues. I do not wish to invoke the Deity, nor do I wish to try to claim any amoral purposes in whatever arrangements may be reached.

I merely say that the administration has made it quite clear it would prefer to have—I have said this to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]—the administrative establishment of a new agency within the Department of Commerce. The administration has made it equally clear, in order to expedite the operation of the area redevelopment program, that it would be preferable to have what is called Treasury financing.

We run into problems in connection with the desires of those in the other body. Those who serve in the other body are concerned about appropriations to take care of the programs of investments, loans, and grants.

On the subject of grants, there is no doubt that the appropriation process should be followed. In the bill there is a provision for slightly in excess of $90 million of grants, and that should be provided by the appropriation process. It is so provided in the Senate bill.

With respect to repayable loans, which are not grants, but good, solid investments, of exactly the same type as loans of the Development Loan Fund or of the highly successful Reconstruction Finance Corporation, it seems to me the sensible method is what we call Treasury financing, so that the programs may get underway without undue delay.

I state for the record that if the Senate will pass a bill which will provide for administration of the bill within the general confines of the Department of Commerce—and I understand the Senator from Illinois has accepted that proposal—and at the same time provide for Treasury financing, the administration will find it very much to its liking, very much in accordance with its desires, and it will be found to meet the requirements of sound legislation.

I do not come to the floor of the Senate to speak for the President of the United States. I deplore that sort of thing. That was done in the other administration, and every so often a telephone call would come in at about the time some Member thought he was speaking for the President, and there would be a change of signals. I am not that fleet footed.

I have been involved in the legislative conferences which have been held in regard to the bill, and I can say with absolute conviction and sincerity that the proposal now being advanced by the Senator from Illinois, in respect to which he has made the concession relating to the administration of the measure, with Treasury financing, is considered by the administration to be sound, workable, and within the general program of the President.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the junior Senator from Illinois yield me 2 minutes?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I shall be glad to do so, if I may have the permission of the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am glad to yield 5 minutes to the Senator.

Mr. BENNETT. The Senator from Utah wishes to express his surprise and shock upon hearing the senior Senator from Illinois say that if a proposal for Treasury financing should fail, or if the Robertson amendment should be agreed to, the Senator would seriously consider whether the bill itself should be withdrawn. This to me indicates that the basic purpose of the bill must not have very much foundation, if as an expression of lack of faith in the appropriations process and the Senate Appropriations Committee the Senator would rather see the bill as a whole go by the board.

The normal program of financing Government operations is through the appropriations process. I can understand that there are those who believe this proposal would be an improvement on it, but the Senator from Utah cannot believe that to return to a normal program would be so serious as to justify the killing of the bill.

I should be delighted if the bill were killed, as the Senator from Illinois knows. I opposed the bill in the committee. I oppose it now. However, with respect to this bill or any similar proposal, I have consistently taken the position taken by the Senator from Virginia, that backdoor Treasury financing is a departure from the normal—and I think the appropriate—method of financing Federal programs and operations.

I hope Senators will support the amendments offered by the Senator from Virginia. If they are agreed to, I shall be interested to see whether the Senator from Illinois then will move that the bill be tabled or returned to the committee.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me, on my own time?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Utah was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Illinois made his argument, though he is doubtless familiar with the contentions I advanced.

Instead of this being a new method, there are over 30 specific precedents for it. In addition, I pointed out that a distinction must be drawn between current expenditures and capital investments. Current expenditures certainly should be met out of annual appropriations, but capital investments need not, and in my opinion should not, be met in that way. The practice of public utilities is to finance capital investments by bond issues and borrowing.

In this particular instance what we are seeking to do is to lend money from three revolving funds totaling $300 million. The program involves investments.

The rate of interest will be in excess of the rate which the Government has to pay for its borrowings.

I see no reason why the program should be financed by annual appropriations.

In my characteristically undiplomatic fashion, I mentioned that such a procedure would consign to the Appropriations Committee, the decision over whether the program should continue. This committee, I said, served as a magnet to attract the more conservative members of both parties. I would prefer to have the issue settled by the Senate as a whole and by the House of Representatives as a whole, rather than to have the maiden invited into the dark chamber amongst a group containing very few of her friends.

Mr. BENNETT. This is a very interesting word picture of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No.

Mr. BENNETT. That committee is headed by the dean of the Senate, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Utah was not in the Chamber when I said, furthermore, that the Committee on Appropriations was like a chemical compound in which elements extremely good individually, when combined, have a deleterious effect. There is no reflection upon any individual; it is merely a statement that the chemical combination is not too beneficial for ideas such as these.

Mr. BENNETT. The fact that the Senate has made similar mistakes earlier with respect to other programs does not convince the Senator from Utah that this kind of back-door financing should continue.

I should like to make another brief observation. The Treasury of the United States is in debt nearly $300 billion, so there is no reserve from which to lend the proposed funds. The Treasury must borrow them or add to the deficit. Presumably, if the funds go through the appropriation process, there is an opportunity to measure their relative value compared to other programs in the Government; and while I admit that this barrier is easily breached, I think there would be more likely to be responsible administration of the funds in such a process than there would be if the door were opened and the man who was responsible for the administration of the program were permitted to call up the Secretary of the Treasury and say, "I need more money."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, if I may reply to the Senator from Utah on my time, let me say first that he was not in the Chamber when I pointed out that if we took into account the assets which the Federal Government has on the basis of original costs, those are approximately equal to the total amount of the national debt, and if we consider market value, it would be in excess of the national debt. So the picture of the Federal Government being bankrupt is completely beside the point and unfounded.

Furthermore, I am interested in the fact that in 1957 a similar issue was raised in connection with the Development Loan Fund, and the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] offered an amendment to delete the borrowing authority from the bill and substitute annual appropriations.

I note with much interest that the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. BENNETT] voted "nay" on that measure and voted to maintain the borrowing authority. Apparently the Senator from Utah thinks it is all right to have—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 5 minutes allotted to the Senator from Utah has expired.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I asked to have the time charged to me.

Mr. BENNETT. The Senator from Illinois has been talking on his own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. Originally, the time was charged to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask that any time I have taken be charged to me. I shall finish the sentence. Apparently the Senator from Utah thought it was all right to have Treasury financing to help people abroad, but wrong to have Treasury financing to help people at home. To my mind, a common principle should run through both operations. I am very happy to say that I voted against the Morse amendment, as did the Senator from Utah. My only regret is that he has changed his position in the meantime.

Mr. BENNETT. The Senator from Utah would like to offer a deal to the Senator from Illinois—

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; I do not make deals.

Mr. BENNETT. In view of the fact that I voted in favor of his position the last time, I propose that he vote for my position this time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; I believe in being consistent.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, on the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time be not charged to either side under the provisions of the unanimous consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Massachusetts in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, in conformity with the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] I feel at liberty to allot 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Ohio on behalf of the pending amendment.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have no objection.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I will support the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia. I do so on the basis that the proposal he makes is right. Over and above that, I do so because the President of the United States has clearly, with reference to the bill, indicated how he wanted the financing to be arranged.

Mention has been made of an unholy alliance today. That statement practically declares that the President is a part of the unholy alliance, because he has clearly stated in the bill which he submitted to the House of Representatives that the financing shall not be done through the back door. I take it that the President of the United States has weighed the subject of back-door financing. My belief is that he has concluded that in order to avoid the censure of the public for heavy spending and huge taxing, resort has frequently been made to the method of back-door financing rather than by way of appropriations made each year as recommended by the Appropriations Committees. I repeat that the President of the United States, in effect, has declared to the proponents of the measure that he does not agree with the back-door-financing method.

Let us take a look at the bill which the President submitted to the House. I read from it:

AREA REDEVELOPMENT FUND

SEC. 9. (a) There is hereby authorized to be established in the Treasury of the United States an area redevelopment fund (hereinafter referred to as the "fund"), which shall be available to the Secretary for the payment of all obligations and expenditures arising from the purchase of evidences of indebtedness and loans authorized under sections 6 and 7.

(b) When requested by the Secretary, advances shall be made to the fund from the appropriations made therefor. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of making advances to the fund, without fiscal year limitation, an amount not exceeding $300,000,000.

That is the view of the President. Along come the proponents of the pending measure, which includes back-door financing, and they state to the people of the country that the President is wrong, that the financing should not be done in the normal way of appropriations, but should be done in their way, through the back door.

I would feel rather defenseless if I stood here arrayed against the proponents of the bill if I did not have on my side the definite view of the President.

I should like to know, as we continue our debates during this session, how frequently we are going to reject this sound method of running public financing and substitute therefor what in my opinion has properly been labeled as going in the back door and out the back door, thereby avoiding the sunlight of Appropriations Committees, and thus not letting the public know what is happening. The bill from which I have read was submitted to the House. It is the President's bill. I believe we ought to follow it, not only because the present item is involved, but because of the grave implications it has upon all our operations.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH] made the statement that this is a pilot bill; it is a test. That is another reason why, in my opinion, we ought to support the amendment. It has been said that if this amendment shall be agreed to, the bill will be killed. I ask Senators who argue in that way, Did the President submit a bill containing provisions which in themselves carried the seed of destruction? Of course, he did not. He believed the recommendation he made was in the interest of the people of the United States, and he recommended, therefore, that each year appropriations be made to support the finances needed to make the law effective.

I have no qualms about my position in this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LAUSCHE. May I have 1 more minute?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield an additional minute to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Arguments will be made that the bill is to provide work for the unemployed. Certainly, we want to do that; but even on that score, I am of the opinion that there is a great deal of deception in what is proposed. From my standpoint, we ought to begin early in stopping this indefensible practice of back-door financing, and adopting a course which will be open to the eyes and the ears of the people of the country each year when we discuss the subject.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Virginia yield me 10 minutes?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This has been a prolonged discussion. I do not know that it has always been interesting and edifying. We have listened to an interesting mixture of Shakespeare and Scripture. We have heard a lecture on the "unholy alliance." I never knew that such an alliance, holy or unholy, ever existed, notwithstanding the professions of my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. I have yet to see the time when there has been formalized, on the floor or off the floor, a meeting of Senators on this side of the aisle and a meeting of Senators on that side of the aisle. The term "alliance" is now used instead of the old, hackneyed phrase "coalition." But whether either one is used, it presupposes some concerted action, and that is derived from the fact that either we see eye to eye with some of our distinguished colleagues on the other side of the aisle, or they see eye to eye with us. However, we can only draw the inference that there is an unholy alliance or that there is a coalition. I have said before, and I shall repeat it, that I reject that kind of inference on every possible kind of occasion.

I do not know what is said in the other body, but I do know what the statement is in this body. I think it is something of an affront to the Senate. I think it is a reflection upon the Senate and upon its public integrity to go around mouth-ing the terms "coalition" and "unholy alliance." I mean to raise my voice against it on every possible occasion. If anyone is willing to stand anywhere and bring a single iota of truth, of documentation, or of fact, to substantiate it, I am ready to withdraw everything I have said about it this afternoon.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall be very glad to submit yea-and-nay votes on economic measures and on antifilibuster proposals indicating the degree to which the dominant group on the Senator's side of the aisle and the Southern conservative group on this side of the aisle think alike and work alike; two souls with but a single thought; two groups with but a single thought; two groups that think as one.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is the most transparent deception I can think of. Simply because the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and I vote on the same side of an issue, that is supposed to constitute an alliance; or if I vote on the same side of a question with the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], that is supposed to constitute an unholy and concerted action, one which was premeditated. A yea-and-nay vote will mean nothing except that Senators see through their own eyes what the issue is, and then determine how they will vote.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I am indeed happy that the distinguished minority leader has tried to lay to rest the allegations about interparty alliances and coalitions which control the Congress. I often find myself in agreement with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] on issues affecting the right of our citizens, but on this issue and on many others, where the fundamental appropriating powers of Congress are at stake, I stand foursquare with the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] and with the distinguished minority leader. We must never attempt to fool the American people about how we get the money to do things which we want the Government to do. That does not mean that this Senator is a part of any unholy alliance or coalition. On this issue, I happen to agree with the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I wish to pose the issue for the Senate. We are considering the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], who is the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. What he proposes to do is to close the back door to the Treasury and require the appropriation process in dealing with the loan money in the pending bill. The Constitution is very clear. It reads:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

That does not say "loan." It is not a current expenditure. The Constitution does not talk about a capital investment. The Constitution provides:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

All that the distinguished Senator from Virginia seeks to do is to give Congress, through its Committees on Appropriations, an opportunity to take a look.

Arguments have been made in derogation of the Committees on Appropriations. Prior to 1921, every committee recommended appropriations for its own measures. In that year Congress passed the Budget and Accounting Act. It has worked well. I prize my service on the Committee on Appropriations, both in the House and in the Senate. Both committees worked diligently in the interest of a sound economy, of fiscal responsibility, and the solvency of the Republic.

I was proud of every member of those committees, on both sides of the aisle, and equally proud of my own service.

So get the issue, and get it straight. Shall the money be dispensed by the backdoor method, or shall it be according to the appropriation process? That is what is involved in the amendment. That is all I have to say on the subject.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is most correct. These are not minor items which we are drawing from the Treasury. Thirty-three billion dollars are now outstanding, drawn from the Treasury in this manner.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, before I yield to the distinguished Senator from Montana, I may say that I have listened with great interest to the statement of my friend and colleague from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], in which he denies that there is any alliance, holy or unholy, between the conservative Republicans and the conservative Democrats. I know he will forgive me if I say that his statement reminds me of a passage in "Macbeth." I know that he, as a Shakespearean student, is familiar with it. It is the passage in which Lady Macbeth after killing the King of Scotland is walking in her sleep and rubbing her hands together, stained with blood, and saying, "Out, out, damned spot."

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Senator has beat me to it. I thought of that when he was talking about blood on the carpet. I thought: "Out, damned spot."

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator knows what follows which is very appropriate:

All the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.

I say that all the perfume of the oratory of my friend and colleague cannot wash away the fact that the yeand-nay votes on vital measures which concern conservative Republicans and conservative Democrats are virtually identical.

Mr. DIRKSEN. How many times did my distinguished colleague from Illinois, when the civil rights bill was before this body, sit down in concert with Senators on this side of the aisle who saw eye to eye with him, and avoid Senators on his side of the aisle who did not see eye to eye with him? He did not talk with them, did he? Would the Senator say that that was an unholy alliance? Was that an unholy, concerted action?

Mr. DOUGLAS. There is a gallant band of Republicans, undoubtedly small in number, who upon occasion vote with us. To paraphrase a line from the poem About Ben Adhem:

May their tribe increase.

Mr. DIRKSEN. To refer again to Scripture, it is said that the Devil can cite Scripture.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I do not intend to take on all these classical scholars, but I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am certain the Senator meant no reference to his colleague from Illinois, because his colleague was not quoting Scripture; he was quoting Shakespeare; and there is a difference.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, yes; Lady Macbeth does not appear in the Scriptures, as far as I know.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am glad to be reassured. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems to me the debate has now reached a point where we are discussing who is "holier than thou" and who is "unholier than thou."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, at this time I yield to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if we can digress from quoting the Scriptures and quoting Shakespeare, and if we can now get down to the matter at hand—namely, the area redevelopment bill—let me say there has been some discussion about what some persons call backdoor financing and others call Treasury financing.

There are some interesting names on a vote taken on June 14, 1957, at which time the Mutual Security Act of 1957 was under consideration, and an amendment was offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and the then Senator from Wyoming, Mr. O'Mahoney. That proposal was to do away with Treasury financing, which would have been used to establish the Development Loan Fund for the fiscal years 1959 and 1960.

From examining the rollcall, I note that the author of the amendment now pending, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], is consistent in his views; but that so far as some others are concerned—namely, the Senator from Montana, who now is speaking—although at this time he is opposed to the proposal of the Senator from Virginia [Mr.

ROBERTSON], the Senator from Montana was with the Senator from Virginia on that occasion. But let me say that consistency is not always a jewel.

Then we find, on the other side, my distinguished friend the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield briefly to me?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes, indeed.

Mr. BENNETT. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] has already pointed that out—with some glee.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I shall not do it with glee; I merely wish to point out that under certain conditions, changes do occur; that we are not always consistent in our outlook.

So I hope that without going into those facts and figures, we shall proceed to vote on the pending amendment at a reasonable time, and then shall proceed to deal with the other amendments.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, we are very much indebted to the majority leader for bringing this debate back to the issue, away from esoteric discussions of either the Scriptures or Shakespeare.

Today we are facing hard reality—namely, depressed areas; and they require effective, timely action—which means in a hurry.

Mr. President, we can argue either way in regard to the manner of providing these funds. It is well known that the present President of the United States is fully aware of the tradition of the House of Representatives, in terms of utilizing the Appropriations Committee process to obtain funds for any program of a public nature, either in terms of grants or in terms of loans. Every Member of this body knows that the other body has insisted upon the Appropriations Committee process and the appropriations acts as the means of providing funds.

When the President sent his message to the other body, on February 20—his message was addressed to the Speaker—the President sent along with it a draft bill which took into consideration the tradition of the other body to which I have referred, namely, the Appropriations Committee process, the process of providing through an appropriations bill the funds required, in this case, for the depressed areas legislation.

But, Mr. President, it is equally well understood and acknowledged that on many occasions the Senate has used what we call Treasury financing.

All names such as "unholy alliance," "holy alliance," "backdoor," or "front door" are for the newspaper headlines; but they do not contribute one bit of information to the facts of the situation; they contribute nothing to the reality with which we are faced.

Let us consider this issue. It is one of personal choice; and a Senator is neither "holy" nor "unholy" if he prefers the appropriations process. He is neither pure nor impure if he favors the process of so-called Treasury financing, which means that when the Treasury issues interest-bearing certificates to provide funds for a program that has been authorized by an act of Congress, the money will be made available, not for the purpose of gifts, but for investment purposes, for loans repayable on schedule.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And with interest.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes, with interest—as the Senator from Illinois indicates.

Private banks even do such things, and Congress authorizes them to do it. That is done through the credit mechanism. The banks do not obtain congressional appropriations for that purpose; they do it through a special law which was enacted by Congress.

The Congress made a provision of this sort in connection with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and Senators who now serve in this body voted for it.

As the majority leader has indicated, we attempted to provide for it in connection with the development loan fund. When my worthy colleagues speak of the present President of the United States and his views on the matter of area redevelopment legislation and how it should be financed, I think the record is quite clear.

In 1955, the then junior Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Kennedy, voted for the area redevelopment bill, with Treasury financing. Not only did he vote for the bill; he handled the bill on the floor of the Senate; he was a cosponsor of it.

In 1957, he did the same thing.

In 1959, he was a sponsor, with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], of a measure similar in form to the proposed legislation the Senator from Illinois presents to us today.

Some persons may not be consistent in their records on this matter; but when the President of the United States was a Member of the Senate, he was consistent. And we are voting here in the Senate, not in the House of Representatives. We are voting on a bill which was presented to the Senate by the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY. May I have a little more time?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I yield 2 additional minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. President, let me say to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], my good friend, the minority leader, whose speeches are always exciting to me, and always are exhilarating and entertaining, if not always illuminating and enlightening, but I find them enjoyable, and he is a staunch adversary in any discussion—that I always admire the way in which the distinguished junior Senator from Illinois can almost make the Senate Manual look like Holy Scripture. Of course, when the Senate Manual is examined from a distance, it does have a Biblical appearance; but one should not examine it too closely if he wishes to compare it with Holy Scripture. Mr. President, I have heard Senators read from the manual of the Senate rules as if it were divine edict or holy writ. But really, Mr. President, it is not.

Then I heard the Senator from Illinois read from the Constitution; and the intonation of his voice would lead one to believe that the Founding Fathers provided not only for the appropriations process, but also for the Appropriations Committee. But they did not provide for that committee, Mr. President. They said the Congress shall appropriate moneys, but they did not say the Congress shall pass an appropriations act which shall advance through the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate. The Constitution does not provide such a process, and I am surprised that one as learned in the law as is the distinguished minority leader should attempt to pass off a general principle as if it were specific detail. But, of course, when one is short of facts, it is better to pound the breast and to give intonation to the voice, in an endeavor to make it appear as though, somehow or other, one had the truth.

Mr. President, what is the fact which is facing us? The fact is that the Senate has the power either to accept or to reject the Robertson amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes more to the Senator from Minnesota; I yield that time from the time available on the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I am glad to have the Senator from Minnesota proceed with his customary eloquence—because then I shall answer him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. I may not take all that time, because I should like to conduct a slight brush-fire war with the minority leader. There will be no massive deterrent weapons used. It will be all with conventional weapons as we proceed to debate.

Mr. President, what we have before us is a method to finance a program that needs action. It is strange to note, and unhappy to note, that so many Senators who are so concerned about how we shall finance the bill, are not going to vote for it, and that many Senators who are concerned as to how the money is to be provided have repeatedly voted against area redevelopment bills.

They are deeply concerned about conception, but not about birth. They are deeply concerned about the pieces of the meal, but not the totality. I suggest that those of us who are interested in the nibbling process of trying to push something here, or trying to push something there, should be deeply concerned over the effectiveness of the bill and the fact that these suggestions will not contribute to the solution of the problem before us. Perhaps in Illinois everything is jolly, but in many parts of Minnesota, this bill should have been passed in 1957. It should have been passed in 1959. We did override the veto in 1960.

President Kennedy knows full well the idea behind the legislation. He is deeply concerned about the problem involved. We need legislation with which, once it is put on the desk of the President, he may go to work.

Some Senators wanted to make sure that the Secretary of Commerce had full jurisdiction in the program. I tried to help. I think the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] will agree that we adjusted the differences between the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. Those differences have been reconciled. Secretary of Commerce Hodges has general jurisdiction and supervision of the whole program. The only question is whether we are to let him supervise something on the day the bill is signed, or whether we are to go through the authorization process and then wait for 1 month, 2 months, or 3 months, before proceeding.

Let me assure Senators that the amount provided in the bill for the people of the United States is inadequate. The amount of $300 million is not nearly enough, but it is apparently the best anyone is willing to try for in a concerted action. Apparently it is all right talk about $1 billion for the world, but not $300 million in repayable loans for our own people, without getting into an argument as to how we are to produce the money.

I think the best way is for the U.S. Treasury to issue securities that are interest-bearing to provide money for the Secretary of Commerce in order to "get the show on the road" and on the way. If that is done, it will be legitimate. It will fulfill the interpretation of the Constitution, despite any other interpretation that may be made. It will fulfill the traditions of the U.S. Senate. It will fulfill the legislative pattern of the President, who, on three occasions, as a Member of the Congress, joined with the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Minnesota in measures to provide financing in exactly the way this bill provides. So if Senators want to join those who have become recruits for the "New Frontier," at least for now, they will give a little legislative support for what the President supported when he was a Member of this body.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I shall take only a moment. First, I express my affection for my friend from Minnesota. I almost turned out to be a Minnesotan. When I went to school there, my whole ambition was to practice law in the city of Minneapolis, but some untoward fate steered me away from it. I would have been more enriched in spirit and morality if I had been able to carry out that ambition.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I protest against this indirect reflection on the State of Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, one of the finest qualities of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota is that he is never inhibited by facts or the lack of facts. He pats this great volume. But he never read the passage I referred to, having to do with getting money from the Federal Treasury. He said I talk about it as if it were Holy Writ. Mr. President, it comes pretty close to it, because what is written in the Constitution is the framework of government and the foundation of liberty; and the Apostle Paul, if I remember correctly, once said, "Where liberty is, there is the spirit of the Lord." That is why I pat that book so reverently and also think of it as I think of Holy Writ.

My friend might have had a bill long ago, because in 1959 a bill was passed in this body by a vote of 49 to 46. It was just a little before the New Frontier. My friend could have worked on the old frontiersmen. There were plenty here. There were 65 votes on his side. And yet the bill squeezed through by a margin of three votes.

When the President vetoed the bill, the party of the Senator from Minnesota controlled the Senate, and the Senator and his party let the veto message languish for 6 solid weeks before it was called up. And when it was called up, of course, the President's action was sustained. Only 39 votes were obtained against the President of the United States.

I know my facts. [Laughter.]

I am not inhibited by a lack of facts, either, because I know what the record shows.

The Senator could have had a bill. It required no great eloquence to get it. But, no, the proponents would not meet the President of the United States, Mr. Eisenhower, halfway on the measure, in order to arrive at a good bill; and, as a result, it went down the drain.

Mr. President, I shall not discuss the subject any longer. There has been no improvement in Senate bill 1, which is about the same as the old Senate bill 722, introduced by my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS].

I shall offer a substitute. It will be the bill that President Eisenhower asked for within a day after he vetoed the old bill. It may be rejected, but the Senate is entitled to know now what I shall do. I shall vote against Senate bill 1, introduced by my distinguished colleague, and cosponsored by other Senators, because I cannot see it as a remedy for the problem they are trying to meet.

With that, Mr. President, I am prepared to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield back the time remaining to him?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield back the time remaining to me, if the other side will do likewise.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield back the time remaining to me.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield back the time remaining to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is absent because of illness.

I further announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BLAKLEY] is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Texas [Mr. BLAKLEY] would vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is paired with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Mexico would vote "nay," and the Senator from Arizona would vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ALLOTT] is absent because of death in his family.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. CASE] is necessarily absent attending the funeral of a friend in the State.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROUTY] is absent by leave of the Senate because of illness.

On this vote, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ]. If present and voting, the Senator from Arizona would vote "yea," and the Senator from New Mexico would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 49, as follows:

So Mr. ROBERTSON's amendments to the committee amendment were rejected.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] I ask unanimous consent that a statement prepared by him be printed in the RECORD at this point.

I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a supplementary statement prepared by the Committee on Public Works, of which the distinguished Senator from New Mexico is chairman.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR CHAVEZ

I join wholeheartedly with my colleagues in urging passage of S. 1 to relieve depressed areas. The facts on our deteriorating economic situation cannot be denied nor hidden. It is time we faced directly and clearly these troublesome truths.

A few years ago certain counties in New Mexico were classified as depressed areas by the Department of Labor because of chronic unemployment, and the number has increased considerably in recent months. There is every indication of a decline in our economy with most business indicators showing a steady economic decline.

Not too long ago I received a joint memorial from the New Mexico Legislature pointing out that 16 counties in New Mexico are considered by the legislature as chronically depressed areas, and urging our immediate assistance. Counties such as Rio Arriba, San Miguel, Mora, Santa Fe, Guadalupe, Colfax, Taos, Socorro, and Grant, are suffering immeasurably from the present economic situation and let me assure my colleagues that the citizens of these counties are in definite need of Federal assistance to combat their economic ills. It is no longer a local problem but a problem which must be met by the Nation as a whole; if we are to remain ahead internationally we must bolster our economy here at home.

A steady loss of population, a rise in the number of welfare cases and other significant indicators are clear evidence of our deteriorating economic conditions. Little money is available locally to counteract these conditions. In some counties more than 10 percent of their population is dependent upon public assistance. Seven of these counties account for 13 percent of the population of the State and approximately one-third of the population in these counties are public assistance recipients. In Espanola and Las Vegas the number of unemployment claims per 100 insured workers is as high as 17 and 18 percent. The rate of unemployment claims per 100 workers for the State of New Mexico as a whole is 4.3 percent. There are 7535 public assistance cases in these counties including 15,000 persons. 20,862 persons are certified to receive surplus commodities.

Considering the need of these areas and the number of welfare cases in them, it is my opinion that immediate assistance should be made available to these areas to improve their economic situation. Applications for surplus commodities and applications for unemployment compensation have increased by leaps and bounds. We are hard pressed to meet these demands and I urge you to act with haste to improve our economic situation in New Mexico.

A public works construction program, I believe, to be one of the most satisfactory and quickest methods for relief of unemployment. In most cases a backlog of authorized projects is available, and plans and specifications are complete and projects can be placed underway within a short period of time.

For example, Federal aid to highways: There is no better or faster method of putting people to work than on the construction of highways. A large amount of labor is used in such construction, both onsite and offsite. Projects can be placed under construction within a short period of time.

Additional projects which would provide employment for the citizens of New Mexico and the Nation are small watersheds; a large number of small watershed protection and flood prevention projects could be initiated in labor surplus areas. Forest development roads and trails could be developed; forest seeding and development programs could also be accelerated. A number of flood control projects could be started in labor surplus and underdeveloped areas.

I also suggest that the General Services Administration could review their Federal building program to determine if there is need for additional Federal buildings in labor surplus areas.

These are just a few of the many public works activities which could be expanded and accelerated to provide employment in the depressed areas of New Mexico and the Nation.

It is my sincere conviction that public works activities of all types should be expanded and accelerated to relieve our critical depressed conditions, and I would like to see such projects included in S. 1.

I solicit the support of my colleagues in achieving these aims.

SUPPLEMENTARY STATEMENT PREPARED BY PUBLIC WORKS COMMITTEE, SENATOR CHAVEZ, CHAIRMAN

In supplementing the depressed areas legislation it would appear desirable to conduct any public works construction program by existing Federal agencies, from presently authorized projects or programs, within the framework of existing laws, supplemented by additional legislation to provide authorization where believed necessary.

A public works construction program is believed to be one of the most satisfactory and quickest method for relief of unemployment. In most cases a backlog of authorized projects are available, and plans and specifications are complete, and the projects can be placed underway within a short period of time. In addition to providing employment for men on the job, they also provide employment off the site. The benefits derived from such projects are large and permanent, and in most cases extend over a large region.¹

The following programs appear to be worthy of consideration in establishing a public works construction program:

Flood control; navigation: A water resources policy should be established with reference to new starts and acceleration of projects in labor surplus and underdeveloped areas. Priority should be given to multiple-purpose projects which include water supply and low-flow regulation, and units in comprehensive development plans.

A large number of projects are presently authorized. A program in the neighborhood of $100 million annually could be started for these projects in distressed areas. Additional projects of marginal economic justification, or slightly below such justification, could be authorized due to the additional economic benefits they would provide at this time.

There are three auxiliary programs that could be prosecuted at existing flood control and navigation projects that would be very beneficial. These are:

1. Development of recreational facilities at existing Federal projects, and at State and national forests and parks in such areas.

¹ Some provision might be necessary where local cost sharing is a part of the project, to relieve the local agencies in depressed areas from all or part of such cost, or arrange for loans with which the agencies can meet the cost.

A program of $25 million annually would care for these needs. Only about 25 percent of these projects are near depressed areas.

2. Additional operation and maintenance of existing projects, much of which has been deferred for several years. A program of about $20 million annually for this feature would be helpful. About 50 percent of these projects are in or near depressed areas.

3. Rehabilitation of existing works, which consist of levees, floodwalls, jetties, channels, etc. Much of this work has also been deferred because of lack of appropriations. A program of about $20 million annually for this work should suffice. About 50 percent of this work would be in or adjacent to labor surplus areas.

Public buildings: A large backlog of public buildings has been authorized. Some of them are under contract, sites have been obtained for most of them, and plans have been completed and are underway on many of the others. Thirteen new buildings and repairs and alterations to 10 existing buildings have been authorized in cities in labor surplus areas, having a total estimated cost of about $400 million. A 3-year program for completion of these buildings would cost about $133 million annually. The GSA could review their Federal building program to determine the need of additional Federal buildings in labor surplus areas.

Small watersheds: A large number of small watershed protection and flood prevention projects have been authorized, but few of these are in labor surplus areas. The Department of Agriculture is continuing investigations on these watersheds. Priority in these investigations could be given to those watersheds in or adjacent to labor surplus areas and those reports expedited.

Water pollution control: The program for Federal grants for construction of sewage and waste treatment facilities has proved very popular. A relatively small amount of authorization remains available for appropriation. A large number of applications for these grants are on hand, and plans are complete on many of them. There are several bills pending before the committee for broadening and extending the scope of the existing law. A program at least double the present one would be very advantageous, with emphasis on work in labor surplus areas. It is believed that the local pollution control agencies could meet their share of the projects.

Federal-aid highways: There is no better or faster method of putting people to work than on the construction of highways. A large amount of labor is used in such construction, both onsite, and offsite. In most States, a backlog of plans and designs are available, and projects can be placed under construction within a short period of time.

Practically all the States have a balance of funds on hand, both A-B-C and interstate funds, that could be programmed for work in labor surplus areas. Such programming and expenditure is purely an administrative matter within the States. It is noted that many of the States have requested that additional highway funds, A-B-C and interstate, be made available for immediate expenditure. In view of this request, it is believed that the States have or could obtain State matching funds with which to match any additional funds.

As of January 31, 1961, the various States had available about $2 billion of A-B-C funds unobligated, and about $5 billion of interstate funds. On January 31, 1961, 8 States were utilizing 1962 interstate funds, 21 were utilizing 1961 funds, 15 were using 1960 funds, and 6 were still working on 1959 funds. On that date 14 States were utilizing 1962 A-B-C funds, 32 were using 1961 funds, and 6 using 1960 funds. The A-B-C funds get first call on the trust fund, and the interstate get what is left.

The major objection to providing additional funds is, of course, the present financial condition of the highway trust fund. If the highway program is placed back on the original schedule, additional taxes must be raised or additional transfers to the trust funds authorized. If immediate work is desired, a resolution could be considered permitting the highway program to go ahead and expenditures authorized, pending new financial arrangements.

The additional road programs for roads on Federal lands could also be expanded, and additional funds for roads in those categories authorized. The agencies now have contract authorization for these funds and could award contracts 1 year ahead of the fiscal year for which authorized. These roads are as follows:

Forest highways: Present authorization, $33 million for each of fiscal years 1962 and 1963. The funds are apportioned to the States. Additional funds could be used on the highways, although the major National forest lands are in the Western States, remote from labor surplus areas.

Forest development roads and trails: Present authorization, $35 million for 1962, and $40 million for 1963. Additional funds for these timber access roads could be advantageously used, although as for forest highways, many of these roads are located in Western States. Funds can be allocated on a needs basis, and can be programmed for expenditure in or near labor surplus areas. Additional funds for these roads could be used for recreation roads in national forests, or included as a separate classification.

Park roads and trails: $18 million for each of 1962 and 1963. Additional funds for these roads could be used, and could be programmed in labor surplus areas.

Parkways: $16 million for each of 1962 and 1963. Remaining work on authorized parkways is largely in the vicinity of Washington, and on the Natchez Trace in Tennessee and Mississippi. Additional funds could be used, but little of them could be used in labor surplus areas. West Virginia has long wanted a national parkway authorized in the Monongahela National Forest.

Indian roads: $12 million for each year, 1962 and 1963. Additional funds for these roads could be used. Local Indian labor could be used.

Public lands highways: $3.5 million for 1962 and $3 million for 1963. The Bureau of Public Roads has applications for about $15 million worth of these roads on hand. Additional authorization would be needed.

Funds for these roads on public lands come from the general fund, and additional funds for them would have no effect on the highway trust fund.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I call up my amendment, which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 79, between lines 13 and 14, to insert a new section—

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with, and that the amendment be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment offered by Mr. LONG of Louisiana is as follows:

On page 79, between lines 13 and 14, insert a new section as follows:

"MILITARY INSTALLATIONS IN REDEVELOPMENT AREAS AND OTHER AREAS

"Sec. 27. (a) No military installation which is classified as a permanent installation on the date of enactment of this Act shall be deactivated or removed to a new location for reasons of economy, if such installation is situated in a redevelopment area. The Secretary of Defense shall cause to be reactivated any military installation which has been deactivated or removed for reasons of economy within five years prior to the date of enactment of this Act, if—

"(1) such installation was classified as a permanent military installation prior to such deactivation or removal; and

"(2) such installation was situated in an area which is determined by the Administrator to be a redevelopment area.

"(b) The Secretary of Defense shall notify the Administrator before taking any action leading to the deactivation or removal, for reasons of economy, of any military installation which is not included within the terms of subsection (a), but which is classified, on the date of enactment of this Act, as a permanent military installation. The Secretary of Defense shall also notify the Administrator of any action which has been taken within five years prior to the date of enactment of this Act which resulted in the deactivation or removal, for reasons of economy, of any military installation which is not included within the terms of subsection (a), but which was, prior to such action, classified as a permanent military installation.

"The Administrator shall appoint a committee of such persons as he shall determine to investigate the economic effects of any action proposed to be taken, or which has been taken, by the Secretary of Defense with respect to which he has received a notification as provided in subsection (b) of this section. In determining the economic effects of any such action, any such committee shall, among other relevant matters, consider and make findings with respect to (1) the probability that such action will increase unemployment or underemployment in the affected area to such an extent that the area will become a redevelopment area; and (2) the approximate amount of money which has been, or may reasonably be expected to be, saved by any department or agency of the Government as a result of such action, compared with—

"(A) the approximate costs or losses which have been, or may reasonably be expected to be, incurred by other departments or agencies of the Government, or by State and local governmental units, as a result of such action;

"(B) the approximate losses which have been, or may reasonably be expected to be, incurred by private interests as a result of such action in connection with any facilities which they have provided to serve the needs of any such installation and which would otherwise have to be provided by the Government;

"(C) the approximate cost to the Government of relocating any such installation in the event that such installation has been, or will be, relocated; and

"(D) the approximate cost to the Government of reactivating, in a national emergency or other contingency, any such installation with respect to which any such action has been, or is proposed to be, taken. Any such investigation shall be conducted as expeditiously as practicable, and the findings resulting therefrom shall be submitted to the Administrator for transmittal to the Secretary of Defense and to the Congress. The Secretary shall take no further action in connection with the deactivation or removal of any existing military installation, with respect to which he has sent a notification to the Administrator under this section, unless he has received the findings made in connection therewith as herein provided.

"(d) Upon the request of the Administrator, the departments and agencies of the Federal Government shall, subject to the requirements of the national security, make available to any committee, established under this section, such available information and services as may be requested by such committee in furtherance of the purposes of this section.

"(e) Persons appointed to any committee under this section who are not otherwise employed by the Government may be compensated at a rate not in excess of $75 per diem, and, while such person is away from his home or regular place of business, he may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses."

On page 79, line 15, strike out "27" and insert "28".

On page 80, line 2, strike out "28" and insert "29".

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield to the Senator from Ohio, provided such yielding does not prejudice my right to the floor. I ask unanimous consent that I may yield on that basis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment. The amendment, if agreed to, would eliminate from the bill that part of it which provides for grants as distinguished from loans. The bill presently provides $75 million by way of gifts. My amendment, if agreed to, would eliminate the gift provision of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie at the desk.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I hope the managers of the bill will be able to accept the amendment which I have proposed. The purpose of the amendment is to require that a permanent military base be not closed for reasons of economy if, by closing the base for economy purposes, much of the area involved would become a depressed or distressed area. The amendment upholds the idea that the right hand should know what the left hand is doing. The amendment relates to a situation in which we are told that the closing of a military base is for reasons of economy, but with respect to which a full study would show that if all levels of Government were examined, there would be no saving, and the cost to the Government would be greater by reason of making the area a distressed area. I know that the committee has not had sufficient opportunity to consider the amendment fully, but it will be considered on the House side, if agreed to. I hope the managers of the bill will accept the amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I shall be glad to accept the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is the Senator asking that the amendment be agreed to?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Without debate?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I shall be glad to debate the amendment, but it is my understanding that the managers on behalf of the bill will accept it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am ready to accept the amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Even so, some of us may wish to have a vote on the amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I ask for recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. First, I wish to ask a question. Has the amendment ever been submitted to the Committee on Armed Services?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. No; it has not. It has been submitted to the Senate.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me 1 additional minute?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The amendment provides that we could not move a military installation out of a redevelopment area for reasons of economy. What is proposed to be done to the Army, Navy, and Air Force? Is it proposed to tie their hands? The first paragraph of the amendment so provides, and the chairman of the Senate subcommittee is willing to accept the amendment.

I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that he renew his request for a yeas-and-nays vote on the amendment because it would go pretty far. The amendment has never been submitted to the Committee on Armed Services, so far as I know.

Mr. President, if the amendment is acceptable to the subcommittee, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I should like to explain the amendment a little more. I did not believe there would be any opposition to it. It provides that no military base of a permanent nature shall be deactivated or removed to a new location for reasons of economy, if such an installation is situated in a redevelopment area. I have in my hand a statement on this point, which I am asking the pages to distribute to Senators.

If a military station is to be closed to save $2 million for the Army, for example, but the FHA, by reason of such closing, will lose $20 million over a period of years, the base may be kept open, if by closing it the Government would save $2 million but lose $20 million. It would be necessary to consider whether there is an overall savings to the Government or an overall loss.

Consideration would have to be given to whether the country would be benefited by closing down such a military base. Consideration would have to be given to whether the closing down of a military base would make a redevelopment area out of the given region, or a depression would result by reason of the closing of the base. The question would be whether it would cost the taxpayers of the country more instead of less. Consideration would have to be given as to what the cost would be to State and local governments.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator makes a very eloquent plea for his amendment. However, in my judgment it is not a good amendment, because the illustration which he has given, of saving $2 million on the one hand but losing $20 million or more on the other, can be stated the other way, too. It would be possible to save the economy $40 million on the one hand, and cost the Government $2 million or $3 million on the other. His illustration sounds very reasonable, but it can be twisted the other way just as easily. A proposal like this should not be enacted unless it is first passed upon by the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and the House. It would destroy the entire concept of the operation of our military installations in this country.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. If it were not a redeveloped area, there would be no requirement that the base should be kept open. Certainly consideration should be given to all these matters. Where there is a redevelopment area, there is a high degree of unemployment, and consideration must be given to not making a situation worse when it is attempted to make it better.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I call attention to another clause in the Senator's amendment:

The Secretary of Defense shall cause to be reactivated any military installation which has been deactivated or removed for reasons of economy within five years prior to the date of enactment of this Act, if—

(1) such installation was classified as a permanent military installation prior to such deactivation or removal; and

(2) such installation was situated in an area which is determined by the Administrator to be a redevelopment area.

The Senator was a member of the Armed Services Committee at one time, and he knows that if an area is deactivated for 5 years and it is to be reactivated, it will cost a great deal of money, if it was deactivated 5 years prior to that time. In our modern day, from a military standpoint, it would have no particular value; it would not only be a very great expense to the Government to reactivate it, but it would be strategically unwise for the military to do so. It would be unfortunate for the area itself, because it would mean that the military would enter the picture temporarily and then go out again. It would be difficult for the military to reactivate a plant which had been deactivated for at least 5 years.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I shall be glad to amend my amendment to meet the Senator's thought on that point. I shall modify my amendment by striking out the word "shall" and substituting therefor the word "may." I assume that will meet the Senator's objection. That is certainly one of the factors to be considered.

Mr. President, I modify my amendment by striking out "shall" and substituting "may" on line 9 of page 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the modification? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is modified accordingly.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I stress the fact that the amendment would prevent false economy, and it recognizes that we should not be trying on the one hand to provide for redevelopment areas while on the other hand creating redeveloped areas.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The amendment would turn the Defense Department into boondoggle. I read from the amendment:

The Secretary of Defense shall notify the Administrator before taking any action—

That means the man who would be administering S. 1—

The Administrator shall appoint a committee of such persons as he shall determine to investigate the economic effects of any action proposed to be taken, or which has been taken, by the Secretary of Defense with respect to which he has received a notification as provided in subsection (b) of this section.

That would give to the Administrator the power and responsibility to appoint a committee to determine whether a military base should be closed or maintained.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. It would also put the Administrator over the Secretary of Defense.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is the point I am seeking to make. The Administrator of the depressed area bill would have greater power than the Secretary of Defense in determining whether a military installation should be closed.

In connection with some programs which President Kennedy is recommending, I have seen the observation made that one of the things which are considered to be unquestionably necessary for Latin American countries, if they are to become rehabilitated, is to remove some of the oppressive burden of excessive military establishments.

The amendment would on its face say that the United States will adopt a policy of maintaining military establishments not on the basis of their military necessity, not on the basis of their importance to national defense, but on the basis that if we do not maintain a military installation it will result in some unemployment or underemployment in an affected area.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do not yield at this time. I cannot conceive of anything that would be more dangerous to a sound national defense policy than to make the maintenance of a military installation dependent upon a committee selected by an administrator who is concerned with unemployment.

Already the defense costs of this country account for more than 50 percent of the national budget. Out of a $80 billion budget, $40 billion is devoted to the defense establishment alone. After that come the Atomic Energy Commission and related activities. The total runs to close to $50 billion out of $80 billion. The amendment, if adopted, would be serving notice on the world that our military establishments are not selected or maintained on the basis of their importance to the military security of the country but purely upon a boondoggling basis of whether they will provide some employment.

We would be saying to the personnel stationed on a base, the men who form the companies and battalions and regiments, that they are not drafted into the service because of the needs of national security, but merely to provide employment.

I myself have some doubts about the constitutionality of the bill. I have some doubts about its wisdom in many respects. The bill carries a heavy enough load now without adding to it any such proposal as this amendment would provide.

I think it might be useful to read a few other sentences in the amendment. I read from page 4, starting at line 8:

Any such investigation shall be conducted as expeditiously as practicable, and the findings resulting therefrom shall be submitted to the Administrator for transmittal to the Secretary of Defense and to the Congress.

Then listen to this sentence:

The Secretary—

Meaning the Secretary of Defense—

shall take no further action in connection with the deactivation or removal of any existing military installation, with respect to which he has sent a notification to the Administrator under this section, unless he has received the findings made in connection therewith as herein provided.

If that does not subordinate the Secretary of Defense to the Administrator to be created under the bill, and subordinate the Secretary of Defense to the findings of the committee named by the Administrator, I do not know what could.

Paragraph (d) reads:

Upon the request of the Administrator, the Departments and agencies of the Federal Government shall, subject to the requirements of the national security, make available to any committee, established under this section, such available information and services as may be requested by such committee in furtherance of the purposes of this section.

Mr. President, I have some doubts about the constitutionality of the bill, because it is a Senate bill. I think that section 9, which was under fire in the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia, deals with the public revenue. It is entirely conceivable that the bill might be regarded as a revenue bill, because it provides:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obligations issued under this section and for such purpose is authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such Act are extended to include any purchase of such notes and other obligations.

That language, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to take money from the Treasury to provide funds for the Administrator, could easily be interpreted as being a revenue bill. If it is, then I think the Supreme Court, in line with all the precedents, would be obliged to hold that the bill would have to originate in the House of Representatives. So there may be some question about the constitutionality of the bill itself.

There are many other questions about the need for the bill, but certainly I hope the Senator from Louisiana will not press his amendment, and turn the bill into one which would make the Department of Defense purely a boondoggle to be maintained not upon its need for national defense, but its effect upon the unemployment picture in certain areas.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Will the Senator inform me when was the first time he read the amendment?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I read it when the Senator from Louisiana offered it.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. So the Senator read it for the first time only a few minutes ago. Based upon that statement, would the Senator be surprised to know that he does not even understand the meaning of the amendment?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the Senator from South Dakota does not understand the meaning of the amendment, he thinks that is all the more reason why it ought to be debated. The Senator from South Dakota started to read the amendment when the Senator from Louisiana called it up.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. The Senator from South Dakota talks about imposing someone over the Secretary of Defense. Does the Senator notice in the paragraph he read:

The Secretary of Defense shall notify the Administrator before taking any action leading to the deactivation or removal, for reasons of economy.

That means that if the Secretary of Defense wishes to take action to close a base for reasons of economy, he shall take into consideration various elements related to whether a genuine economy is being effected. If he wishes to close a base because troops are needed elsewhere or because there is no military requirement for the base, he is not required to comply with any provision in the amendment.

I hope the Senator from South Dakota will recognize that that is a part of the amendment, and that no one is superimposed upon the Secretary of Defense.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I spent a good part of yesterday listening to testimony from representatives of the Department of Defense on the reprogramming of certain funds. The Department of Defense had come to the conclusion that certain activities for which it had requested funds not later than last year, and which are available for expenditure in the current fiscal year, are no longer needed for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 10 minutes of the Senator from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. BUSH. I yield an additional 5 minutes to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Only yesterday I sat in committee listening to requests for the reprogramming of funds, because within the past year the Secretary of Defense and his Department had come to the conclusion that certain expenditures should not be made. So they were asking the approval of the Subcommittee on Military Construction of the Committee on Appropriations to withhold certain funds which had been allocated for certain activities and certain installations, and to transfer them to other purposes. That was for a reason of economy. The Department of Defense decided that they should not spend money in certain areas. In particular, certain Bomarc installations, it was felt, in the judgment of the Secretary of Defense and the Department of Defense, should be closed, and the money which was to have been made available for them should be used for something of higher priority or something which was more important; it should not be used simply to continue an activity which had been started.

The 5-year retroactive feature in the amendment, to which the Senator from Massachusetts has already drawn attention, would mean that several Bomarc installations which have been closed because, in the judgment of the Department of Defense, we could not afford to spend any more money on an activity which was becoming obsolescent, or was obsolete, should not be closed without going to the Administrator and letting him, together with the committee, determine whether they should be closed.

It would mean that portions of the warning system which have been declared to be obsolete, and which have been found to be obsolete because of the change from a manned airplane to a missile, even though they were closed 5 years ago, should not be closed, but that we should continue to spend money on them regardless of whether they were needed. We should not spend more money on them, if they were closed for reasons of economy, and because the Secretary of Defense felt that the money could be used for something better.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I am happy to have the Senator's remarks as a part of the legislative history, but if any installation is to be closed because it is obsolete or because it is unnecessary or because it would be better to put the money into something else to serve a military purpose, of course the installation should be closed, and that situation is not involved in the amendment.

The amendment relates to a situation in which a decision is made purely on the basis of economy, and it is false economy based upon the fact that, considering all the factors involved, the Government is losing more money than it is saving.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do not know how "economy" would be defined, if it does not mean that an installation is obsolete, and the Government should not spend any more money on it. If it is obsolete, it should be disposed of, we do not need it. That is a reason for economy.

If the Secretary says that the time has come when we should not spend more money on installations, the amendment requires him to go to the Administrator, to let the Administrator determine whether he should stop the operation which is costing money which could better be spent in the general economy, or better used elsewhere.

Mr. BUSH obtained the floor.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield briefly to me;

Mr. BUSH. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I have supported Senate bill 1 and similar bills ever since they were first introduced in the Congress. I have been a sincere supporter of those bills, and I am a co-sponsor of Senate bill 1. I support it, and I have spoken for it; and I intend to vote for it unless it is loaded down with amendments which would make it unworkable.

Because I am a strong supporter of the bill, I rise to speak against the pending amendment. This amendment is wrong in principle. I do not think a bill of this sort should attempt to limit in any way the authority of the Defense Department to do whatever it is necessary to do to make proper provision for the defense of our country. When the President of the United States sent to Congress his message on the economy, he directed the various governmental agencies to locate new installations in depressed areas, if such locations could be justified.

So when there arises a question as to whether an installation should be made or whether an existing installation should be removed, under that direction by the President of the United States, I think the Department of Defense should consider all these factors; but I believe it wrong for the Congress to attempt to direct what the Department of Defense shall do in regard to those installations.

The correct principle is that the Department of Defense should be free to do whatever needs to be done for the defense of the country.

I note in the amendment a provision which I think makes it unacceptable; I refer to the provision that an installation shall not be deactivated for reasons of economy, or that if one had been deactivated for such reasons, there is to be a certain procedure for its activation.

I remember that several years ago, when I was in the Senate, there came to Washington a group from Kentucky; they protested against the deactivation of a particular camp. Of course I went with them when they presented their case; but it was apparent that the camp was not needed. Finally, I had to say to my friends, "The only way I know of to secure the activation of this camp would be in some way to get another war started."

Of course I did not mean that such an extreme course should be taken.

However, if such camps and plants should be deactivated, let them be deactivated in the interest of the country. Furthermore, let us not attach to an area redevelopment bill an amendment which would limit the authority of the Department of Defense—although I doubt that the Congress could limit it—to provide in every way possible for the proper and necessary defense of the country.

Because I am a strong supporter of the bill, I hope the pending amendment will be overwhelmingly rejected.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I merely add that we have some difficulty in obtaining sufficient able manpower for our Armed Forces. We wish to proceed by means of voluntary enlistments, rather than by means of the draft. However, if we keep a number of these sites open, even though because of reasons of economy they should be closed, that will mean that more men will be employed in ways that will not be in the best interests of our security; and in that event it will be inevitable that more men will have to be drafted.

Mr. COOPER. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. President, I am afraid that if this amendment is adopted, it will mean the defeat of the bill.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. BUSH. I wish to associate myself with the views on the amendment which have been expressed by the able Senator from Kentucky, the able Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], and the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL].

I do not think one has to go beyond the first sentence of the amendment, in order to realize what an impossible situation it would bring about. That sentence reads as follows:

No military installation which is classified as a permanent installation on the date of enactment of this Act shall be deactivated or removed to a new location for reasons of economy, if such installation is situated in a redevelopment area.

If there is in the U.S. Government any organization which should take steps for reasons of economy, that organization is the Defense Department. It seems to me that it would be absolutely indefensible for the Congress to include in a redevelopment bill an inhibition against such a decision, for reasons of economy, by the Secretary of Defense. I cannot think of any way which would better invite a veto by the new President than to adopt such an amendment. I do not believe the President should sign the bill if it included such an amendment; and I would think he would have to veto the bill under such circumstances.

I cannot speak for the new President, of course. But from examining the amendment, it seems to me it would be entirely inconsistent with the policies the President maintained when he was a Member of the Senate, and would be entirely inconsistent with what he then said about economical administration of the Government.

It seems to me that an amendment of this sort would be entirely at variance with all that.

So I urge the Senate to reject the amendment.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I regret that Senators who now examine the bill for the first time undertake to know more about what is intended by it than the author of the amendment himself knows about it.

In the amendment we provide that if an attempt is made to close an existing military base "for reasons of economy"—and I emphasize those words—if the Secretary of Defense or anyone else wishes to close a military installation in the United States for any reason under the sun—and there could be any of a thousand reasons; for instance, that the troops were needed somewhere else, or any other reason why he might wish to close an existing military installation that the installation could be closed for such reasons, except when the decision to close the base was based on the assumption that the closing of the base would be an economy move.

Thus, the amendment proposes the requirement of a finding that the closing would result in an overall economy, and that the information be available to the Secretary, so that he could determine whether the result would be an overall economy.

Why would that be necessary, Mr. President? It would be necessary because, as I have pointed out, it is entirely possible that there might be a saving to one branch of the Government, but the result might be a great loss to other branches of the Federal Government itself. Furthermore, so far as the taxpayers are concerned, if the net result is to cost him money, it makes very little difference to him whether he is being required to pay the money because of action by the State government, the local government, or the Federal Government.

So if the overall result of closing a base is actually to cause the Government to spend more money, rather than to save it, certainly no economy has been effected.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, today no agency of the Department of Defense is specifically charged with the consideration of such aspects of these matters.

Again I say that if a base or other military installation has no military need, of course, it should be closed. But we know that many closings have been made entirely for reasons of economy. In fact, I have known bases to be closed even though the services have said, "These are badly needed, and we do not want to close them, but we are being forced to close them because of economy; we are having forced on us so-called economies which we do not believe wise in any way whatever."

I believe that in some instances it can be demonstrated that no real economy whatever has been achieved.

If when we consider all the activities of the Federal Government in such fields, we reach the conclusion that the result of the proposed closing would not be overall economy for the Federal Government, much less for other governments, then certainly no such closing should be made.

This amendment deals with installations at which the Government has saved untold millions or billions of dollars by getting the local citizenry to provide the necessary schools, housing, recreational facilities, and various other requirements—sometimes amounting to $50 million or $100 million, and in return the Federal Government has promised to make the installation a permanent one in that community; but subsequently the Government has decided to close the installation for reasons of economy, even though there has remained some military requirement and necessity for the installation; nevertheless, the Federal Government has decided that, for reasons of economy, alone, the base should be closed.

In that event it seems to us that provision should be made, in accordance with the amendment I have submitted, for the making of a determination as to whether a real economy, in the overall view, would be effected. If it is proposed that the base be closed for reasons of economy, and if it is found that, actually, no economy, in the overall view, would thereby be achieved—and no doubt the particular agency concerned would not really be in a position to determine what the actual, overall economy would be—then the installation should stay open. In other words, if there would be no real, overall economy, the base should not be closed.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it not perfectly clear, under the Senator's own statement, that the determination of economy, as related to the defense needs of the country, would be made, not by the Secretary of Defense, but by a committee to be selected by the Administrator?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. No. The decision would be by the Secretary of Defense.

He could make that decision under the most unsound argument of economy if he wanted to make it on the basis of defense needs. It would be only if he wanted to proceed on the basis of economy that the question whether there would be an overall economy would be considered and even then he could decide in favor of the base being closed.

For example, as I stated, if one service were to save $2 million, but other agencies of the Government would lose $20 million by virtue of the Government's guarantee on home mortgages, that would be a situation in which the Government would lose a vast sum of money.

I could give the Senator many other illustrations in which there appeared to be an economy for one service; but, by looking at the overall economy, it would be seen there would be no saving at all.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. With regard to the statement prepared by the Senator from Louisiana relating to the amendment, in which he discusses the case of military installations in nonredevelopment areas, he states:

For example, it is possible that the closure of a military base might result in the saving of $2 million in the operating budget of the Army, but be accompanied by a $20 million loss on FHA guaranteed mortgages.

Will the Senator from Louisiana illustrate that point? How would the FHA, under certain circumstances, be liable to lose $20 million, while, let us say, the Defense Department would save $2 million?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Let us assume that there are 2,000 houses at an installation on which the FHA has guaranteed the mortgages. Then the Defense Department proceeds to close the installation, and the service personnel are moved out. The houses have to be sawed up and sold. My general impression is that, in moving such houses to different locations, on a $15,000 house we would do well to get $500, if it is sawed up and sold. If there is no immediate demand for housing in that area, there is a great loss. Housing then has to be constructed in the area to which the troops have been moved. Such a move appears to be a saving to the military service, but if one looks at the loss in guaranteed mortgages, there is no overall saving to the Government.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I am alarmed by the proposal because it implies that when the Government guarantees mortgages it, in effect, will indulge in uneconomic operations solely for the purpose of protecting itself.

Does it not follow, if this principle is sound, that the Government undertakes, after guaranteeing mortgages, always to operate, even though the operation results in losses, and thus in uneconomic ventures? I foresee a danger in that procedure.

That principle applies even to the bill before the Senate. We guarantee certain ventures. We buy mortgages and evidences of indebtedness. The moment the Government does that, it becomes obligated forever to the particular community in which it has put its money by way of loans and grants.

I may say to the Senator from Louisiana I am only thinking out loud on the matter.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. So far as the kind of losses which the Senator has indicated are concerned, I believe I can show losses in the millions of dollars on only a single housing contract, under the Wherry or Capehart program, as the case may be. I think, under the Capehart program, as a result of a decision to close a military base, the Government lost, on a single housing contract, closer to $20 million than to $10 million. Certainly, such losses should be considered when it is contemplated to close a military establishment.

Furthermore, and I think the Senator is aware of this, it has been a long established policy of the Defense Department to go to a local community and say to it, "We would like to make this military installation permanent; and if you will do certain things we will make it a permanent military installation."

I have witnessed, and perhaps the Senator from Ohio as Governor of his State did, situations in which certain local communities have been asked to provide certain amounts of land, schools, and various and sundry other facilities.

Certainly, such matters should be considered in a decision to close an installation, if it is not done on the basis of military needs, but on the basis of the Bureau of the Budget telling the Armed Forces that it must economize. If the decision to close the installation is being made entirely for reasons of economy, it is fair to ask whether it will result in an overall, real economy. The people making these investments may lose tens, and sometimes even hundreds, of millions of dollars, and they are entitled to have an indication that it is being done for economic reasons. If, after having invested their money, they lose it, a study might show that no real economy was effected at all.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I recognize the strength of the argument of the Senator from Louisiana, but it still does not negative the distress I am suffering in the belief that we are creating a vicious cycle by the Congress establishing many programs of supposed aid. Congress provides the procedure and provides the loans, and then an agency comes along and says, "There are some facilities we ought to eliminate, but because of previous loans and gifts, they must be continued."

I am familiar with a situation in Ohio that paralleled the experience stated by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I may point out to the Senator from Ohio that the Government has undertaken programs which do exactly what I have stated. The Capehart housing program, preceded by the Wherry program, did exactly that. When the Government undertakes a contract involving $100 million invested in housing, the Government is going to lose it in the event the base is closed.

Oddly enough, if the housing belongs to the military establishment, it may consider the loss involved by virtue of the fact that it owned the housing; but when a separate agency is guaranteeing the mortgages, and a decision is made to close the installation in order to make a saving in one branch of the Government, let us say the Army, that decision is made notwithstanding that another branch of the Government, for example, the FHA, will lose a fortune. So in spite of a possible saving of $2 million in one agency of the Government, it is possible that there may be a loss of $18 million, or even $50 million, in another agency, if one looks at the overall picture. That is the basis of my amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Senator's argument, I think, makes good sense, although I am not sure the amendment provides exactly what we should do.

I wonder if Senators really understand how little the bill would do and how little it would help people who need help.

I should like to read the language of the bill with regard to loans and participations, to show how limited are the provisions in the bill. I have never before seen a bill which I thought would fool the people as much as this bill would.

Will the Senator yield some time to me?

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, how much time do the proponents have remaining? If I have sufficient time, I shall be glad to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MUSKIE in the chair). The Senator from Louisiana has 34 minutes remaining.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, under the bill the Administrator could make loans to build golf courses. The Administrator could make loans to build swimming pools. The Administrator could make loans to build summer or winter resorts.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Can the Senator justify that statement?

Mr. CAPEHART. I will read the language of the bill:

LOANS AND PARTICIPATIONS

SEC. 6. (a) The Administrator is authorized to purchase evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (including participations therein) to aid in financing any project within a redevelopment area for the purchase or development of land and facilities (including machinery and equipment in cases of demonstrated need) for industrial or commercial usage, including the construction of new buildings.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is exactly the point involved. It is for industrial or commercial usage.

Mr. CAPEHART. Is not a golf course commercial?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; it would be recreational.

Mr. CAPEHART. Is not a summer or winter resort commercial?

I am delighted I have brought up the subject, because the author of the bill is clarifying the language as to the type of loans that can be made.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Possibly motels would come under the language.

Mr. CAPEHART. Motels might be included.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly not swimming pools, golf courses, or any of the others.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Senator will remember the scandals, so called, under the old RFC, with respect to many of these things.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes. The Senator from Illinois helped to expose them. I believe, also, we ought to probe development with respect to the so-called Capehart housing.

Mr. CAPEHART. I have no objection to that.

The able Senator from Illinois never wishes to discuss the merits of the case, or to be practical.

I think Senators ought to give consideration to the fact that the proposed legislation will be very, very disappointing. I again invite attention to the possibility that under the language the administrator could lend money for those purposes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Let us clarify the language in this discussion.

Mr. CAPEHART. The language is very broad.

I shall read further from the language of the bill. I shall read the entire section on "Loans and Participations" to show how limited the provisions are, and how little good, possibly, passage of the bill would accomplish.

The Administrator is authorized to purchase evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (including participations therein) to aid in financing any project within a redevelopment area for the purchase or development of land and facilities (including machinery and equipment in cases of demonstrated need) for industrial or commercial usage, including the construction of new buildings, the rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, and the alteration, conversion, or enlargement of existing buildings.

Next is the language I especially wish to bring to the attention of Senators, because it is very important. Every one of the depressed areas about which we talk has sufficient buildings or sufficient facilities. All these areas already have buildings and facilities.

I invite the attention of Senators to the following language:

Such financial assistance shall not be extended (1) for working capital—

Working capital is used to pay salaries of wage earners. Working capital will create jobs. One must have buildings, machinery, and facilities before a man can be given a job, but 9 times out of 10 the facilities and buildings are available. Working capital is essential.

This language of the bill would prohibit loans for working capital.

It is further provided that financial assistance shall not be extended:

(2) to assist establishments relocating from one area to another.

Such a provision would force a person to start a new business with a new corporation, practically. However, there is a limitation:

The limitation set forth in clause (2) above shall not be construed to prohibit assistance for the expansion of an existing business operation from its original location or for the establishment of a new branch affiliate, or subsidiary: Provided, That such assistance will not substantially decrease employment in the area of original location.

The point I make for the RECORD is that under the terms of the bill any help provided would be materially limited. In my mind the program would be almost inoperative because the depressed areas now have buildings and facilities. The thing these communities lack is business—ideas, management, and working capital. Above everything else, working capital is short.

I do not know why the authors of the bill eliminated the working capital provision. They did not eliminate the working capital provision under the RFC. Working capital loans can be made by the Small Business Administration.

If we provided sufficient money to the Small Business Administration, the Small Business Administration could do more to help the depressed areas than could be done under the terms of the bill. The Small Business Administration can make loans for working capital which could not be done under the terms of this bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Our Republican friends are a continuous marvel to me. Generally they attack the bill on the ground that it would do too much. Now my good friend is attacking the bill because it would do too little.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I am not attacking the bill. I am trying to explain the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would say the Senator is attacking the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. I am trying to explain the bill. I am a member of the committee. I am merely trying to point out to the people of the United States—particularly to the people in the depressed areas, who are looking for help under the terms of the bill—how limited are the provisions of the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. We have never claimed the bill would do everything. We merely said it would make a start. Now the Senator is criticizing the bill because it does not include loans for working capital.

Mr. CAPEHART. I am not criticizing the bill. I am simply pointing out exactly what the bill would do.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would say it is a criticism.

Mr. CAPEHART. Every Senator, and the people, should understand the limitations.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then the Senator criticizes the bill because it would prohibit pirating?

Mr. CAPEHART. I did not criticize the bill. I simply read the language in the bill, to show the limitations.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator knows the antipirating language was drafted by the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Maine.

Mr. CAPEHART. I so understand.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Now the Senator from Indiana is criticizing his colleagues.

Mr. CAPEHART. I am not criticizing at all.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I see; the comments were not criticism?

Mr. CAPEHART. I am simply being factual about the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to know the Senator's remarks were not criticism.

Mr. CAPEHART. I am pointing out the provisions in the bill. I hope the Senate will agree to my amendment, to set forth exactly what is meant by reference to a chronically depressed area, and to limit the provisions of the bill to certain specific regions.

I am simply pointing out the limited character of the bill. I say again that the Small Business Administration which is already in existence, if given the $390 million proposed by the bill, could do a better job. We could say to the Small Business Administration, "Make loans to towns and communities which are in chronic distress." The Small Business Administration could do more than could be done under the terms of the bill, with the exception of the rural part of the program.

The Department of Agriculture is now permitted, under the law, to assist in agricultural sections in depressed areas.

More can be accomplished under the present act than can be accomplished under the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I should like to yield to the distinguished Senator from Indiana an additional 5 minutes so he can tell the Senate more about what the bill will not do.

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not know that I have any more to say at the moment. We are discussing the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana with respect to such installations as Army camps. As I said when I rose to speak, it makes some sense to me, because the bill provides that if an army camp is in a distressed area, the Armed Forces are denied the right to abandon it. If it were proposed to close the camp for economy reasons, an amendment to keep the installation in that area makes some sense. I doubt very much whether the Senate wishes to legislate upon that subject. I think some kind of directive or record made on the floor of the Senate in which the Department of Defense is told that if there exists a depressed area around an army installation, unless exceptionally good reasons exist to remove the installation, it would be poor judgment to move it. Such directive or provision would be particularly justified in view of the proposed legislation that provides that the Government would move into such abandoned area and would start lending money or trying to help the community.

It seems to me there ought to be some thought given to the problem which the able Senator from Louisiana has presented. I do not think the amendment would be good legislation. However, when the amendment is considered in connection with the bill, it makes sense to say that we should not abandon an installation if, the minute it is abandoned, the Federal Government would go back in and grant or lend money to the same community.

I believe we are making a good record on the subject of the amendment of the able Senator from Louisiana. I think if the armed services have the intention of abandoning a camp within a distressed area, even though the amendment is defeated, its submission will have a good influence.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the Senator from Indiana think we ought to perpetuate an installation that is obsolete?

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not think so, and I do not think that the amendment necessarily so provides. It provides for instances in which the Department of Defense intended to abandon an installation for economic reasons. Of course, the minute the area is no longer in the center of a depressed area, the amendment would not apply.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Let me give the Senator from Indiana a concrete illustration. Yesterday afternoon the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Military Construction considered the precise problem of moving a military installation from one point to another point for reasons of economy. If the intended move was from one of the areas that would come under the general definition of the bill, does the Senator from Indiana think that the Defense Department should subordinate its judgment to the judgment of a committee appointed by the Administrator?

Mr. CAPEHART. Not necessarily, no. I merely am saying that there is some virtue to the amendment of the able Senator from Louisiana. If it is proposed to take money out of one pocket and put it into another, there is some sense to the amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the Senator believe that such installation should be continued even if soldiers must be drafted to maintain the installation?

Mr. CAPEHART. Oh, no, I did not say that, and neither does the amendment so provide.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The amendment provides that military installations may not be deactivated or removed; it provides further that if there have been any military installations deactivated within the past 5 years, the Secretary of Defense shall reactivate them.

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not intend to vote for the amendment. I never once said I did. I did not argue for it particularly. I merely said that the amendment had some merit. I rose primarily to point out the lack of help that the proposed legislation would give to depressed areas. The bill is not confined to chronically depressed areas in the United States; it is tied to a criterion or a formula which aids the great industrial center of Detroit, and possibly a few weeks from now the employment level of that area will be such that the area will not qualify for the benefits of the bill. I shall go into that subject later when I introduce my amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In Detroit there is the Nike installation. If the Defense Department believes that money spend on the Nike is being wasted, and that it should be used for development of the Nike-Zeus or something else—

Mr. CAPEHART. That is the weakness of the amendment.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Indiana that it is a salutary move to call up the amendment. My objection to it is its inherent rigidity. That is the reason I cannot support the amendment. In my judgment the Department of Defense should give some consideration to these factors, and if for purposes of economy it is decided a military installation should be moved, consideration should be given to the economy of that community.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BUSH. I will yield an additional 5 minutes to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. And I will yield an additional minute to the Senator from New York.

Mr. KEATING. I see nothing wrong with consideration being given to those factors by the Defense Department. There are areas in the State of New York which might be helped by even an amendment containing rigid provisions. But, after all, in my judgment, the hands of the Secretary of Defense should not be tied by the bill, and I compliment the Senator from Indiana on his statement.

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not intend to vote for the amendment. I never intended to do so. I merely wished to leave the impression that there is much merit to what the able Senator from Louisiana has brought about here, and I am glad we are discussing the subject, because it does not make sense to me for the Federal Government to abandon an installation in the middle of a depressed area, and then go right back in under the bill and spend a great deal of money, when perhaps, if the installation had to be abandoned, it would not have been necessary to use the terms of the bill.

However, I do not think it is good legislation. I think the problem ought to be handled in some other way. I certainly do not think it should be tied into this particular bill. I think perhaps there is some other way of handling the subject.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, in the light of the discussion that has occurred here this afternoon, I am constrained to believe that the amendment is perhaps drawn too rigidly, and I should like to have an opportunity, if time permits, to redraft the amendment on somewhat different lines, permitting of more flexibility. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, if the Senator from Louisiana proposes to submit the amendment in different form but with the same purpose in mind, we might as well have the yea-and-nay vote now and have it over with. I would rather not go through a long discussion again as a result of merely changing the wording of the amendment. There is a principle involved, and the yeas and nays have been ordered. We might just as well have the yeas and nays.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I gather from what the distinguished Senator from Louisiana said that he might have in mind something in the nature of a request to the Secretary of Defense, in making his decisions, to take into consideration the factors covered in the bill. To that type of amendment I believe there would be no great objection. I would like to hear the exact language of it, but I am constrained to think that perhaps an amendment could be framed which would meet with universal approval.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I believe I am right on the principle that it does not make sense to close a military base under the guise of economy if no genuine economy is to be achieved, and if in fact, considering all levels of government and all activities of government, an actual loss might result. If that is the basis upon which a military installation is closed, it seems to me that an undertaking upon that basis should be part of a distressed areas bill. I do not believe we ought to have a distressed areas bill under which we permit distressed areas to be created, and by which, not economy, but actual false economy is a result of the initial decision. If the closing of a base results in creating a distressed area on which we then must spend additional money to help an economy that did not achieve economy in the first instance, then the base should not have been closed.

Mr. President, I have asked permission to withdraw the amendment based upon the discussion that has taken place at this time. If there is insistence that there be a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment, the minority leader has that privilege and, of course, I shall accommodate him.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I merely wish to say I think I should defer to members of the committee as to whether or not permission should be given to withdraw the amendment. If it is to be reoffered, we may as well resolve the matter now.

Mr. CAPEHART. I have no objection to its being withdrawn.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment, and it requires unanimous consent to withdraw it. I do not presently contemplate objecting to it, but I should like to point out that my understanding is that the Senator from Louisiana previously had modified his own amendment by changing the word "shall" to "may." As the change was made by the Senator from Louisiana, the change is in line 7 on page 1 of the amendment. The first sentence of the amendment reads:

No military installation which is classified as a permanent installation on the date of enactment of this act shall be deactivated or removed to a new location for reasons of economy, if such installation is situated in a redevelopment area.

As the amendment has been changed, and as it is now at the desk, it reads:

No military installation which is classified as a permanent installation on the date of enactment of this act may be deactivated or removed to a new location for reasons of economy, if such installation is situated in a redevelopment area.

The language is just as rigid as before, if not more rigid.

I do not know whether that was intended, but that is the way the amendment now reads. It is more rigid than it was before. No installation may be deactivated if it is in such an area. I do not believe I am the one to object to the Senator from Louisiana withdrawing his amendment. I believe it is the minority leader, who made the original request for the yeas and nays, who is the one who should decide whether the amendment may be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, this is the type of amendment which I do not believe has any place on the pending bill. The purpose of the bill is to provide Federal money on a loan basis to assist States or localities or private interests within a State or locality to finance a project, a business project, for profit, and to create job opportunities within that State or area. That is the purpose. I do not believe the bill should have any other purpose than that.

The bill restricts the use of these loan funds for buildings, except, in exceptional cases, for machinery, and equipment. The Senator from New York will offer an amendment to strike out this exception, and I intend to support his amendment.

Therefore, I believe that the purpose of the Long amendment is completely extraneous. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana, if he withdraws it, does he intend to resubmit a similar amendment? If he does intend to do so, I shall object to his withdrawing the amendment.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Neither on this occasion nor on any other occasions, so long as I have not agreed as a general arrangement where others have made similar commitments, will I foreclose my opportunity of offering this amendment or any other amendment. If the Senator wishes to insist on a yeas and nays vote on the amendment at this time, he may do so. I thought I was accommodating him and other Senators who oppose the amendment by offering to withdraw it. I do not believe that the Senator from Connecticut particularly cares to put himself on record as being unwilling to consider an amendment that another Senator may wish to offer.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Louisiana ought to be accorded the courtesy he requests. It is in accordance with the usual procedure in the Senate. That is the way we get along on both sides of the aisle. I believe that every Senator should have the right to withdraw an amendment he has offered. Certainly no Senator should be foreclosed from offering another proposal. If we start on that basis, we might as well begin to recognize that we are seeing the beginning of the dissolution of the Senate. I hope the courtesy will be extended to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana makes a very eloquent plea not only on behalf of the Senator from Louisiana but on his own behalf. I accede to his request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I call up my amendment, which is at the desk. It is identified as "3-9-61-B."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 79, strike out lines 14 through 23, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY

SEC. 27. (a) This Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1963.

(b) Notwithstanding the foregoing, effective on July 1, 1963, those assets, funds, contracts, loans, liabilities, commitments, authorizations, allocations, and records of the Area Redevelopment Administration which the Director of the Bureau of the Budget shall determine are necessary to the liquidation of the affairs and functions of such Administration, are transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury for purposes of liquidation.

(c) The termination of this Act shall not affect the disbursement of funds under, or the carrying out of, any contract, commitment, or other obligation entered into pursuant to this Act prior to the date of such termination, or the taking of any action necessary to preserve or protect the interests of the United States in any amounts advanced or paid out in carrying on operations under this Act.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is a very simple one. It would provide for careful reconsideration of the measure after it had been in operation for a period of approximately 2 years. The reason I have asked for a termination date of 2 years is based upon the fact that this is an experimental bill. It is something new. It is something that is untried. It is much safer, in my opinion, when one embarks on a new enterprise like this, to have it reviewed at a suitable time, so that Congress may determine whether the program is actually working satisfactorily.

My good friend, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] has called this amendment "murder." He said on the floor 2 or 3 days ago that the Senator from Connecticut is guilty of proposing infanticide, of killing this child at the age of 2. If that is so, then Congress has committed many such crimes on numerous occasions. The mutual security legislation, which is very important, is on a yearly basis. The Defense Production Act has a terminal date. The direct housing loan authority of the Veterans' Administration, also very important legislation has a termination date. The export controls have a termination date. The direct purchases of Treasury bonds by the Federal Reserve have termination dates. All housing programs are limited either by termination dates or by the amount of the authorizations. I have even seen the Banking and Currency Committee limit FHA loans to a year in order to serve a particular purpose.

Therefore I plead not guilty to the charge of infanticide. I believe very strongly that it is desirable to have this kind of legislation reviewed in the light of how it has worked after a period of 2 years. It may work very well. It is experimental legislation. I do not believe that any of the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency are certain as to how it will work. I have sat in all the hearings and I have listened to all the debates, in both closed and open hearings. I have a great deal of doubt as to how it will work. With all the background that I have acquired on this proposed legislation, I have some doubt as to how it will work.

For that reason, I think it is appropriate that Congress should have a look at it, and be forced to have a look at it, by the placing of a termination date in the bill. Otherwise, it may simply slide along; and not being watched, it could continue for a long time ineffectually. If it is doing well—and if the bill is passed, I hope it will do well and will serve a useful purpose to relieve distress in some areas—in that case, I have no doubt Congress will reenact it; and that might be exactly the right thing to do, if it is serving the purpose and the ideals which the distinguished Senator from Illinois has for the bill.

Secretary of Agriculture Freeman and Secretary of Commerce Hodges testified that they looked upon the bill as a sort of experimental program. They spoke of demonstration or pilot projects. The Kennedy administration itself proposed to limit the funds even further than they are limited in the bill as report, by setting a limit of $30 million on each loan fund for the first year, I believe. That provision, as I understand, was taken out of the bill before it was reported.

Pressures will develop for an enormous expansion of the program if it is successful. If it is successful, and if it really alleviates distress and creates new job opportunities, then I think such pressures would be well received by Congress. However, I think that because of the experimental nature of the bill, it would be quite appropriate for Congress to put a termination date in it. I have suggested in my amendment June 30, 1963, which will be a little more than 2 years from now—2¼ years.

Mr. President, that is my recommendation to the Senate. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the proposal of the Senator from Connecticut is to allow the bill to run for 2 years and then to discontinue it. He says this is necessary in order that Congress may have a chance to review the measure.

May I point out that we added to the bill in committee a new section, section 27, in the drafting of which the Senator from Connecticut was very helpful. It requires the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, or a subcommittee thereof, after the expiration of 2 years, to make a full and complete study and investigation of the administration of the act, and then to report at the earliest practicable date the results of the study and the investigation, together with such recommendations as the committee deems desirable. Then if it is the will of Congress to discontinue the law, Congress can pass an act to repeal it.

The difference is that the Senator from Connecticut would automatically discontinue the act without investigation, and it would require affirmative action to keep it in existence; whereas the present proposal would provide, as almost all measures do, that the law would continue in operation until repealed, but with full opportunity for review and for repeal if Congress so decided.

I understand that I irritated the distinguished Senator from Connecticut last week when I referred to this amendment as being the equivalent of legal infanticide. At the risk of further irritating the Senator from Connecticut, I repeat that characterization today. Murder is a very bad thing. It is one of the most reprehensible of crimes. Infanticide is one of the most reprehensible forms of murder.

Of course, the Senator from Connecticut would not harm the head of a single person. His heart is kind; his disposition is generous. But when he deals with the bill, he is a murderer. What is more, he is a man who plots infanticide. He wants the bill to have a life of only 2 years; then he proposes to cut its throat, unless the rescuers come to its aid immediately and effectively.

Mr. President, this is simply a part of the continuing program of all except a few sturdy souls on the other side of the aisle to defeat the bill, if possible; then if they are not able to defeat the bill, they seek to make it inoperative, or to cripple it or hamper it in every way.

In a sense, I am glad the Senator from Connecticut has offered this amendment, because it shows in clear, crystal form what the real design of the Senator from Connecticut actually is.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BUSH. The Senator from Illinois, it seems to me, is questioning my motives.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I said the Senator from Connecticut plotted legal infanticide.

Mr. BUSH. I shall not call into question the rule as to whether one Senator should question another Senator's conduct. I think murder is quite out of place in this discussion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As a physical matter, the Senator from Connecticut would never commit murder. Quite the contrary. If peoples' lives were in danger, he would rush to their aid. He would risk his life to save others.

I merely say that when we deal with laws which the Senator from Connecticut does not like, then look out, because in this case the Senator is plotting legal infanticide.

Mr. BUSH. I should like to ask the Senator this question, because he seems to question my motive in offering the amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think the Senator's motives are transparent. The language of the amendment speaks for itself.

Mr. BUSH. I should like to have the Senator from Illinois listen to me.

Mr. DOUGLAS. All right.

Mr. BUSH. I am not raising a question under the rules; but the Senator from Illinois does question my motive. He thinks I am trying to kill the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, I do.

Mr. BUSH. If the Senator will accept my amendment, I will vote for the bill. I think that is an answer to the Senator's challenge of my motives in the matter.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator's attitude toward the bill is much like that of the mother toward the daughter who wanted to go in swimming. This story is known to everyone, and I hope I will be forgiven if I repeat the hackneyed phrase.

The daughter inquires, "Mother, mother, may I go out to swim?"

The mother replied, "Yes, my darling daughter. Hang your clothes on a hickory limb, but don't go near the water."

Mr. BUSH. I do not know what that has to do with this.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Connecticut is for the bill provided it will suffer an immediate death; provided it does not do anything; and provided it is ineffective. Then he is for the bill.

Mr. BUSH. May I ask the Senator if he feels the same way about the Mutual Security Act, the Defense Production Act, and all the other acts which bear termination dates? I just read a long list of very important pieces of legislation on which Congress acts from year to year because termination dates are contained within them.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think those acts dealt with international affairs.

Mr. BUSH. I do not believe there is any disposition to murder in this case. There are important domestic programs which contain termination dates, such as I have proposed for this bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Those acts dealt with international affairs.

Mr. BUSH. The Senator from Illinois does not quite answer my question. I repeat my offer.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Would the Senator from Connecticut extend the time to 8 years?

Mr. BUSH. No.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The child might then have a chance to live to be a vigorous youth.

Mr. BUSH. I will extend it to 3 years.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No.

Mr. BUSH. I withdraw the offer. I will remake it if the Senator wants me to do so.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. BUSH. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I believe there is merit in the Senator's suggestion, because the whole Congress is brought into the act, and we can extend it before the time runs out. I think 2 years is a little too short a period. I think 3 years would bring it up for reconsideration in an election year. So my suggestion would be 4 years instead of 3 years. I think there is merit in making its duration 4 years. I think there is much merit in having the whole Congress reconsider it. I hope the Senator will make the period 4 years.

Mr. BUSH. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. President, I believe I have the right to modify my amendment. Accordingly, I so modify it to change the termination date from 1963 to 1965.

I ask the Senator from Illinois if he will accept the amendment, as modified.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The infant would still be too young.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, may I have 5 minutes on the amendment?

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, does the Senator from Indiana desire the floor?

Mr. CAPEHART. I should like to have 20 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BUSH. I yield to the Senator such time as he may require, up to 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I made the statement a moment ago that the Small Business Administration, an agency of the Government which is now in existence, and has been for 3 or 4 years or more, and which succeeded the old Reconstruction Finance Corporation, could do more for the depressed areas than can the bill now being considered. I shall read into the RECORD again, from page 45 of the bill, the section dealing with loans and participations:

SEC. 6. (a) The Administration is authorized to purchase evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (including participations therein) to aid in financing any project within a redevelopment area for the purchase or development of land and facilities (including machinery and equipment in cases of demonstrated need) for industrial or commercial usage, including the construction of new buildings, the rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, and the alteration, conversion, or enlargement of existing buildings.

I have just now read what the pending bill provides that the Administrator can do for depressed areas which are said to be in dire need of employment immediately. But this part of the bill prohibits the Administrator from making loans for working capital.

Now I wish to read to the Senate the authority of the Administrator under the existing Small Business Administration Act—an act and agency now in existence. This organization already is working and doing business, every day.

I shall read from that act the provision in regard to the powers of the Administrator; and Senators will observe that this existing act is more liberal and provides more power and is more helpful than the pending measure could possibly be. I now read from the Small Business Administration Act:

SEC. 636. ADDITIONAL POWERS.

(a) LOANS TO SMALL-BUSINESS CONCERNS; RESTRICTIONS AND LIMITATIONS.

The Administration is empowered to make loans to enable small-business concerns to finance plant construction, conversion, or expansion, including the acquisition of land; or to finance the acquisition of equipment, facilities, machinery, supplies, or materials; or to supply such concerns with working capital to be used in the manufacture of articles, equipment, supplies, or materials for war, defense, or civilian production or as may be necessary to insure a well-balanced national economy; and such loans may be made or effected either directly or in cooperation with banks or other lending institutions through agreements to participate on an immediate or deferred basis. The foregoing powers shall be subject, however, to the following restrictions and limitations.

I have just read into the RECORD the powers of the Administrator under the pending bill and the powers of the Administrator under the existing Small Business Administration Act. Under the latter, the Administrator can loan money for working capital; but the pending bill would forbid the making of such loans.

I repeat that many thousands of people will be disappointed with the legislation now proposed, because it will not do what Senators hope it will do. I repeat that in practically all the depressed areas there are ample buildings and facilities. Additional facilities are not needed. What is needed is a new factory or a new processing plant; and, for that purpose, working capital is needed. But under the pending bill, the administrator would not be allowed to provide working capital to enable a business to be moved from one section of the country to a section where chronic unemployment exists. I am not opposed to providing help to areas where chronic unemployment exists; but the bill would not permit the administrator to help a concern which might wish to move a factory from West Virginia to Connecticut, or vice versa. Of course, Mr. President, I do not think the money of the taxpayers should be used to create employment in one area by creating unemployment in another. But the point is that this bill would disappoint many persons.

We would be better off if we provided that the proposed $394 million should be placed under the jurisdiction of the Small Business Administration. In that connection we might wish to provide additional powers to that Administration, although I do not know about all the details in that connection. But certainly we would be better off by proceeding in that way. In such situations—for instance, if a factory which was making textiles or woollens has now gone out of business, and if jobs are no longer available there—I believe we should, working in combination with the States and the counties, provide some help. But I think that is as far as we dare go.

Mr. President, it seems that some persons believe that the $394 million, now proposed to be provided by means of this bill, would help the city of Detroit with its unemployment problem, if the money were used to provide buildings, machinery, and facilities, but not to provide working capital. However, anyone who goes to Detroit will find that an ample number of buildings and facilities now exists there; what is needed there, above all else, is a means to enable the factories which already exist there to recall those who recently have been laid off.

If we are to provide help for situations in which chronic unemployment now exists, although normally there are plenty of jobs and facilities and factories in those areas, such help can be provided by enabling existing factories and employers to obtain more business, so they can reemploy those who were working for them 30 or 60 or 90 days ago.

But no provision of this bill would permit that to be done. Under the pending bill, funds could be loaned to rehabilitate an old building or to purchase machinery or to build a new factory. However, what is needed in Detroit and in 99 percent of the other locations in the Nation where unemployment exists is more orders and more business for existing plants and employers.

The pending bill would really be of help in such situations if it permitted existing factories to be loaned funds for working capital, so they could provide additional employment. But the pending bill would not do that.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. At the committee hearing was there any discussion about whether the bill would permit the doing of things which cannot be done under the Small Business Administration Act, to which the Senator from Indiana has referred?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, may I have a little more time?

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I yield 2 additional minutes to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. I thank the Senator from Connecticut.

In reply to the question asked by the Senator from Ohio, I think there was some discussion of that point at the committee hearing. Unfortunately, because of illness I was not there.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I have read the pending bill; and I have heard the presentation the Senator from Indiana has made, today. It seems to me that the provisions of the Small Business Administration Act are wider than those of the pending measure.

Mr. CAPEHART. Of course they are. In fact, the pending bill would prevent the proposed agency from doing much that is provided for under the Small Business Administration Act.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Under the provisions of the pending bill, would the new agency, as now proposed, be empowered to do anything that could not be done by the Small Business Administration?

Mr. CAPEHART. No. As a matter of fact, actually, purely from a commercial standpoint, the new agency now proposed could do less.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Small Business Administration Act allows that agency to make loans for the construction and conversion of buildings, does it not?

Mr. CAPEHART. Yes, or for working capital. But the pending bill, as it now stands, would prohibit that.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Can the Senator from Connecticut differentiate between the two? The Senator from Indiana has stated that in the existing Small Business Administration Act he finds provisions which cover all the general authority proposed to be granted the administrator under the provisions of the bill now before us. My question is whether the pending bill would permit the doing of anything which cannot already be done under the provisions of the Small Business Administration Act.

Mr. BUSH. I do not know whether the Senator wants me to respond to that question or not.

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not think it does anything, but I am willing to have the Senator answer.

Mr. BUSH. The Senator from Illinois will correct me if I am in error, but one of the things it does is to subordinate the loans of the Government under Senate 1, whereas, under the Small Business Act loans, that is not done. That is one thing it does.

Something else it does is to limit the amount of the loan that may be made for redevelopment projects to 65 percent of the amount of the industrial loan. Under the Small Business Act, no such limitation prevails.

Those are only two of the differences that I think of offhand. Perhaps the Senator from Illinois can give us others.

Mr. CAPEHART. In other words, the bill limits the loans to 65 percent, meaning private industry within the town must put up 35 percent; whereas the Small Business Agency can lend 100 percent.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio would care to have me reply—

Mr. LAUSCHE. I am very delighted to have the Senator reply.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The bill provide $100 million in a revolving loan fund for the rural areas of the country which have low incomes and high underemployment. The Small Business Administration would not deal with that problem.

Second, the bill provides a revolving loan fund of $100 million and grants of $75 million to provide community facilities for industrial and commercial purposes. The Small Business Administration would have nothing whatsoever to do with that field.

The bill provides for retraining of displaced workers, such as coal miners. In the Hocking Valley, in the Senator's own State, there are large numbers of displaced miners who need to be retrained for other occupations.

Furthermore, the bill provides for subsistence payments while people are taking training, and assistance to small communities to get on their feet, which the Small Business Act does not provide.

This is a thoroughgoing program to help not only the industrial areas of the country, but the rural areas of the country.

If the Senator will look at the map which is in the rear of the Chamber, he will see that the rural areas most likely to be helped are those in the Southern States. I have been distressed to find the vast majority of southern Senators in opposition to a bill which would provide their own areas with real assistance.

My friend from Indiana is virtually proposing to cut all those areas adrift. We have received little help from the representatives of the areas that will be most benefited. But I do not propose to cut the people of those areas out of the bill and allow them to continue to suffer from inadequate levels of economic activity. I think they should be aided, along with the people of the industrial areas.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Is there anything in the Small Business Act that provides loans to rural areas desiring to construct factories or convert factories or needing working capital?

Mr. DOUGLAS. There is no prohibition, but there is no encouragement, and there is no explicit mandate. Furthermore the are loans will not be made unless adequate funds are not available from private lenders or other Federal agencies. They would back up or supplement the existing loan resources of the Small Business Administration and community facilities. Thus they would not compete with existing programs but rather would complement or supplement them.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, the Small Business Administration—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes, in order to reply.

I think the record will show that up to the present time the Small Business Administration has made loans to rural areas amounting to something like $95 million. They are different types of loans than are contemplated under the Douglas bill. Loans for working capital, or almost any other purpose, may be made.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Is the Small Business Administration allowed to take security of a secondary level, and not a primary level? The Senator from Connecticut said it was required to subordinate.

Mr. BUSH. I do not think there is any prohibition against the type of security which it may take. It may make a type of loan which has a good prospect of being repaid, but I do not think the law requires that a first mortgage or any other particular type of security be taken. The Small Business Administration makes sure that it is a good loan.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUSH. Yes. I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Departing from the Small Business Act, what is there in the bill pending before the Senate that is not taken care of by the Community Facilities Act under the housing authority?

Mr. BUSH. The only thing that is not taken care of is grants. Under the Community Facilities Act, loans may be made, and have been made, and are made, for about the same purposes that the grant provisions of this bill provide. However, under the Community Facilities Act, under the HHFA, there is no right at all to make any grants.

Again, the Senator from Illinois may correct me if I am wrong, but, under this bill, it is not provided that loans shall be made for community facilities, but only grants.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Both.

Mr. BUSH. I stand corrected.

Mr. LAUSCHE. $100 million for loans and $75 million for grants.

Mr. BUSH. $100 million for loans and $75 million for grants. That is correct.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Under the Small Business Act, money may be loaned for the construction of buildings, the conversion of buildings, and needed capital for operation. Under the Community Facilities Act, money may be loaned for the installation of sewers, gas lines, water lines, sidewalks, and other community facilities.

Mr. BUSH. That is correct.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I have difficulty in learning what is being provided in this bill that is not provided in either the Small Business Administration Act or the Community Facilities Act, except training of men. I am in favor of it, provided some subsistence payments are made. But they amount only to $19 million. Three hundred and seventy-five million is provided in other aspects.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, have I time left?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, may I yield myself some time on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut has ample time.

Mr. BUSH. The Senator from Indiana has asked me to yield him 2 minutes, which I do.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, after a person in a rural area is trained—and I am in favor of it; I think it is good—either he must move to another town where there is a job available, or, under the terms of the bill, we must persuade some one to build a plant or facility in the neighborhood in which he has been trained. Otherwise, there is no purpose in training him. My point is that, under the terms of the bill, he cannot start a business by receiving a loan, without receiving a loan for working capital. There is a public facilities law which is about as broad as this proposal. There is a Small Business Administration law which can do the same thing here proposed. Then there is the Agriculture Act, with broad powers, providing what is contemplated in this bill. In the State of Indiana, a pilot plan is being operated in one of the counties, which is also being done in other parts of the United States. I am in favor of it.

Mr. President, I never was more sincere and honest. Perhaps we ought to send this bill back to committee and bring out a bill that will really help what we call distressed areas.

Another thing the Small Business Act provides is provision to lend money, on almost any kind of terms, to distressed areas where there have been floods or droughts. My opinion is that a number of communities have such chronic unemployment that they are in as bad a plight or hardship as if they had been visited by droughts or floods and had been pretty much wiped out.

I am in favor of helping such communities, but this bill does not do it.

Furthermore, it would not limit the money to be spent in such areas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. CAPEHART. I wish to go on record—then I shall sit down—that the bill will be a disappointment to the unemployed people of the United States.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, is the Senate ready to act on the amendment?

Mr. DOUGLAS. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut exactly which amendment the Senate is considering?

Mr. BUSH. It is my amendment modified to provide for a termination date in 1965, and to conform with the amendment of the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I am glad to accept the amendment. This would give the infant an opportunity to grow into a more sturdy childhood. I think the infant will be so strong and vigorous by that time that even those who plan to take into the Tower of London and choke it to death, as was done to the young princes by Richard III, will be unsuccessful.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, may we vote on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do Senators yield back their remaining time?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I yield back my remaining time.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I yield back by remaining time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH] as modified, to the committee amendment.

The amendment, as modified, to the committee amendment was agreed to, as follows:

On page 79, strike out lines 14 through 23, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY

"SEC. 27. (a) This Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1965.

"(b) Notwithstanding the foregoing, effective on July 1, 1965, those assets, funds, contracts, loans, liabilities, commitments, authorizations, allocations, and records of the Secretary under this Act which the Director of the Bureau of the Budget shall determine are necessary to the liquidation of the affairs and functions conducted under this Act, are transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury for purposes of liquidation.

"(c) The termination of this Act shall not affect the disbursement of funds under, or the carrying out of, any contract, commitment, or other obligation entered into pursuant to this Act prior to the date of such termination, or the taking of any action necessary to preserve or protect the interests of the United States in any amounts advanced or paid out in carrying on operations under this Act."

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THURMOND. I am pleased to yield to the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New York wished to place before the Senate his amendment dealing with machinery and equipment.

I promised the Senator from South Carolina to yield 30 minutes from the time on the bill, and I am glad to yield that time to the Senator. I hope our distinguished friend from New York can have his amendment placed before the Senate. He will then wait until the Senator from South Carolina finishes his remarks.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for that purpose?

Mr. THURMOND. I am pleased to yield to the Senator from New York so that he may present his amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Carolina may yield to me, and that I may offer my amendment without the Senator from South Carolina losing his right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I offer my amendment which is identified as 3-9-61-A and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 45, lines 21 and 22, it is proposed to strike out the following:

(including machinery and equipment in cases of demonstrated need).

On page 48, lines 12 and 13, it is proposed to strike out the following:

(including, in cases of demonstrated need, machinery and equipment).

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I reserve my time on the amendment. I thank my colleague.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS DURING SENATE SESSION

On the request of Mr. MANSFIELD, and by unanimous consent, the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and the Subcommittee on Education of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare were authorized to meet during the session of the Senate tomorrow until 12 o'clock meridian.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Small Business Subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency be permitted to meet tomorrow at 11:30 a.m. This request is made on behalf of the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM AND ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I ask the majority leader what he contemplates may happen for the rest of the day and tomorrow.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, in response to the question, it is our hope to conclude by 6:30 this evening, at the latest.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that when the Senate concludes its deliberations tonight it adjourn to meet at 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is the hope of the leadership—and I have discussed this with the Senator from Illinois—that by coming in at a reasonable hour tomorrow we can complete consideration of the area redevelopment bill by tomorrow night. It is anticipated that on Thursday, provided we complete action on the bill tomorrow, we shall consider the OECD and Columbia River Basin Treaties.

It is hoped—we live on hope—that tomorrow the Committee on Finance will report the measure for extension of unemployment compensation, so that we can consider it and the measure providing for extension of unemployment compensation benefits for railroad workers on Friday. If we cannot do so then, we can consider the measures on Saturday.

I think the Senate should be informed as to the possibilities for action this week. Extension of unemployment compensation benefits is very important. As soon as the measures are reported from the Committee on Finance it is the intention of the leadership to have them considered at the earliest possible moment.

AREA DEVELOPMENT ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I ask the majority leader a further question. In view of the fact that our distinguished colleague the Senator from South Carolina will speak about 30 minutes this evening, since I am fairly sure the distinguished Senator from New York will wish to discuss his amendment at considerable length, can we be assured the discussion will continue and there will be no yeas and nays votes this evening?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If a yeas and nays vote is requested on the Javits amendment, can we have the vote tomorrow?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes. There will be no record votes tonight, insofar as we are able to prevent them.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. President, I should like to have a yeas and nays vote on my amendment, and I am perfectly happy to have the vote tomorrow.

I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from South Carolina. If the Senator needs more time I shall be glad to yield to him.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, the currently high unemployment in the United States is a matter about which every American should be concerned; and for the Members of the Congress it should be a matter of particularly haunting concern, for the Congress has contributed more than its share to the conditions which are responsible for a large measure of the unemployment through policies of the National Government initiated by the Congress. I am, therefore, most distressed that the Congress continues to ignore the fact that it must bear a major portion of the blame for unemployment; and it is with sincere regret I feel compelled to point out that the area redevelopment bill, which we are now considering, not only fails to recognize the responsibility of congressional policies for unemployment, but, indeed, adds insult to the injury of the unemployed by representing to the American public, as a program for reducing unemployment, what is nothing more than an impractical, deceptive, expensive portion of political pap and guile.

Despite the high-sounding title of the bill and its proposed creation of a new agency of Government, there is nothing really new from the standpoint of substance in the whole conglomeration. When examined in its separate parts, it amounts to nothing more than a brightly packaged combination of several slightly modified existing programs, appetizingly served, hot from a fire fueled with money plucked from the taxpayers' pockets.

There are three loan programs which would be established by the bill. The first, for which the criteria appear in section 5(a) of the bill, is a parallel effort to loan programs now being administered by the Small Business Administration. There are differences, of course, primarily stemming from the fact that the loans contemplated under section 5(a) are limited to certain geographical areas, and such geographical limitations do not apply to the small business loans. Indeed, the Small Business Administration loans are broader in scope in other respects than the loan program contemplated in section 5, for there is no mandatory limitation on an SBA loan that the funds be used only for the purchase or construction of buildings or for the purchase and installation of machinery and equipment.

Admittedly, it is difficult to determine whether there now exists a loan program which parallels the loans contemplated in section 5(b) for rural development, for the criteria for the proposed program for rural areas is so vague as to defy analysis. The Department of Agriculture, however, does have a program designed to assist rural areas in reaching maximum development.

The community facility loan program under section 7 of the bill is almost an exact duplication of the program now administered by the Community Facilities Administration of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Technical assistance is already available to industry and labor by the Departments of Commerce and Labor; and if such technical assistance is not being effectively rendered, I suggest that a review of the appropriations to those Departments will reveal that we have been pouring the taxpayers' money down a rathole, and it would behoove us to find out what these Departments are doing with their funds.

The authorization of $4.5 million annually for retraining of workers is, to the best of my knowledge, a financial effort which the National Government has not heretofore undertaken. I submit, however, that it is an area in which State and local action have been most effective, and the National Government under this authorization would be something of a Johnny-come-lately novice.

The authorization of an annual appropriation of $10 million for payments of subsistence to workers undergoing retraining is no more than a special unemployment compensation program financed by general revenue funds for a comparatively fortunate and favored few of the unemployed.

I would not for a moment have it thought that my principal objection to this legislation derives from the fact that it is duplicative. Had the programs, which are sought here to be duplicated, been effective in the prevention or minimization of unemployment, a cogent argument could be made for at least expanding those programs, if not duplicating them. My reference to the duplication was to point out that the programs embodied in the area redevelopment bill do not stem from new ideas or approaches, but rather are merely redecorated versions of existing programs which obviously have a very limited influence on the rate of unemployment.

The principal fallacy of this legislation stems from the fact that it is based on the completely erroneous conception that the location of industrial facilities is contingent on the availability of financing for buildings or machinery and equipment. As a consideration bearing on the geographical location of plants, available financing is a relatively minor factor. Even in those cases where the availability of financing is a consideration, its bearing on the decision as to the location of the industry is primarily important not from a fiscal standpoint, but rather as an indication of the degree of local interest in the business endeavor. More relevant by far to decisions on the geographical location of industries are such factors as the availability of markets, the absence or existence of an adequately trained labor force, the availability or absence of raw materials, the status of transportation facilities, the availability of utilities and fuel and their cost, the State and local tax structures, and—possibly the most important of all—the attitudes of the local community and work force toward industry. Unless at least a minimum of such factors are favorable, not even the almighty dollar, so readily sucked out of the taxpayers' pockets by the National Government, can enable any enterprise to locate and operate competitively.

It is also quite apparent that those persons undertaking to establish new industries, or expand existing ones, would be irresponsible to accept loans from the National Government, even if pushed upon them, when the prospect for repayment of those loans was overly doubtful because of existing conditions in the community in which the Government dictates that the industry must locate in order to qualify for the loan. It is inconceivable to me how anyone can be so naive as to presume that an industry financed by an agency of the National Government would succeed where an industry, under the same economic conditions and factors, financed from private resources, has failed. I fail to perceive any change in the character of the dollar when it passes up the tax channels and through the hands of bureaucrats—except a notable shrinkage.

Even assuming that the availability of financing for buildings and equipment were a material factor in the location of industrial facilities—which it certainly is not—there is no evidence whatever of a lack of financing from private sources. The funds proposed to be authorized by this bill in the form of loans, as extravagant as they be in terms of the good they will do through this use, are relatively insignificant when compared to the annual outlay of private funds for buildings and machinery in the location of new industries and the expansion of old ones. In short, the funds authorized by this bill will not be a drop in the bucket. According to the figures released by the Department of Commerce, even in 1959, which is the latest year for which the figures have been compiled, it required a capital investment of $15,866 on the average to create a job in manufacturing. The capital investment required per production worker is rapidly increasing and by now probably approaches $17,000. It should be quite clear that were all the funds authorized by the bill converted immediately and directly into jobs, the impact on unemployment would be slight.

Traditionally, industrial employment and production has been financed from the personal savings of the American people. Despite the fact that we are experiencing an economic slump of sizable proportions, personal savings continue to increase. For instance, in the third quarter of 1960, the Department of Commerce reports that personal savings were at the seasonally adjusted annual rate of $29.2 billion, as compared to $22.5 billion in the third quarter of 1959, and $27.1 billion in the third quarter of 1958. Admittedly, it is unlikely that these personal savings will be invested for the purpose of inaugurating industries in geographical areas where factors affecting business success indicate an excessive risk of failure.

This brings us to the false premise of the area redevelopment bill. The approach embodied in this legislation can be summarized as an effort to shift the increment by which industrial efforts in certain geographical areas are noncompetitive to the shoulders of the general taxpayers, rather than trying to correct the underlying and basic causes which make the industries in question noncompetitive in the first place. I cannot help but conclude that this fallacious approach stems at least in part from a reluctance of the Congress to squarely face the fact that its own policies are responsible for many of the factors rendering it impossible for industries of certain types and industries in certain geographical areas to be competitive, and, indeed, for mitigating the competitiveness of our entire industrial structure.

Some of these factors could hardly be more obvious. For instance, employment in the textile industry dropped by 325,000 during the period 1947–57, and since that time employment in this particular industry has declined by another 85,000. If anyone doubts that the major cause of this decline in employment by the textile industry is due overwhelmingly to the ever-increasing flow of low-wage foreign textile imports into this country, I invite them to read the hearings on the problems of the domestic textile industry held last month by a subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Not even in the rosier glow of fuzzy optimism could one expect the provisions of the area redevelopment bill to produce employment for 85,000 people. Yet the Congress has had numerous opportunities to take positive action to limit the imports of foreign textiles which would have undoubtedly saved these 85,000 jobs. It is a strain on my imagination to believe that the area redevelopment bill could induce the inauguration of 128 new industries which would not have been inaugurated without its passage; yet between 1958 and 1960 alone, 128 textile mills closed their doors and went out of operation because they were unable to compete with the influx of textile imports manufactured by labor paid at a small fraction of the American scale and produced by foreign industries stimulated by realistic tax treatment. I need not remind the Senate, Mr. President, that in addition to the 128 industries I have just mentioned, the textile industry lost 710 more mills during the period 1947–57.

Textiles, Mr. President, is but an example—albeit an extreme example—of the impact of congressional laxity and blindness to the lack of reciprocity in our trade program and the utter pervers-sion of its peril point procedure and escape clause provisions.

Mr. President, our trade policy is by no means the only immediate cause of conditions which foster unemployment as a result of governmental policies. Policies originated in the Congress have encouraged increases in wages and fringe benefits not based on productivity, and no small part of the unemployment we are now experiencing is a direct consequence of this violation of basic economic law. Our outmoded and unrealistic depreciation methods and rates embodied in Internal Revenue Bulletin F constitute a heavy damper on the ability of American industries to compete in the world market, and thereby promote unemployment.

Less specific, but equally responsible for our postwar economic lag is the basic philosophy which has promoted such a phenomenal increase in centralization of political power in the National Government, and a corresponding depletion of individual liberty and incentive. The expenditures of government—national, State and local—are now equivalent to 38 percent of personal income in the United States. Completely aside from the fiscal picture, which in itself is alarming, this means that more than one-third of the decisions on the utilization of resources in our whole country are made by government rather than by the individual. It is a law of human nature that individual incentive varies directly with the rewards for initiative. Quite obviously, the rewards in our society have been reduced drastically, and no small portion of our economic slump is duly reflected by the reduction in individual initiative. As much as we might desire it otherwise, humanitarian considerations can never replace profit as an incentive for human endeavor, sacrifice and accomplishment.

If the Congress truly desires to accomplish a reinvigoration of the American economy, let us remove the chains of government control, regulation and interference, reduce the cumbersome burden of excessive taxation, and then witness an unexcelled growth in the gross national product and the full employment which will attend it.

Mr. President, not only is the program embodied in the area redevelopment bill pretentious, expensive, impractical, and unworkable, but unfortunately it also has a distinct potentiality for further damage to our economy and to American citizens.

Once again we are confronted with a resort to backdoor financing, for $300 million of the $394 million authorized by this bill is removed from the annual review and evaluation by Congress through the method of authorizing the newly created agency to borrow directly from the Treasury and to establish revolving funds for the loans. I have long been convinced that no circumstances justify the circumvention of the normal annual appropriations procedures of the Congress, for each such circumvention mitigates congressional control over expenditures, and embodies a shirking by the Congress of its responsibilities in this field.

The use of such a method of financing for a program that is admittedly experimental is particularly unwise and unjustified.

Mr. President, I would also call attention to the fact that the area redevelopment proposal makes changes and modifications in the urban renewal program, which, when considered by the Congress in the past in the normal framework of housing legislation, has received somewhat less than an enthusiastic endorsement.

Mr. President, we are regaled without cessation on the desirability of nondiscrimination in all facets of our society's endeavor, and particularly those endeavors of society which are undertaken by government. I could not in good conscience, therefore, ignore all the lectures we so constantly receive on nondiscrimination by failing to point out that the proposals embodied in the area redevelopment bill are thoroughly and unfairly discriminatory. It is obvious that the philosophy of those so preoccupied with the necessity for nondiscrimination did not allow any of their philosophy to spill over into this proposal.

Only approximately one-eighth of the unemployed are located in chronically distressed areas, into which the funds proposed to be authorized by this bill would flow. Even within those selected areas, relatively few of the unemployed could possibly benefit from the funds expended. Even if the program worked—for which there is not a chance—this bill, at best, and under the most optimistic view of its possible effectiveness, would assist only the favored few employees and industries. The great majority of unemployed would not be helped, and the industries and communities not subsidized would be discriminated against. The industries which were favored with loans from the public funds would be, were this bill to be effective, placed at a competitive advantage over their more numerous, but less favored, competitors in the same field.

I have encountered repeatedly over the last three congressional sessions, during which substantially this same proposal has been before us, a school of thought which assumes that the loan fund included for the rural areas has as its purpose the acquisition of the votes of representatives of predominantly rural areas, of which, as nearly as I can ascertain from the elusive criteria, are located mostly in the southern United States.

Since I represent one of these predominantly agricultural States, I realize that this school of thought must be erroneous, for the inclusion of a program of loans purportedly to be made largely among my constituency tempts me not in the slightest to support this atrocious bill. Even were I so tempted, there are counterbalancing influences to offset such temptation. These influences arise by virtue of the fact that I do represent a State from this particular area of the country, and because of the social customs and laws which prevail there because our citizens determine them to be in the best interest of our own society. In this regard, I am not unmindful of the Executive order issued by the President on March 7 on the subject of nondiscrimination in Government employment and equal employment opportunities to be afforded by Government contractors. I am not insensitive to the fact that it is but one short step between the application of such an Executive order to those employers contracting with the Government and the application of a similar Executive order directed to those employers and contractors who utilize funds originating from the Treasury of the National Government. My realization of this danger is emphasized by the provisions of section 21 of this proposal, by the terms of which the Secretary of Labor, for all practical intents, is vested with control of wages and hours for anyone employed in whole or in part as a result of funds expended under the provisions of this bill. Nor am I unmindful of the breadth of the language of subsection 12 of section 12, which embodies the power to issue regulations for the Administrator of the Area Redevelopment Administration.

I repeat, that even were the funds provided for rural redevelopment a temptation for me to support this legislation—which they emphatically are not—I would be more than dissuaded from submitting to that temptation by the very real specter of a baby FEPC which might well follow these funds.

Mr. President, one of our greatest Presidents once said:

It is true that you may fool all of the people some of the time; you may even fool some of the people all of the time; but you can't fool all of the people all of the time.

At the moment this proposal may fool most of the unemployed and, indeed, a majority of Americans for a short time; and if we fail to enact it, a great majority of Americans may never know what a farce it really is. Should this proposal become law, however, Mr. President, it will be readily apparent to almost all of the people for all time to come that the area redevelopment proposal was nothing more than a great hoax, perpetrated on an unwary and still unbelievably trusting public, an act of Government unequalled for ineffectiveness since Nero fiddled while Rome burned.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THURMOND. I am pleased to yield to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have listened with intense interest to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. Although we differ in our approach to many proposals in this body, I have enjoyed personal friendship with him.

I noted that during his address he stated that there is no lack of private capital in the United States at the present time; that the resources are available in the commercial financial institutions for the loans which might be needed.

I now refer to the testimony of my colleague from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and I direct the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the hearings on the proposed legislation and to the statement of Senator BYRD which was given before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency on Wednesday, January 18, 1961. Senator BYRD stated in his testimony that of the 77 national banks which are doing business in West Virginia, only 16 have assets in excess of $10 million. He also indicated that only five banks of those banks have in excess of $25 million.

Consequently, in the State of West Virginia, there has been difficulty in the securing of local bank loans, either for new industry or for the expansion of old industry. For this reason, West Virginia industries oftentimes have to come to the Federal Government to take advantage of the Small Business Administration loans, which have been helpful throughout the country, and which in many instances are very helpful in West Virginia.

Would the Senator from South Carolina agree, or at least partially agree, that at least in the State of West Virginia, the banking institutions might not have the financial strength with which to help provide the capital needed to stimulate industrial growth?

Mr. THURMOND. I do not know whether the distinguished Senator from West Virginia was in the Chamber at the beginning of my address, when I called attention to the fact that three loan programs are established in the bill. The first, for which the criteria appear in section 5(a) of the bill, is a program which is parallel to the loan programs now being administered by the Small Business Administration.

I also acknowledged that it is unlikely that private funds will be invested where factors exist which make the risk of failure high.

The community facility loan program, under section 7 of the bill, is almost an exact duplicate of the program now administered by the Community Facilities Administration of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

I also pointed out that technical assistance is already available to industry and labor by the Departments of Commerce and Labor.

So I do not see how, under the bill, industry in the Senator's State of West Virginia will get any financing which is not now available. Furthermore, where there is a proper atmosphere in an area, industry will invest and will seek loans. Industry will not go to West Virginia or any other State unless there is a wholesome atmosphere for it. My opinion is that private industry, if we lend it any encouragement, and do not pass laws which tend to discourage industry, can operate successfully in this country. It is my firm belief that industry has been attracted to the South because the South has a proper industrial atmosphere. I believe some of the other States also will get industries if they will improve the industrial atmosphere within the States. Then private money will be attracted there and will be available.

As for particular banks in the Senator's State of West Virginia lending money, a great many banks in the States lend money, but I am informed that some banks in some States, where the labor leaders have arbitrary control of the economic and political situation, will not make loans. The Senator from West Virginia himself will have to decide whether the labor leaders are controlling the factors affecting industry in his State and thereby hampering industrial development.

I certainly am interested in West Virginia and every other State in the Nation, but it is necessary to have the right industrial atmosphere in any State, otherwise industry will not go there; or if it goes there, it will not succeed. The mere fact that the Federal Government may finance industry in West Virginia or any other State, where industry which has been financed privately has already failed, is no assurance that industry will succeed simply because it is financed by the Government.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina further yield?

Mr. THURMOND. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I remember when there was opposition to the Federal loan program of the former Reconstruction Finance Corporation. But I recall a situation at Parsons, W. Va., in the mid-1930's when the local banking facilities could not supply the funds to reopen the then closed Dorman Mills. I was a Member of the House of Representatives at that time, and I recall having helped arrange a conference with the bankers from Parsons and officials of the Dorman Mills which led to the securing of an RFC loan. There was a very slight participation by the bank; but had the bank been the sole available lending agency, the Dorman Mills would have remained closed. With the RFC loan, the mill reopened and provided reemployment for over 100 idled workers. It has remained in operation and today employs 201 persons.

I am informed the RFC loan was repaid ahead of schedule with interest and profit to the Government.

Would the Senator from South Carolina say it was wrong for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in that day, or the Small Business Administration in this day, to lend money to reopen a plant in West Virginia, when that plant could not secure funds from private financial institutions?

Mr. THURMOND. I am not familiar with the details of the loan to which the Senator refers, so I cannot pass on its advisability. I would answer this question by asking the Senator from West Virginia what the pending bill will do that the Small Business Administration cannot now do. Of course there are differences, primarily stemming from the fact that the loans contemplated under section 5(a) would be limited to certain geographical areas, and such geographical limitations do not apply to the Small Business Administration loans. The Small Business Administration loans are really broader in other respects than the loans contemplated in section 5; for example, Small Business Administration loans are not subject to a mandatory limitation that the funds must be used only for the purchase of buildings or for the purchase and installation of machinery or equipment.

In short, almost all phases of the pending bill are now paralleled by provisions already in existing law.

I realize that the Senator from West Virginia is sincere, and that he wishes to do what he can to help the people of his State. That is perfectly natural. But the pending bill will not do what the Senator from West Virginia thinks it should do; and the pending bill is at the present time paralleled by services being provided by various governmental agencies which are authorized to do all that it is hoped the pending bill will do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HART in the chair). The time yielded to the Senator from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina desires to have additional time, I am prepared to yield additional time to him. I have an hour under my control, and time on the bill is also available.

Mr. THURMOND. I do not wish to have more time yielded to me, unless the Senator from West Virginia desires to ask more questions. However, as a courtesy to him, I shall be glad to have additional time yielded.

Mr. JAVITS. Very well, Mr. President; I yield 5 minutes on the bill to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I should like to continue my colloquy with the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator request additional time?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; and I appreciate very much the courtesy of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I also appreciate very much the courtesy of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. President, at this point let me state that I am informed that during the calendar year 1960, 31 small business loans were made to West Virginia. I understand that the total or the face amount of those loans was $1,896,500.

I hope it is not inappropriate for me now to ask whether the Senator from South Carolina supported the legislation which resulted in the creation of the Small Business Administration.

Mr. THURMOND. I was not a Member of the Senate at the time that legislation was considered and passed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I was not certain whether the Senator from South Carolina was then a Member of the Senate.

Mr. THURMOND. That measure was enacted before the Senator from West Virginia and I came to the Senate.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I realize that the Senator from South Carolina has had much more experience than have I in this body.

I merely wished to check to see what was his thinking about an organization such as the Small Business Administration, and to ascertain whether he would support it now, if he could, even though he was not a Member of the Senate when the measure was passed, and thus was not able to support it at that time.

Mr. THURMOND. Of course such a matter of philosophy would require a long discussion, which I believe would be more appropriate on another occasion, in view of the time limitation on debate now in effect.

I think the Senator from West Virginia well knows my philosophy in regard to administration at the State level, and in opposition to administration by a strong centralized government, at the expense of the States and the institutions which belong to them. But I think this is not an appropriate time for such a discussion.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I shall not pursue the point.

Before the Senator from South Carolina takes his seat, I wish to say that I believe it appropriate that he discuss the matter of our trade policies. I can say to him that I think the Congress has not acted in the way he desires; in fact, I believe many Senators are most vigorous in advocating a policy different from the one we have recently been experiencing.

There was a time, when I was in the House of Representatives, when I opposed granting to the President of the United States the 25 percent so-called leeway in connection with tariffs.

I felt that was a prerogative of the Congress and a flexibility which was too much for the President to have available to him.

I wish to call attention to the fact that the Senate Select Committee on Small Business has held hearings on the impact of imports on small business. I presided over those hearings. It might be valuable—inasmuch as the distinguished Senator from South Carolina has brought this matter into the debate—to mention Report No. 1908, of the 2d session of the 86th Congress. It is a report from the select committee, on the impact of imports on small business. I filed that report in August 1960; and the ideas which are being expressed by the Senator from South Carolina are incorporated in that report.

I know that many Senators, regardless of the sections of the country from which they come or the parties to which they hold allegiance, have a feeling which brings them together on the matter of our trade policies in 1961. So I commend to my colleagues a reading of this report, which I filed from the Senate Select Committee on Small Business. I think there is in it an agreement which many of us share.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, as I stated on a nationwide television program, several days ago, I believe we must go to the root of the trouble. But what is being advocated here, in the pending depressed areas bill or redevelopment bill, will not go to the root of the trouble for it administers on to the effects of the difficulty. We must go to the causes, not the effects.

On that television program, I mentioned three things: First, we must place a limit on low-wage imports; second, we must provide for a more realistic formula for allowing tax depreciation on machinery; third, we must base increases in wages on increased productivity. Mr. President, by such means we can go to the source, or the root of this trouble. Until we do so, we shall not obtain relief. If we raise wages, solely in order to raise them, but without at the same time having an increase in productivity, industry will be in trouble, and will have to close, regardless of whether it is financed by the Government or by private funds.

If we continue to permit excessive imports to enter the United States from low-wage countries, our own industries will not be able to compete, and will have to close—as I stated in my remarks earlier this evening, when I cited figures from the textile industry.

I may add a fourth point; namely, there must be a favorable atmosphere for industry in a community or a State. Without such an atmosphere, industry cannot succeed.

But if we can bring about those conditions, private enterprise will expand and will rapidly increase its investments; and then the situation about which we are now complaining, and which we are trying to remedy by means of the attempt to enact this unwise and unworkable legislation, can be remedied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional time yielded to the Senator from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY addressed the Chair.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. Do not I have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am sorry that I did not so understand, Mr. President.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield briefly to me at this time?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield for 1 minute.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, in amplification of the discussion on low-wage imports, I should like to call the attention of Members of the Senate to a supplemental report by the Textile Subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, entitled "Problems of the Domestic Textile Industry," which was made on this day, March 14, 1961.

I feel that this is a most important document, and it bears strongly on the questions which the distinguished Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from South Carolina have discussed here this evening.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] with the understanding that I will not lose my right to the floor at the conclusion of his statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have three very brief amendments. I have discussed them with the chairman. The first two amendments would apply to sections 6 and 7, relating to the participation of a State, or of an agency or instrumentality or political subdivision thereof, by adding the words: "or by an Indian tribe or a community or area organization which is nongovernmental in character, as equity capital or as a loan."

There are two amendments, one applying to section 6, and one applying to section 7. I should like to state the purpose of the amendments.

S. 1, as presently worded, provides, in sections 6 and 7, that the Federal Government shall finance up to 65 percent of development projects and that the States or their subdivisions—and in case of section 6, also nongovernmental community organizations—shall contribute not less than 10 percent of the cost of any project.

Provisions have been made elsewhere in the bill for the benefits of the legislation to be enjoyed by depressed Indian reservation areas. However, the requirement that States contribute 10 percent of the cost of any project may prove a serious obstacle to any program on the Indian reservations most in need of help. In many States with large Indian populations, the State authorities may feel that economic assistance to reservation areas is an exclusively Federal problem. The most recent evidence of that sentiment is found in the discussion on the House floor on March 10, 1961, in which Representative BERRY, Republican, of South Dakota, urged an additional Federal contribution to finance the Indian portion of any new aid to dependent children. It is thus most likely that the States containing large Indian populations may not be prepared to undertake projects on Indian reservations requiring a 10-percent contribution.

It would be most helpful, in order to overcome this serious obstacle, for the 10-percent requirement to be waived in the case of Indian reservation projects.

However, if that cannot be done—and I hope this question will be considered in the conference committee, and I urge that it be done—the 10-percent requirement in sections 6 and 7 should be amended to permit Indian tribes to contribute that share out of the resources available to them. The proposed amendment would do just that.

Mr. President, I send the amendments to the desk and ask to have them read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Amend section 6(b)(9)(B) to read:

"That not less than 10 per centum of such aggregate cost be supplied by the State or any agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision thereof, or by an Indian tribe or a community or area organization which is nongovernmental in character, as equity capital or as a loan."

Amend section 7(c) to read:

"In making any loan under this section, the Administrator shall require that not less than 10 per centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made shall be supplied by the State (including any political subdivision thereof) within which such project is located or by the Indian tribe on whose reservation such project is located as equity capital, or as a loan."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I am ready to accept the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending. It would require unanimous consent.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be laid aside and that we be permitted to consider the amendments of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I shall, regretfully, have to object, because I have no idea what the minority leader thinks about the matter. So I hope my colleague will not press his request.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, in order to complete the record, I wish to say that these are constructive amendments. They merely permit the Indian tribes to assume the mandatory 10-percent contribution in the event a State will not do so. I think the proposal is very constructive.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] has already spoken to me about the amendments. I think they would help very much; but if the Senator from New York feels unable to consent to the amendments in the absence of the minority leader, we will let them go over until tomorrow.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, if this is to be the procedure which is to be followed, I, of course, will have to note the fact. I regret it, because when the chairman is willing to accept an amendment, the amendment is generally accepted.

I have a second amendment which I should like to have lie on the desk. The amendment is, on page 80, line 6, following the words "Puerto Rico", to strike out the period and add, "and the Virgin Islands."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the purpose of that amendment is to include in the definition the Virgin Islands. In the definition, the section refers to the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico; and we propose to add the Virgin Islands.

I shall call up the amendment tomorrow.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, speaking for the RECORD, let me say that this amendment also is acceptable.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement relating to the depressed areas proposed legislation insofar as it relates to agriculture. I have been discussing this proposed measure with the Department of Agriculture, the Secretary, and the staff members of the Department.

The Department of Agriculture is administering programs on behalf of farm and other rural people which are aimed at improving living conditions and providing income and employment opportunities. The Department is engaged in an organizing cooperative effort which extends through the States to the local level and which provides assistance to rural people who have, on a co-operative basis, sought to attain the same goals to which the depressed area legislation is directed.

I know that the Department of Agriculture stands ready to implement any provisions of the depressed areas bill that might be assigned to it. We should alert the agencies of the Department to be prepared to carry out such provisions immediately upon enactment of the legislation.

The Department emphasizes that the help that the areas designated under provisions of the legislation might receive would be in response to requests from local citizens and groups. Such requests would be based upon local initiative and cooperation.

I have been assured that the Department will make available the assistance provided by the depressed areas legislation to implement locally conceived and adopted area development plans which have as their objective fuller use of human and other resources in the development of employment and income opportunities for unemployed and underemployed rural people.

Mr. President, the legislation we are discussing today can have a far-reaching effect in the rural communities and small towns of this Nation.

As we all know, technological change and mechanization have had a severe impact on our farm population. In recent years, many thousands of farm families have been forced to close up their farms and move to town in search of work. Other thousands of families have come to depend almost entirely on the income earned through work off the farm in nearby factories and other enterprises. The Census Bureau informs us that there are now 3.7 million farms in the Nation, a drop of more than a million in just 5 years. Yet in 1959 nearly half of all our farmers worked part-time off their farms. And 3 out of 10 worked off their farms 100 days or more. About one-third of the income of farm people is now derived from nonfarm sources, principally jobs in local industry.

The point of all these statistics is that the growth of rural industries is of crucial importance to the Nation's farming families. Without local jobs and other nonfarm opportunities, to supplement their incomes, many thousands of fine families would be forced to sell out and join the migration to our already crowded cities.

For this reason, I have long been a strong supporter of the rural development program approach inaugurated by the Department of Agriculture a few years ago. This program works with local groups in farming communities and trade centers to promote more opportunities and jobs. I have watched the development of this program in my own State, in the northern cutover region where many of our fine families are having a very difficult time making ends meet. I have said all along that rural development is fine as far as it goes. But the program does not go far enough, and does not have enough equipment to do the job.

The area redevelopment legislation we are discussing today would provide this equipment. It very wisely includes the provision of credit for industrial building, grants for public facilities, technical assistance, and retraining in low-income areas. Significantly, this legislation would naturally strengthen the hand of local leadership in their grassroots campaign to promote development, economic growth, and diversified industry.

As the Secretary of Agriculture said in testimony on this legislation, it will make possible a rural enterprise program that is soundly based upon local leadership and organizations already at work, but the legislation includes a tool that is now missing and badly needed. This tool is credit backed by technical assistance and job training.

PROJECT MIKE

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, there was recently called to my attention a most sincere and heartwarming story. Because it touched me so deeply, I wish to share it with my Senate colleagues in the hope that they will lend their wholehearted support to a fundraising campaign now being conducted through the American Korean Foundation of New York.

Chang Chull, nicknamed Mike, is a young 19-year-old Korean lad who serves as an interpreter for the Continental Service Club at the 168th Medical Battalion, a few miles east of Seoul. Since the age of 9, Mike has been alone in the world. Many, under such conditions, would have lost their incentive and purpose for living—but not Mike. His intellectual curiosity gave him the will to live. Thus, he not only supported himself, but also put himself through school. In fact, he graduated from high school just last month, February, near the top of his class.

Mike's one desire is to attend medical school. The men of the 168th, knowing and loving Mike, ask for our help in backing Project Mike, a fundraising campaign now being conducted with Mike's goal in mind. What an opportunity this is for the American public to indicate their sincerity in wishing to utilize all means to implement world peace through people-to-people relationships. Not only Mike's future, but also the future of Korea is involved. If we can contribute in any way to provide more medical aid, as well as intelligent leadership abroad, then let us do so.

Mr. President, I am most hopeful that my colleagues will alert their constituents to this admirable cause initiated by our boys in the 168th Medical Battalion. Contributions should be sent to Project Mike, American Korean Foundation, 345 East 46th Street, New York 17, N.Y.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. Do I correctly understand that the time consumed by the Senator from Minnesota has been yielded by him to himself from the time on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota indicated his understanding that the time was to be taken in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I shall be very brief, because we have an understanding as to the procedure tonight. I shall merely spread upon the RECORD what I propose by the amendment, so that Senators may have an opportunity to consider it overnight.

What I propose is to strike out the material in parentheses, which allows "machinery and equipment in cases of demonstrated need," using the words of the bill, to be the basis for aid under the bill in any redevelopment area.

The scheme of the bill is such that the aid under the bill in any project in a redevelopment area, if my amendment is accepted, will be "land and facilities for industrial or commercial usage, including the construction of new buildings, the rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, and the alteration, conversion, or enlargement of existing buildings."

The real issue presented by my amendment is, Shall we or shall we not allow a municipality or other redevelopment authority to include machinery and equipment in what would be offered in order to attract industrial entities into a particular redevelopment area.

Mr. President, I speak as a friend of the bill. I am one of the bill's cosponsors. I believe I have demonstrated today by my voting that I am a friend of the bill and I am a friend of prompt action.

I speak now as a Senator from a large State—indeed, the principal industrial State in the United States—having an interest in accord with other States similarly situated, such as Pennsylvania, or Michigan, the State of the distinguished Presiding Officer [Mr. HART].

We have a certain similarity of interest in the proposal. We all wish to help, I think. I believe the Senate will pass the bill in some form which will be fairly close to the form in which it was introduced. I believe the voting today has so demonstrated.

We wish to help distressed areas. Indeed, we wish to give them every opportunity to attract business.

We have gone to very great lengths in the bill. I believe the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. MUSKIE] are entitled to very great credit for what has been done—and I shall discuss it in detail tomorrow—in respect to tightening up the so-called antipirating provisions; in other words, the provisions which will prevent the redevelopment areas from bidding for the business which is now in States such as Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, and other industrial States.

I think that job has been done very well in the bill. What my amendment seeks to provide is protection with respect to normal competition which goes on among the 50 States for the location of industries and the attraction of business to the individual States.

We must understand that this competition will continue notwithstanding the fact that there is a Distressed Areas Act. We shall continue to have competition among the States. Even a State which is replete with depressed areas of the character meant to be helped by the bill—let us consider a State like our sister State of West Virginia—will compete for business. West Virginia is trying to get business now, and I am sure will continue to try to get business after the bill passes, not only for the redevelopment areas, but also for every other part of the State.

At the same time we tighten the antipirating provisions let us give protection with respect to the taking away of a plant from us—speaking of "us" in terms of major industrial States.

What we have not yet done is to right the competitive balance with respect to normal competition which existed before, which still exists, and which will continue among the States, for new business.

I do not wish to give to the redevelopment areas, under the terms of the bill, a special advantage in addition to the normal competitive advantage which will be given by aid to the State. In short, I am trying very hard by the amendment to give traditional help to the distressed areas, but not to go outside of the traditional help to a different area which will give the redevelopment areas a direct advantage in the normal competition among the States for business.

It is my view that the machinery and equipment is what would break the camel's back. If we add to the right to deal with industrial structures, in order to attract business into a community—which is fairly traditional—the opportunity for facilities in a municipal sense; the opportunity for tax abatement, which is a normal way of attracting business—the right to give a new entrepreneur in a particular community a plant fully equipped with machinery and equipment, we are overweighting the competitive factor, I think, unfairly.

This is a hotly controverted issue and has been controverted before in respect to the bill, but I am buttressed by one other point. We know, as a matter of practical commercial experience, that it is possible for any kind of viable business to get machinery and equipment on very long-term credit—subject to mortgages and so on, but on very long-term credit. In a sense, the ability of a new enterprise to get machinery and equipment to enable it to start involves a sanction which the private enterprise system puts on that particular business to demonstrate its viability. At least some independent private enterprise entity will have to determine whether it is worth while making even a long-term deal with a particular business in a redevelopment area.

I think that is an extremely valuable sanction to us in respect to the bill, to make sure that communities will not go overboard in respect to the kinds of businesses they will establish.

If a community with redevelopment aid under the terms of the bill can give someone a complete plant—land, buildings, machinery, and equipment—it seems to me we deprive ourselves not only of the important competitive factor which I described a while ago but also of some independent judgment by some other business entity that the new enterprise is worth giving a certain amount of credit, a certain amount of backing in the form of machinery and equipment. That is traditional. That is the custom.

Many people starting a business have obtained machinery and equipment because they showed aptitude, skill, and plans which impressed the sellers of the machinery and equipment enough to entice them to make a deal on some basis which enabled the people to go into business, with practically no money but still with some hope of success.

For those two reasons I have, as a friend of the bill, and also as a Senator from a large State with a very real competitive interest in the new business which is constantly available in our country which can be attracted by any State—whether a State has redevelopment areas in it or not, or many of them, or as many as other States—a duty to press this point upon Congress, and it is for that reason that I have offered the amendment. I consider it a very serious and a very important point. Indeed, I have gone so far as to ask for the yeas and nays with respect to it.

Mr. President, in deference to our arrangement with respect to adjourning at an early hour, I should like now to reserve the remainder of my time on the bill and yield the floor to my distinguished colleague from New York to speak 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I heartily support the amendment which has been offered and so ably presented by my distinguished colleague. I have something more to say on that subject tomorrow. I hope Senators will read the amendment carefully and will read his presentation of it tonight.

I wish to say a few general words about the bill, and to place in the RECORD a very constructive reference to proposed area redevelopment legislation which comes from the Rochester Chamber of Commerce.

Realizing that there are problems that require attention in distressed areas throughout our Nation, the board of trustees of the Rochester chamber has laid out seven provisions which in the opinion of the governmental affairs council of the chamber are necessary to the success of any legislation in this field.

The provisions mentioned by the council are certainly worthy of the attention of the Senate. I therefore urge that they be read by Senators who are concerned with this proposed legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Board of Trustees of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce:

Your governmental affairs council has studied proposed Federal legislation for the purpose of instituting programs of assistance to economically distressed areas of the United States. Your council presents its conclusions on this subject for your consideration.

The principal proposals for Federal action in this area are contained in S. 1 (Mr. DOUGLAS) and S. 9 (Mr. DIRKSEN) which would set up an area redevelopment administration within the Federal Government. The bills differ somewhat in detail, but in general would provide loans, grants, technical assistance, vocational training, and retraining to areas having "substantial and persistent" unemployment as defined by each of the acts.

Without going into the lengthy detailed provisions of each of the bills, it may be noted that neither one is likely to be enacted in its present form but that some legislation to assist distressed areas will probably be passed at this session of Congress.

With this fact in mind, your governmental affairs council recommends that any legislation designed for this purpose contain the provisions as indicated below. Your council favors Federal action in this general area only if it is of a type which will actually serve the purpose for which it is enacted and will not represent undesirable interference on the part of the Federal Government in local affairs.

The provisions recommended by your council are as follows:

1. The establishment of an Area Development Administration should be placed within the organization of the Department of Commerce rather than as an independent agency;
2. The doctrine of home rule should be followed; namely, that the Federal Government act in this distressed areas field as much as possible through local governments;
3. Any Federal assistance should be given only on the basis of up-to-date analyses of statistics gathered on a uniform basis in the various areas of the United States;
4. Any distressed areas bill should provide encouragement to workers in the areas which are so designated to relocate elsewhere in order to diminish the area's economic distress;
5. Technical assistance to local governments and citizens' groups in such areas should be given to (a) reestablish former industries, (b) establish new ones under a research and development program, and (c) help in strengthening existing industry;
6. Technical assistance to a community should be made available by the administrator not only to specifically designated distressed areas but to any area which could use such a program (self-help, do-it-yourself, bootstrap operation) in maintaining or improving its economic health;
7. Vocational training programs should be provided as a supplement to the establishment of new industries in the designated areas.

These provisions are, in the opinion of your council, necessary to the success of any legislation in this field. At the same time your council believes that loan and grant functions, whether for public facilities or private businesses, should not be incorporated into such legislation. In the first place, such powers would be outside the regular control and review of Congress. Second, there are already adequate Federal financial facilities through which a distressed areas program could be operated, such as those created by the Housing Act, the Small Business Administration, the Community Facilities Act, and others, not to mention the many nongovernmental sources of financing.

Respectfully submitted for the Governmental Affairs Council.

CHARLES L. GOOD,

Council Chairman.

E. WILLARD DENNIS,

Chairman, Committee on Local, State, and Federal Relationships.

(The foregoing statement was prepared as a result of meetings held on February 24 and March 3, 1961, with the following members attending: Carey H. Brown, Newton B. Castle, Benjamin R. Crosby, E. Willard Dennis, Thelma S. Ellis, Charles L. Good, Harold S. Hacker, John R. Larimer, Robert E. O'Brien, William B. Pond, Arthur Richardson, Harold J. Roche, R. F. Stark, John W. Tarbox, Elmer H. Taylor, Gilden R. Van Norman, G. Harold Warnock, Ward H. Whipple.)

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that, in addition to this statement of the governmental affairs council, there be printed a statement of the trustees of the chamber of commerce. As will be noted, the full chamber supports the Federal action "if it will not represent undesirable interference on the part of the Federal Government in local affairs."

I think that the present bill already meets a number of the seven criteria outlined by the council. Several others of these points will be covered by amendments presently before the Senate, such as the one presented by my distinguished colleague. I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the trustees of the chamber of commerce be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE ROCHESTER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CONCERNING DISTRESSED AREAS LEGISLATION

The Rochester Chamber of Commerce has studied proposed Federal legislation for the purpose of instituting programs of assistance to economically distressed areas of the United States and presents its conclusions herewith.

The principal proposals for Federal action in this area are contained in S. 1 (DOUGLAS), S. 9 (DIRKSEN), and H.R. 4659 (SPENCE) which would set up an area redevelopment program within the Federal Government. The bills differ somewhat in detail, but in general would provide loans, grants, technical assistance, vocational training and retraining to areas having substantial and persistent unemployment as defined by each of the acts.

The Rochester Chamber of Commerce favors Federal action in this general area. However, such action is endorsed only if it will not represent undesirable interference on the part of the Federal Government in local affairs and private business. The Rochester chamber recommends the following provisions in legislation designed for this purpose:

1. The establishment of an Area Development Administration should be placed within the organization of the Department of Commerce rather than as an independent agency;
2. The doctrine of home rule should be followed; namely, that the Federal Government act in this distressed areas field as much as possible through local governments;
3. Any Federal assistance should be given only on the basis of up-to-date analyses of statistics gathered on a uniform basis in the various areas of the United States;

4. Any distressed areas bill should provide encouragement to workers in the areas which are so designated to relocate elsewhere in order to diminish the area's economic distress;

5. Technical assistance to local governments and citizens groups in such areas should be given to (a) reestablish former industries, (b) establish new ones under a research and development program, and (c) help in strengthening existing industry;

6. Technical assistance to a community should be made available by the Administrator not only to specifically designated distressed areas but to any area which could use such a program (self-help, do-it-yourself, bootstrap operation) in maintaining or improving its economic health;

7. Vocational training programs should be provided as a supplement to the establishment of new industries in the designated areas.

The Rochester Chamber of Commerce believes that loan and grant functions, whether for public facilities or private businesses, should not be incorporated into such legislation. In the first place, such powers would be outside the regular control and review of Congress. Second, there are already adequate Federal financial facilities through which a distressed areas program could be operated, such as those created by the Housing Act, the Small Business Administration, the Community Facilities Act, and others, not to mention the many nongovernmental sources of financing.

Mr. KEATING. I realize, of course, that many besides the chambers of commerce are interested in the proposed legislation, but I do wish to commend the chamber on what I feel is a very constructive and farseeing attitude on the proposed legislation. We have had out-and-out opposition from many groups connected with business. This is a very moderate and carefully worded presentation of their position, and, as I say, they are not opposed to all legislation in this field.

I wish to make a few observations about the health of our economy with reference to the proposed legislation before us today.

As was pointed out on Sunday by the Secretary of Commerce, it is clear that our economy is moving forward, and that the slump conditions of recent months are clearing up. I emphasize that this progress has been made prior to the enactment of any of the economic recovery programs now embodied in either this proposed legislation or any other legislation before the Congress.

Our recovery has been the result of inherent positive forces in our economy. I am delighted that this has come about. It illustrates the strength and resiliency of our free competitive enterprise system.

I am very much concerned that, if we substantially alter this system as some would have us do, we will undermine and negate the effect of natural recuperative forces which permit our economy to bounce back when conditions are unfavorable.

I favor the enactment of economic "firecrackers" which will stimulate our economy and move it on a little faster. We do not need TNT or an economic atomic explosion.

I hope that the legislation that is before us will be in such form when we finish with it that I shall be able to support it.

I wish to cite a few relevant figures which illustrate that our economy is moving forward.

There are clear indications that unemployment is leveling off. Unemployment was 6.8 percent in December, 6.6 percent in January and 6.6 percent in February. These figures are seasonally adjusted. Although there was a slight increase from January to February, the difference was not statistically significant. What is significant is that unemployment for the last 3 months has been fairly steady. We must never be willing to settle for people being out of work. Unemployment, as we all know, involves tremendous human problems that transcend simple statistics.

There are other favorable signs at the present moment. Retail sales increased in February over January. Inventories are down. The combination of increased sales and decreased inventories may well indicate that goods are moving faster, particularly in light of the coming of the spring season.

Nonresidential construction has increased. Heavy construction contract awards have increased.

Almost all economists have commented on the fact that our economy now seems to be moving forward. Looking back, it would appear that we have been through what, by contrast, might be considered a mild recession similar to several which have characterized the postwar period. We have not had, nor should we expect, a severe recession or depression. Our gross national product is only three-tenths of 1 percent below the alltime high of over half a trillion dollars reported in the second quarter of 1960.

I repeat, we are not in an emergency. We must not act as if one exists. I heartily agree that there are serious "pockets" of unemployment and economic distress, which can and do warrant our immediate attention. Many of these pockets of joblessness have long histories of economic woe. Legislation along the general lines of S. 1 will help but we must not be deluded into thinking that this is the end-all and cure-all for our Nation, because we all know that the effects of such proposed legislation will not show until sometime in the future, even if we were to enact it today. But I do think a few general observations on the state of our economy are entirely in keeping, and I am grateful to my colleague for yielding me this time.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, the measure we are considering today marks a significant step toward recognition of the fact that when one part of our country suffers, we all suffer.

S. 1 recognizes that chronic unemployment, whether in Missouri, or West Virginia, or New England, is a matter of grave national concern.

It should be emphasized that the Area Redevelopment bill adopts the principle that the major efforts for redevelopment must come from local communities and private groups, not the Federal Government.

The job should not and cannot be done by the Federal Government alone; and local cooperation and hard work is needed if the pockets of chronic unemployment in this Nation are to be effectively eliminated.

The role of the Federal Government can be compared to that of a commercial banker, providing guidance, assistance and funds to rebuild local industries and economies. But the local community must come more than halfway; the major effort rests with private industry and groups.

We have heard a good deal about S. 1 being an uneconomical spending bill. The facts are otherwise. Of the nearly $400 million provided under this program, $300 million will be in the form of loans, to be repaid by local governments and industry.

The only major expenditure would be $75 million in grants to communities for construction of public facilities.

I spent a good many years in business and it is my firm conviction that the program under S. 1 makes good business sense.

This bill is not a hand-out program; nor is it designed to prop up uneconomical business enterprises.

Nor, as spelled out in the bill, will it result in pirating industry from one section of the country to another.

It will provide a pool of capital funds for areas which have the potential for development in terms of human and material resources, but lack the means of getting the initial investment to make full use of this potential. The Federal Government would supply up to 65 percent maximum of the needed capital. The State governments, local governments, and private investors would supply the rest.

Unfortunately, my own State of Missouri has too many areas which could benefit from the program we are considering today. The men and women of these areas, many with highly developed skills, are ready, willing and anxious to work.

Local groups have been formed; in fact, Missouri has 180 community development organizations—the second highest number in the Nation.

All that is lacking in many such chronically depressed areas of my State and many States is the required initial capital.

S. 1 will fill this need.

Therefore, Mr. President, I urge Senate approval of the Area Redevelopment Act, a sensible, businesslike program which will benefit all America.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from Missouri for his very concise and commonsense address. He has been a tower of strength throughout the whole struggle, as he has in every move that is of benefit to the Nation. I express my deep feeling of obligation to him.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I thank the able senior Senator from Illinois for his kind remarks. This is just another illustration of the hard work and intelligence which characterize bills that he fathers. Millions of Americans who will be added to other millions, will be grateful to the senior Senator from Illinois when the pending legislation is passed. I know of no greater tribute that I can pay him.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT AND FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT, RELATING TO RATE OF INTEREST ON CERTAIN TIME DEPOSITS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HART in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States addressed to the President of the Senate, relating to rates of interest on time deposits held here by foreign governments paid to domestic depositors. Without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The communication from the President is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 14, 1961.

HON. LYNDON B. JOHNSON,
President of the Senate,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am transmitting herewith a draft of legislation which would amend existing law by permitting banks in this country to pay different rates of interest on time deposits held here by foreign governments than are paid to domestic depositors. Also transmitted is a memorandum from the Secretary of the Treasury describing the draft bill and its impact in detail.

The draft bill implements a recommendation contained in my message to the Congress dated February 6, 1961, relating to the balance-of-payments problem. It also complements and supports my directive to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue securities at special rates for exclusive holding by foreign central banks or governments.

If commercial banks are permitted to offer foreign governments higher rates of interest in competition with those existing abroad, those governments will be encouraged to maintain dollar accounts in this country rather than require the United States to convert their dollar accounts to gold for withdrawal. In this connection, it is only these foreign governments and their agencies which can directly purchase gold from the reserve stocks of the United States. However, as stated in my message of February 6, the proposed amendment is but one of a series of actions to be taken to alleviate the gold drain. Indeed, the factors which influence any central bank or government to prefer dollar accounts to gold are many and complex. Interest rates are only one. If we pursue policies of stability and growth inspiring world confidence, foreign governments should respond to higher interest rates on time deposits thereby aiding our gold outflow problem.

This inducement to foreign central bank deposits will have practically no impact on domestic market rates of interest. Moreover, any such impact would be confined to the short-term sector of the market and thus be consistent with national policy objectives.

In the interest of orderly procedure, the draft bill also permits similar treatment of deposits of international financial institutions of which the United States is a member.

I will appreciate it if you will lay the draft legislation before the Senate. A similar draft has been transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. I urge that the Congress act promptly and favorably on the proposal.

Sincerely,

JOHN F. KENNEDY.

SENATE

1. DEPRESSED AREAS. By a vote of 63 to 27, passed with amendments S. 1, the depressed areas bill. pp. 3733, 3738-51, 3753-3302

Agreed to the following amendments:

- By Sen. Humphrey to permit participation by an Indian tribe in providing a share of funds required for any type of redevelopment program, and to redefine the term United States to include the Virgin Islands. p. 3751
- By Sen. Bush to provide that in formulating standards for the designation of redevelopment areas consideration shall be given to the extent to which rural development projects have previously been located in any such area under programs administered by the Department of Agriculture. p. 3777
- By Sen. Bush to provide that in designating redevelopment projects "not more than one such project shall be located in any one State unless the Secretary has considered such applications for assistance under this Act as may have come from the several States which apply for such assistance." pp. 3777-8

By Sen. Sparkman to "change the interest rate formula to make it comply with the rate that is now available on college housing loans so far as public facility projects are concerned in redevelopment areas." pp. 3789-90

Rejected the following amendments:

By Sen. Dirksen, 66 to 27, which was in the nature of a substitute for the bill as reported by the committee and which he explained would provide "for $100 million in community facility loans, $75 million in loans for the essential purpose of the bill, and then sufficient money for vocational training, for consulting service, and for technical service to assist in providing aid to distressed areas." pp. 3753-64

By Sen. Scott, 57 to 31, which was in the nature of a substitute for the bill as reported by the committee and which he explained was the same as the depressed areas bill (S. 6) he introduced early this session. pp. 3771-7

By Sen. Javits, 61 to 32, to strike from the bill the provision which permits loans on machinery and equipment in cases of demonstrated need. pp. 3733, 3738-50

By Sen. Capehart, 71 to 19, to substitute new language providing a different formula to be used in designating redevelopment areas, and which Sen. Douglas contended would "restrict the assistance under S. 1 to one industry labor market areas in which there is substantial and persistent unemployment." pp. 3764-7

By Sen. Lausche, 55 to 36, to strike out Sec. 8 which provides for public facility grants for industrial or commercial purposes. pp. 3767-70

By Sen. Bennett to strike from the bill language providing that any areas in which a substantial part of the employment has been adversely affected by the reduction of trade barriers under the Tariff Act shall be entitled on application to special consideration as a redevelopment area. pp. 3778-87

By Sen. Long to require that studies be made of the economic effects of the deactivation of permanent military installations in redevelopment areas. pp. 3791-96

2. SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS. Received from the President proposed supplemental appropriation estimates for the Commodity Credit Corporation for fiscal year 1961, in the total amount of $2,969,525,000 (S. Doc. 19) (p. 3704). The proposed supplementals are for restoration of capital impairment through fiscal year 1960 ($1,017,610,000); reimbursement for estimated costs of special activities in fiscal year 1961 ($1,861,915,000); and for estimated 1961 costs of the special milk program ($90,000,000). These proposed supplemental appropriations will assure adequate financing of the mandatory programs of the Corporation, by restoring its capital impairment as of June 30, 1960, and reimbursing the Corporation for costs estimated to be incurred through the fiscal year 1961 in carrying out the Special Milk program and other special activities. Under the law, the Corporation finances these special activities subject to later reimbursement by appropriations.

3. FARM ORGANIZATIONS. Sen. Humphrey welcomed the 1961 convention of the National Farmers' Union, which is taking place in Washington. He commended the speeches of Secretary Freeman on agricultural policy, of John A. Baker on a farm credit program, and the speech of Under Secretary of State Bowles on American foreign policy, and he mentioned others who will be addressing the convention including Mr. McGovern, director of the food for peace program. pp. 3744-5

24. FOREST PRODUCTS. Extension of remarks of Rep. Boykin inserting several articles describing how W. D. Harrigan, founder of the Scotch Lumber Co., had aided in

Soviet Russia whereby the Soviet Russia renounced all claims to the Lithuanian territory for all times and recognized the independence and sovereignty of Lithuania; and

"Whereas on September 28, 1926 the Soviet Union signed a nonaggression treaty guaranteeing the integrity of the Lithuanian territory and on July 5, 1933, signed a convention defining aggression as follows:

"An aggressor shall be that state which commits any one of the following acts:

"1. Declares war against another state;

"2. Invades by its armed forces even without a declaration of war, the territory of another state;

"3. Attacks by its land, naval, or air forces, even without declaration of war, the territory of another state.

"4. No consideration of its political economic, military, or any other nature shall serve as an excuse for justification of aggression, as specified in foregoing articles"; and

"Whereas the last bilateral treaty between Lithuania and the Soviet Union was the mutual assistance pact concluded on October 10, 1939, reaffirming the aforesaid treaties and pledges and agreeing to solve all differences by peaceful means and refraining from participating in any alliance or coalition directed against either party and specifically stating that 'the realization of this treaty must not interfere (not infringe upon) the sovereign rights of the contracting parties, especially the structure of the state, their economic, political, or social systems'; and

"Whereas October 3, 1939, the Soviet Minister of Foreign Affairs, Molotov, supported by the Supreme Soviet, reaffirmed the pact and further proclaimed that 'This treaty stipulates the inviolability of the sovereignty of the signatory states and the principle of nonintervention in each others internal affairs,' and further declared, 'We stand for scrupulous observance of treaties and declare that all nonsense about sovietization of the Baltic States is only to the interest of our enemies and all anti-Soviet provocateurs;' and

"Whereas the same Minister of Foreign Affairs, Molotov, on September 28, 1939, had already entered into a secret agreement with the Nazi German Reich Minister of Foreign Affairs J. Von Ribbentrop, assigning Lithuania to Russia and the biggest part of Poland and a small section of Lithuania, to Germany; and

"Whereas the Soviet claim was that Lithuania was occupied as a war necessity and that after the war was over, Lithuania would be a free country again: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That all freedom loving countries which believe in democracy and freedom declare themselves to avoid any talks, conferences, discussions, and enter any agreements with the Soviet Union which broke every agreement, every treaty, pledge, or promise in the last 45 years, until Lithuania, all the Baltic States, and other occupied countries are freed and their independence restored; and be it further

"Resolved, That the United States and all the democracies cease supporting the United Nations until they cease being an international farce bent upon appeasing large powers and thus sacrificing small nations by failing to demand the restitution of their freedom; and be it further

"Resolved, That the restoration of freedom to Lithuania be placed on the agenda of the United Nations by our Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson, and that the representatives of Lithuania be given full rights to present their case; and finally be it

"Resolved, That all Americans of Lithuanian descent beseech the Government of the United States to take a firm stand and definite action to safeguard the freedoms and liberties of those in Soviet bondage before we lose our friends abroad and the respect of the free world.

"V. BRAZIULIS,
President, Lithuanian Alliance of America, Cleveland Section No. 14.
"MARY MISCHIK, Secretary."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, is morning business concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURDICK in the chair). Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate 1 be made the pending business, despite the fact that it is not yet 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] to the committee amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, do I still have the floor? The reason I make the suggestion is that I should like to have a quorum call at the appropriate time.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if the majority leader wishes to do so, very well. I would not like to yield time from the time allotted to me. I think I have only 45 minutes left. Would the majority leader be willing to take it out of the joint time?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, has the amendment before the Senate been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been read.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Then I ask unanimous consent that I may suggest the absence of a quorum without the time being taken out of the time allotted to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I suggest to the majority leader that the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. Should not the quorum call be continued, since there will be a yea and nay vote?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is true. However, permission was granted to certain committees to meet until 12 o'clock. I suggest, if it is agreeable to the Senator from New York, that we proceed, and suggest the absence of a quorum later. Senators will be coming to the Chamber anyway.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from New Hampshire without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOT FRONT IN THE COLD WAR

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a penetrating analysis of the economic aspects of the cold war, prepared by Maj. Gen. Julius Klein, retired.

Major General Klein, who is well known throughout this country and abroad for his distinguished ability in civic, business, and military affairs, unquestionably is a highly qualified observer of the economic problems inherent in this extremely complex situation. He has rendered valuable service to this country in the past, for example, with regard to the preparation of studies conducted under the auspices of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

His most recent contribution to our understanding of the nature and tactical objectives of the Soviet economic war against the free world presents yet another highly useful public service. His well-prepared analysis was the subject of an interview with the Chicago Tribune followed by a story based on that interview in the Sunday edition of the Tribune of October 9, 1960. I ask unanimous consent that this newspaper summary by Wayne Thomis be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of that portion of General Klein's analysis entitled "Hot Front in the Cold War."

There being no objection, the analysis and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOT FRONT IN THE COLD WAR

(An analysis of the U.S. position in the global economic conflict with the U.S.S.R., by Maj. Gen. Julius Klein, retired)

(Maj. Gen. Julius Klein, retired, is a former Chicago newspaperman and foreign correspondent who now heads an international public relations firm. He has been called upon frequently to conduct special studies for committees of the U.S. Senate and Federal agencies on the administration of U.S. foreign aid programs. His firm, Julius Klein Public Relations, Inc., represents United States and European industrial organizations engaged in international trade and investment. General Klein's analysis of problems confronting the Western nations in coping with the mounting Soviet economic offensive is an outgrowth of numerous surveys he has conducted for his clients as well as for the U.S. Government. Material contained in this analysis has been obtained from authoritative sources in the United States and Europe.)

THE U.S. ECONOMIC STAKE IN EUROPE

Millions of words have been expended in recent years to adduce comparisons between the relative economic growth rates of the United States and the Soviet Union.

Rival pundits have predicted, on the one hand, that the U.S.S.R. is on the road to economic supremacy over the United States and, on the other hand, that inherent drawbacks in the Soviet economy assure that East and West will be able to coexist peacefully for an indefinite period.

Statistics can be shaped to support either view, as long as they fail to take account of the political and psychological factors that are at play. Those who confidently predict that coexistence will prove feasible argue that in time the Soviet citizen will wear himself out politically and that this ideological attrition will lead to a progressive decrease in Soviet economic productivity.

These hopeful speculations have built-in errors and dangers. They ignore the central fact that the Soviets have demonstrated an uncommon ability to organize both the will to work and their national productive capacity. The hard truth is that the Soviet economy has shown an unusual growth rate over a considerable number of years. By 1957, Soviet industrial production was 40 percent of the U.S. level and about 70 percent of the western European production. Should present rates of growth remain constant, the Soviets by 1965 will be producing at 90 percent of the U.S. rate.

In estimating the future pace of economic development, Western savants make the mistake of hinging their comparisons of the rival systems to the standards of living that obtain on each side. The Soviets cannot, of course, match the Western nations in the creature comforts that go with gracious living. It may well be possible to travel from the Crimea to Siberia without ever finding an electrical cocktail mixer on Soviet store shelves. But what is overlooked is that the production of such gadgets is totally irrelevant to the requirements of Soviet designs for world domination, the sole criterion that is applied to every phase of Soviet life.

The virility of Soviet productive capacity is perhaps most sharply evident in its rate of agricultural production, particularly in the wake governmental relaxation of the once harsh collective farm policies. Discerning tourists have seen no sign of ideological or productive weakening. It would, therefore, be suicidal folly to assume that Soviet agriculture will continue to lag behind U.S. farm production.

An even more threatening portent is to be found in the field of foreign trade, where the Soviets have been waging an all-out offensive. Maximum efforts are being made to obtain credits and favorable terms of payment. Meanwhile, the Soviet economy is buttressed by a great wealth of natural resources and the U.S.S.R.'s organization as a push-button state that can switch its economy in any direction without difficulty. This high degree of flexibility raises the question of whether the Soviets are nearing a position from which they strike damaging blows at U.S. economy, and whether they can enlist the services of other economies for their political aims.

That such a design is in being cannot be doubted. Already, several nations have found themselves hip deep in crises because, for reasons best known to the Soviets, trade was abruptly terminated, forcing the dependent states to scurry about for new markets.

One of the most ominous developments of the cold war is the emergence of the possibility that some sectors of the European economy could come to depend on trade with the Soviets. In Europe, just as in the United States, nothing is more feared than the thought of an economic recession. Any offer of trade would then be acceptable, provided it offered a path, no matter how tenuous, toward fending off the specter of unemployment. Meanwhile, the Soviet's captive states in Europe give the Kremlin a number of advance strongholds which already maintain extensive trade relations with the Western States. There can be no doubt that these satellites function under the central direction of the Soviets and constitute direct arms of Soviet policy in Europe.

The dread significance of the Soviet trade foothold in Europe is that it reduces the necessity of military conflict to achieve Soviet objectives. With skillful manipulation, trade relations could be further extended with European states—probably against a background of soothing talk from the Soviets on the theme of co-existence—and then suddenly suspended with devastating impacts on Europe's economy.

Could such a move affect the U.S. economy?

It might be argued that U.S. exports and imports are a relatively small factor in the total U.S. economy and their loss could therefore be sustained without major ill effects. To accept so soothing a conclusion would be a tragic error. Whether we like it or not, the entire structure of international relationships has produced so marked a degree of interdependence that serious economic disturbances in any one sector can set off damaging tremors that affect all.

The Soviet economy, bolstered by the resources of its satellites and the economic potential of other European states, would give the U.S.S.R. a degree of power that would constitute a direct political and economic threat to the survival of the United States.

It is obvious that the United States could not afford to look on complacently if the economies of its friends in Western Europe were to be severely shaken or unhinged. It is equally obvious that the United States, no less than any other individual nation, would soon find itself in a vise if it had to depend entirely on itself.

The measure of the Soviet economic challenge is to be seen in the fact that the industrial production of the states that make up the European Economic Community is lagging behind U.S.S.R. production. Should the Soviets contrive to harness the European economic potential for their own purposes, the productive capacity of such an economic bloc would quickly surpass the U.S. capability by a wide margin. By 1965, the crude steel production of such a bloc would be 25 to 30 percent higher than the U.S. capacity. Similar ratios would apply to chemical products and machinery. As long ago as 1957, U.S. exports amounted to $20,600 million, while exports of the European Economic Community states came to $32 billion.

The sobering conclusions to be drawn from continuing Soviet economic incursions do not require emphasis. It would be courting national suicide to assume that the U.S. economy is sufficiently shockproof to warrant a sense of full security. Europe's economy cannot be permitted to fall into the hands of the Soviets, either through yielding to the narcosis of the Soviets' coexistence line or through naked force. More than at any time in the history of this century, the economic security of the United States, like that of the Western European nations, is vitally dependent on the development and execution of bold and unwavering policies within Europe itself.

It would be an invitation to disaster to assume that the Soviets are prepared to act in accordance with the principles of economic commonsense or to sacrifice their political aims to ideals of friendly cooperation. Any time it suits Soviet plans, or proves necessary to the achievement of their goals of world hegemony, they will not hesitate to initiate what they would regard as a reasonable destruction of non-Communist economies, even if this would require an extremely unreasonable use of economic resources.

The compelling logic of the Soviet design is that the security of Western Europe's economy is vital to American self-interest. To abandon our friends in Europe, even without the incidence of a war, would be to abandon ourselves.

THE SOVIETS' ECONOMIC SPIDER WEB

Initial Soviet reaction to the Marshall plan in 1947 appeared to reflect a disposition to cooperate in the multilateral economic reconstruction plan organized on U.S. initiative. But in one of the acrobatic policy shifts that has become the hallmark of Soviet tactics, Vyacheslav Molotov, in July 1947, walked out on the Paris Marshall Plan Conference. The Soviets' satellites were ordered to disassociate themselves promptly from any further participation in the Marshall plan.

Three months later, in October 1947, the Kremlin spawned the Cominform and the era of the cold war was born. The U.S.S.R. turned full speed ahead to the prosecution of its doctrinaire objectives. It set out to strengthen its war potential while at the same time establishing the production allocations necessary to its goal of sapping and destroying the political and economic foundations of the countries of the free world.

The breakneck pace of the Soviet economic offensive has become most sharply discernible in its effect on world raw material markets. Soviet pressures have been most insistently felt in trade currents affecting non-ferrous metals (tin, zinc, aluminum, etc.). Some muddled, though hopeful, observers contended that Soviet tactics resulted from a domestic economic dilemma; they argued that the Soviets' market manipulations could be explained by Russian surpluses of tin, zinc and aluminum, against a shortage of copper. Nevertheless, the Soviets managed to play havoc with the Western raw material economy in the nonferrous metals sector. But a grinning Khrushchev could chortle, "You ain't seen nothing yet."

The Western nations were brought to a shocking realization that they could be hit harder and even more painfully by Soviet inroads in the Afro-Asian countries.

During his visit to the United States, Soviet boss Khrushchev blandly conceded that the economic assimilation of the newly developing countries was a cardinal objective in his economic and trade offensive against the Western nations. To a query by an American trade union leader as to why the Soviets preferred to extend economic aid to newly developing countries via bilateral agreements rather than through neutral international institutions such as the United Nations, the Soviet dictator replied: "The bread of bilateral agreements is not tainted. If it tastes of socialism that is a pleasant taste."

This was a deliberate understatement of an extremely complex situation. In point of fact, the Communist countries regard bilateral agreements as essential to strengthening their negotiating position in relation to weaker trade partners. Once they are induced to sell raw materials in return for credits and technical assistance the newly developing countries soon find themselves enmeshed in a Communist economic spider web. Trapped into a debtor position, these countries are not long in discovering that the Communist states demand particularly high prices for their export goods to the underdeveloped lands. What hopes may be spurred for the achievement of satisfactory economic levels are completely at the mercy of the Communists; the larger the proporand equity. Nor would it be possible to find an acceptable legal common denominator for the French settler in Algeria and the nationalist guerrilla, for Boer and Bantu in South Africa.

Our thinking on international affairs will be much clearer and more realistic if we can clear our minds of the common delusion that there is an institutional gimmick for every difficulty. Constitutions and treaties are, after all, scraps of paper which derive their ultimate sanction from the character and good faith of the peoples who live under them and the governments which sign them.

The British statesman William E. Gladstone referred to the American Constitution as "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man." Most Americans would be inclined to agree. Yet it is quite probable that the American people, with their inherited instinct for liberty under law, would have maintained orderly self-government even under a less impressive instrument.

On the other hand it is unlikely that a committee composed of the most eminent masters of political science, of men like Locke, Montesquieu, de Tocqueville, Adams, and Madison, could devise a constitution that would function effectively in the Congo, or in some other backward and disturbed areas of the world today.

It is men who determine the validity of documents, not documents that shape the actions of men. It is crucial that Americans realize their own concept of institutions, and their respect for them, has almost no meaning through much of the world.

GROWING POWER OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, we cannot be reminded too forcibly or too frequently of the dangers of big government and its tendency to tax and tax and spend and spend.

Foster's Daily Democrat, a newspaper serving the southeastern part of New Hampshire since 1873, has called this fact to our attention in an excellent editorial dated March 10, 1961.

The editorial reminds us that our tax money is dissipated by administrative costs in Washington, partly channeled to other States and partly returned to the taxpayers of New Hampshire. Meanwhile, new agencies and departments are added to our Federal Government that require more and heavier spending and the cycle goes on.

I commend this fine editorial to my colleagues and request unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GROWING POWER OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

During the past few weeks economists have been showing some concern over the rapid increase in indebtedness in the United States, particularly private debt, and State and municipal debt.

Private debt of individuals in the United States has gone up $441 billion since World War II to a total of $581 billion. State and municipal debt has climbed from $46.3 billion to $60 billion in the same period.

Leftwing economists argue that debt rise goes along with expansion and growth. In many cases States and cities are heavily in debt, relative to income (Dover is a typical example). Private debt at $581 billion is immense. Say the planners: It may be necessary to find new ways to use the Federal Government's borrowing power to finance growth.

Along this line it is proposed to set up a new Government department on Cabinet level, that of Housing and Urban Affairs. In our opinion it is one more step in the move to make this Nation a purely socialistic state.

When are the American people going to wake up to the fact that all Federal money comes out of their own pockets? Of every dollar in Federal taxes raised in New Hampshire at least 25 cents remains in Washington in the form of administrative costs. Another heavy slice goes to some of the less wealthy States in the South. What is left for us is probably about 65 cents out of every dollar.

When are people going to realize that it would be more economical to tax themselves directly for local improvements, rather than to pay a 50-percent bonus to the Federal Government for creating hundreds of hidden taxes in addition to some direct taxes?

We go along with many economists in declaring that local people know more about their needs than does the Government in Washington. Less costly Government aid, rather than more, should be what we seek. If the Federal Government would let up on taxation, and permit local and State government to take over more of this responsibility, the better off would all of us be. That is perhaps too much to expect.

We hope that the idea of creating a new department in Washington to take over more of the responsibilities that belong to us as citizens of Dover, and other New Hampshire cities, will not go through.

TRIBUTE TO HERMAN A. LOWE

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the great circle of friends of Herman A. Lowe was saddened Monday to learn of his sudden passing on Sunday at Philadelphia. He was a prominent Washington correspondent for various newspapers and periodicals for a number of years and was one of the most astute journalists in the press corps.

He was an alert and conscientious correspondent and he had the keen ability of determining the political implications of daily events in the Nation's Capital.

Herman was a good friend of mine for years and I always enjoyed my association with him. He and his widow, Florence, made an excellent newspaper team and kept their publication clients up to the minute on all events of importance. It was only a few years ago that he left his Washington assignment to accept a key position with the Albert Einstein Medical Center in Philadelphia. However, his many years of newspaper work and public relations activities in Washington and Pennsylvania prompted him recently to decide on returning to Washington to reestablish his correspondence work. This was closer to his heart and he was looking forward to opening a news bureau within a few days.

Herman Lowe was very well known in my State of New Hampshire because of his excellent news coverage for the Manchester Union and the New Hampshire Sunday News.

Mrs. Bridges and I want to join his legion of friends in extending our deepest sympathy to his widow, Florence, and to their wonderful daughter and son.

THE ISSUES OF HUNGARY AND TIBET BEFORE THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, these days we hear a great deal about the image of the United States of America abroad.

Unfortunately, we have learned through bitter experience that false theories about America and American ideals have spread throughout the world in the past with little or no justification.

It is with this in mind that I invite attention to disturbing reports of attempts by this country's Ambassador to the United Nations to postpone until a later date debate on the issues of Hungary and Tibet. I have noted the timely statement made before this body by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING], with which I agree wholeheartedly. Yesterday I sent a wire to Ambassador Stevenson setting forth my views in this regard. I ask unanimous consent that the text of this wire be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 14, 1961.

Hon. ADLAI E. STEVENSON,
U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations,
United Nations Building, New York, N.Y.:

I am greatly disturbed by reports that several items, including the Hungary and Tibet issues, may be postponed from the current agenda of the United Nations. In my estimation such action would be a grave mistake and could only set the stage for further conquests and slaughters of equal magnitude in the future.

I am convinced that the Hungarian and Tibetan issues need to be discussed fully at an early date. This is vital if we are to show the rest of the world that we neither condone nor do we take lightly unwarranted aggression by Soviet Russia or Communist China.

To postpone debate on these issues would be too great a price to pay for creating a quieter international climate for negotiation on other matters. I urge you to resist any temptation to allow these issues to be deferred to a later session of the General Assembly.

STYLES BRIDGES,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, for the life of me, I cannot understand what we hope to gain by seeking deferment of a thorough airing of the events surrounding the Hungarian and Tibetan massacres. From what I can piece together in the news reports, it would appear that we are seeking to either save time in order to concentrate on other measures or to create a favorable international climate for discussion of other topics.

I fully realize the importance of other matters on the United Nations agenda, with particular reference to the Congo crisis, but I submit that we are wasting a great deal of time trying to save time.

On the other hand, the unfavorable international climate which we are trying to rectify is not of our making. It was created by such incidents as the inexcusable and indefensible slaughters of the peoples of Hungary and Tibet.

One does not cure cancer with a Band-aid.

And we are not going to calm world tensions by placing a huge adhesive plaster over the wounds of Hungary and Tibet.

I sincerely hope that the reports of our desire to postpone action on these two issues will not mislead peoples of other nations into thinking that the United States considers these acts of aggression to be unimportant. We consider the loss of a single life to be all important, and the senseless murders of countless Hungarians and Tibetans is not treated lightly by any American.

I would hope that these problems will be discussed as soon as possible in order that responsibility might be firmly fixed and our position made decidedly clear.

We have nothing to lose by a complete disclosure of these facts but I fear that we have much to lose by vacillating on such important matters.

I thank the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I believe the Senator from New Hampshire is absolutely correct in urging that the United Nations at our behest, if no other—and I am sure there will be others—retain on its agenda the Hungary and Tibet items. I make that statement for this reason: I yield to no one in my desire to bring about some accommodation between ourselves and the Communists in the Soviet Union which will bring about a lessening of world tension. But I am not blind to the fact—and I do not think the American people should be—that we are dealing in an area in which each of the parties must play its own game to the full. If it does not, it will be defeated. The Russians are not letting up in Laos, the Congo, Berlin, Algeria, or Latin America. They are riding every horse that suits them and fits their case.

It seems to me the affront to civilized man and the whole moral tone of the world represented by the terrors in Hungary and Tibet represent our case. This result is what people who think they can find an easy way to development through the Russian system are going to run into themselves in terms of repression.

Therefore, we should press our case. I do not see in what manner that kind of dignity and starch in one's backbone would interfere with coming to an accommodation with the Russians in Geneva on atomic testing or any other issue, if they wish to accommodate. I think the point that the Senator from New Hampshire properly makes, one which is implied in everything that he has said, is that the Russian will not wish to accommodate unless we try our case in the world forum as actively as they do.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thank the distinguished Senator for his contribution. He is absolutely truthful and accurate.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] to the committee amendment as amended. The Senator from New York has 47 minutes remaining.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes.

We come to a discussion of the amendment which is before the Senate, and which proposes to strike any reference to machinery and equipment from the distressed areas bill which we are now considering.

In the first place, Senators should be clear that the bill is specific in what it authorizes money to be used for, and the specifics are found at the foot of page 45 and on page 48, as follows: Under the terms of the bill the money can be used to aid in financing any project within a redevelopment area for the purchase or development of land and facilities. Then we skip to the phrase which relates to machinery and equipment, to which I just referred, and which I am moving to strike—

For the purchase or development of land and facilities (including machinery and equipment in cases of demonstrated need) for industrial or commercial usage, including the construction of new buildings, the rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, and the alteration, conversion, or enlargement of existing buildings.

What my amendment proposes to do is to say, "You can use the money provided under the bill for all these purposes, but you may not actually supply the machinery and equipment for the plants which you are going to encourage by providing land, facilities, the utilities which they require, making tax deals, and any other arrangements which are normal in the promotion of inducing industrial enterprises to enter into an area in which they have not operated before."

I should like to put into focus and perspective the reason for the amendment. I make this statement as a friend of the bill. I am one of the cosponsors of the bill. I voted to report the bill from the committee. I showed, in a very difficult vote yesterday on financing through Government bond issues the loans funds provided in the bill, that I believe in the bill. This vote was not an easy one for any Senator on this side of the aisle to make. I proposed the amendment because I think the bill must be fair in terms of the larger industrial States of the Nation.

I believe the bill will be very helpful, particularly to communities which have had great difficulties in terms of permanent technological unemployment. The distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is present in the Chamber. The State which he represents in part has been one of the hardest hit. My own State has pockets of the same kind, as Pennsylvania and other States also have. We believe that the bill will help those particular areas. Hence the bill.

But the competition between States to attract industrial firms to locate within them will continue. Obviously, a bill of this scope and size in terms of the amount involved will not end the competitive activity between the States for attracting business into their States; and naturally the largest industrial States must do the biggest job on that score.

For example, it is said that President Kennedy has alleged that we must find 25,000 new jobs a week. I respectfully submit that if we are to find 25,000 new jobs a week in order to employ the normal accretions to the work force in the United States, we shall have to find at least 2,500 of those jobs within the State of New York itself, because we have 10 percent of the employables of the United States. In order to employ that number, we must go out and dig. I might say, too, because I think it is important to put this problem in focus, that during the Eisenhower administration, which is being somewhat economically maligned now, about 18,000 new jobs a week were found. No one understands better than I—and many Senators on this side of the aisle feel exactly the same way—that we have a problem of unemployment. Even so, fact is that we have the highest employment in history, and we must think not only of the 6½ percent or 7 percent who may be unemployed and who we are seeking to help in every way humanly possible, but also we must think about and plan for opportunities for the 93 percent plus who are employed. In my State they number approximately 6 million people.

So I am interested in the bill, which is not especially for the benefit of my State, but will benefit other States. I believe it is very true that with the great interest we have, if the country is in better shape, we are in better shape. But at the same time, we do not want to load the deck against normal competition between the States, which will continue after the bill becomes law as it has operated in the past.

In normal competition there are ground rules. Normally a State or locality is very well able by its own devices—and many have done so—to work out a solution. The junior Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING] and I have an outstanding example in Utica, N.Y., which suffered a devastating blow when the textile industry moved out of that community overnight and cut employment to ribbons, and which by setting up a development agency of its own, with the use of many people and private credit, restored itself to a very high degree of effectiveness in industrial terms. We are coming to the rescue of particular communities which apparently are unable to do so because of the inadequacy of their resources.

However, it seems to me we do not want to come to their rescue to such an extent that they then will be in a better position to compete with their neighbors than they would have a right to be if they were restored to their normal competitive status.

The normal pattern of development in any American community, in terms of the bill, has been for the community, with its own resources and with private resources, to offer people tax accommodations, retrained help through vocational training in the schools or in analogous ways, and a good climate in terms of taxation. Perhaps they might be offered some arrangements with respect to taxation on real estate, and buildings which might have been either vacated by other industries as a result of technological unemployment, or which the community might undertake to construct.

But it has been most unusual, and indeed considered to be unfair competition among the respective States, to try to give to an industry, in order to attract it into a particular area, a plant fully equipped. Nonetheless, that is exactly what the bill contemplates.

Therefore, the first point is that we would be loading against the industrial States a competitive situation which had previously existed in terms of trying to get new business, which situation exists now, and which will exist tomorrow, even when the bill is passed, by giving an advantage beyond restoring the community to the normal ability to compete, by giving to the redevelopment areas an advantage beyond what is contemplated by the bill, if we persist in including the item respecting machinery and equipment. I think it is most unfair to the industrial States, which will be financing this whole operation very heavily, because they are the principal tax producers in the country.

I say this as a friend of the bill and as one who is interested in seeing the bill pass. The provision to which I object represents a distortion of the purpose of the bill, and therefore should be corrected for the reasons I have mentioned.

It is very well known—and I do not believe any authority need be cited for it—that the normal pattern of attracting business by American industry does not include the furnishing to a particular industry or a small business with machinery and equipment. Such a proposal has been protested against many times as representing unfair competition, and as being particularly unfair to many of the States. For example, many States send representatives to other States. They send them to my State—and this is particularly true of Southern States, who do a great deal of this—to attract business to their States. However, it is most unusual for an inducement to be held out in terms of machinery and equipment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. I yield myself an additional 5 minutes.

As I said, it is very unusual that machinery and equipment has been offered as an inducement. That has always been considered as being a most unfair inducement, and has certainly been frowned upon, and generally not employed. That is reason No. 1.

The second reason I find very persuasive with me, and I hope it will be persuasive to many Senators as well. We know that machinery and equipment are sold on very long terms of credit. A machinery and equipment supplier will look over the auspices under which a new business is being organized—and we are dealing here with the organization of new businesses—and the supplier will decide whether it is a worthy credit risk to go along with that business in terms of supplying machinery and equipment on a fairly long-term basis. Usually that credit will be extended by way of a chattel mortgage, because in most cases the supplying of the machinery and equipment is considered to be a safe bet, inasmuch as the depreciation is not rapid. This represents by the seller of the machinery and equipment an overriding economic judgment on the soundness of the enterprise, which is produced, as it were, from the dynamics of the private enterprise system.

It seems to me that we should be very careful not to omit that from our considerations, not to strike it from our considerations, by enabling local communities in developing areas to supply machinery and equipment with Federal aid, which could be done under the provisions of the pending bill. If we do that we deny ourselves a very effective economic governor, in which the self-interest of the supplier of machinery and equipment gives some control over the establishment of an improvident enterprise. I believe we all agree that one of the worst things that could happen to this whole concept represented by the pending bill would be if that were to happen. That would be the end of the concept for decades, and would be decidedly harmful to it.

Those reasons, Mr. President, are very persuasive in terms of eliminating the machinery and equipment provision from the bill.

I should like to point out that when the bill was first proposed it stated "including machinery and equipment in unusual circumstances," or words to that effect. The precise words were "in exceptional cases." Then when the bill came to us from committee the language was changed to read: "including machinery and equipment in cases of demonstrated need." It seems to me that this represents an open license with respect to machinery and equipment, because "in cases of demonstrated need" would apply to every project in the bill. The provisions of the bill would not be utilized to finance a small business except in a case of demonstrated need. Therefore, the supplying of machinery and equipment, by the change in those words, has had taken out of it whatever cautions were expressed within the bill. Machinery and equipment become as much an integral part of the bill, without any limitation whatever, as "industrial or commercial usage, including the construction of new buildings," and so forth. That language is found at page 45 of the bill.

It seems to me that these two points are endemic in the provision now contained in the bill. They are the points with respect to unfair competition between States in respect of attracting new business and bringing underdeveloped States up to normal.

Mr. GRUENING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. GRUENING. Is the Senator from New York aware that under our foreign aid program we have for years been supplying machinery of all kinds to foreign countries, with that machinery in many cases competing with our own domestic industries, and that that policy has been approved by the Executive, at least in the past, and voted by the Congress?

I am wondering whether the Senator does not believe that it is somewhat of a paradox and an error to deny such aid to our own depressed areas when we are giving it all over the world with our taxpayers' dollars?

Mr. JAVITS. I do not believe it is a paradox, and I do not believe it is an error. These broad generalizations will not hold up. I have in mind the standard of living and the conditions with which we must deal abroad. They are totally different not only as between ourselves and the foreign countries, but also as between these foreign countries themselves. If we try to go into generalizations in this respect we will never have a depressed area bill or a foreign aid program. We must approach this subject on a case-to-case basis. That is the only way we can get an effective result.

Supplying of machinery and equipment under the foreign aid program was an aspect of the reconstruction of economies abroad which had been very heavily destroyed or damaged by war. That included machinery and equipment.

Furthermore, I believe now there is no longer any necessity to supply this form of aid to these industrial countries which have been made whole, and that now we may be supplying, either directly or indirectly, machinery and equipment to countries in less-developed areas, but which have conditions not even remotely resembling those which occur within a State with the lowest per capita income, which is going to be helped in the pending bill.

I have already given my reasons for a very deep conviction, after hearing all the testimony, and as a friend of the bill, that this provision will distort the competitive picture.

Mr. GRUENING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. GRUENING. I merely wish to comment that aid by way of machinery has gone to foreign countries which were not devastated by war, but to overcome the same kind of depression that we are trying to cure in our country. I point out again, as I have before, the inconsistency of the double standard that we have been pursuing in failing to aid American depressed areas and setting up all kinds of obstacles and conditions and qualifications and restrictions to weaken or sidetrack these purposes, while we do not pursue these same tactics when we so generously distribute aid to foreign countries, many of which are in exactly the same kind of condition that we are trying to cure at home.

The American people are getting increasingly concerned about this double standard, and they will be concerned even more if the depressed areas bill is so changed that it will cease to be effective.

Mr. JAVITS. We have an enormous interest with respect to sending machinery abroad, because we export it.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Apropos what the Senator has just said, we are rapidly losing most of our machinery business in foreign countries. We are at present exporting almost nothing such as farm machinery and other equipment, compared with what we exported previously. The foreign countries are taking the market away from us in every country of the world, because they are selling at half the prices that our businesses much charge.

What I was going to ask the Senator from New York was in connection with the tables. Do these tables, which appear in the report, come from the Bureau of Labor Statistics?

I notice particularly that the labor force of Plattsburgh, N.Y., is given as 21,350, which is somewhat above the population of the town. I am wondering how it got that way. I wondered who furnished the figures and if they are absolutely correct.

Mr. JAVITS. The concept here is of labor market areas; and a labor market area, though it may be designated with the name of a particular community which is its center, is not necessarily confined to that community. But I would not wish to engage in a debate with the Senator on these figures, which are not mine. If the Senator desires to know more about that, I will have a check made.

Mr. AIKEN. Are they figures which were supplied by the Bureau of Labor Statistics?

Mr. JAVITS. My understanding is that they are, but I will have them checked.

Mr. AIKEN. They may be correct, but in the Plattsburgh labor force are included 5,000 members of the Air Force and perhaps 800 or 900 students at the teachers' college. I notice that in the figure for estimated unemployment, the age goes down to age 14, which would include most high school and college students as well.

Mr. JAVITS. I will certainly check on the Senator's point.

Mr. AIKEN. I refer to page 68, the figures of the State employment security agency. It seems that in Clinton County—and it is a large county, having a population of something like 50,000—the labor force given is 21,350. That seems to be considerably above the national average in relation to population, even if we include the whole county.

Mr. JAVITS. I will certainly check those figures.

Mr. AIKEN. I simply was curious as to how those figures were obtained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. I yield myself an additional 5 minutes.

In response to the Senator's first point, about machinery and equipment, I wish the Senator would check those figures.

I think I can say that there is no Senator whom I respect more than I do my dear friend and colleague from Vermont. However, it is a fact—and I wish he would check it, because I know he is always very meticulous about his figures—that one of the elements in the increase in our exports has been machinery. It may not be the particular types to which the Senator from Vermont refers; but even if it is shifting in type, it has represented, and still represents, a critically important part of our export picture.

Mr. AIKEN. I think a good part of our export machinery goes to equip American branch plants overseas. They are being established so rapidly that if we do not look out, we will not find any left here.

Mr. JAVITS. I cannot agree. The hearings before the Joint Economic Committee demonstrate that American business is not being priced out of the world markets, even though we are fearful of it, and have a right to be, and have much to learn about it. However, I do not believe generalizations are quite fair.

If the Senator will allow me to do so, although it certainly will not be ready in time for this bill, I shall make a full dress presentation to the Senate on both subjects. I think the Senator from Vermont has perhaps prompted me to do something concerning a prevailing misconception. I am all for measures which will fortify against danger; but I do not think we ought to be any longer under illusions that all our American business is running away, that we are losing our machinery by exports, and so forth.

Mr. AIKEN. Am I correct that under the bill there are certain areas in New York—a half dozen, anyway—which would qualify for assistance under the depressed areas bill?

Mr. JAVITS. There are.

Mr. AIKEN. Am I further correct in my understanding that any manufacturing plant in Vermont could establish a branch in New York in order to get the advantages provided in the bill, including low-cost money?

Mr. JAVITS. That is not so, because the antipirating provisions of the bill are quite tight. I call the Senator's attention to the tests. Such a move must not reduce employment in other areas of the United States. It must not result in substantial detriment to the area of original location. It may not transfer jobs from one community to another. There has been a very considerable tightening of the antipirating and antiraider provisions.

The difficulty is that the antiraider provisions deal with established business or with new branches of the established business.

I am trying to deal with the normal competition among the States for new business. That is the objective toward which the machinery and equipment amendment is directed.

Mr. AIKEN. Could not a company in my State establish a branch in Gloversville, N.Y., and obtain low-cost money for that purpose?

Mr. JAVITS. It could only if that represented no detriment of any substantial nature to the location in the Senator's own State.

Mr. AIKEN. Could any expansion of the industry be transferred to the branch plant?

Mr. JAVITS. Further expansion could be transferred to the branch plant, provided it did not result detrimentally to the original location and, if my amendment shall be adopted, provided that no machinery or equipment is involved in the deal.

Mr. AIKEN. Can the Senator from New York point out how the bill would permit a manufacturing concern in New York to establish a branch plant in Vermont and obtain a low-cost loan?

Mr. JAVITS. That would entirely depend on Vermont having any areas which would be eligible for redevelopment under the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. But the Senator from New York knows—or perhaps he does not know—that under the bill no area in Vermont could possibly qualify for benefits, and probably never could qualify for benefits.

Mr. JAVITS. There are two tests in the bill. I will check to determine whether any community in Vermont qualifies.

Mr. AIKEN. There would be none, according to the book.

Mr. JAVITS. If no community in Vermont qualifies, then the purpose of the bill would not be served by extending the program to Vermont. After all, some argument can be made for aid to agriculture, which extensively helps other States; it could be made for aid to dependent children; and aid in almost any category of welfare we could conceive of.

If Vermont is that prosperous—and I am happy it is—it is paying out far more than it is receiving. My colleague from New York [Mr. KEATING] and I know how much more New York is paying out than it is receiving; but that is no reason why one should not support a program of such great economic breadth for the benefit of the entire country.

Mr. AIKEN. Should not the per capita income of a State enter into the aid to be given?

Mr. JAVITS. Not the per capita income of the State, but the per capita income of the particular communities encompassed. There is $100 million, leaving out community facilities, subject to the test of State percentages of unemployment, and covering three periods of time which are set forth in the bill.

Then there is the other test of unusually low income when compared with the average national income in particular communities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. AIKEN. That may be so, but it appears to me that the Jolly Roger is flying at the masthead of the bill.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, at this time I yield 5 minutes in favor of the amendment to my colleague from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, I heartily support the Javits amendment, and I hope Senators have read the debate on this amendment or, before they vote, will read the very carefully worded individual views of my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. JAVITS]. In this statement, he develops the several key arguments against permitting the use of area redevelopment funds for the purchase of equipment and machinery.

Last year, as many Senators will remember, this language was voted on, together with the amendment on pirating offered by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH]. Although when joined together the two were defeated by approximately 20 votes, I hope that this year, in light of the time we have had to study this proposal, and voting individually on this amendment, that it will be possible for us to muster enough votes to bring about its adoption.

My colleague from New York has made an important and convincing case for his point that aid for machinery and equipment affords an unfair competitive advantage to the firms which receive the aid, vis-a-vis competitors in their own industries.

In fact, under certain conditions, the lure of loans for machinery and equipment, could, undermine the well worded antipirating provisions contained in Senate bill 1. As the bill now reads, an area can receive loans only for new plants and for new branch plants. This important and necessary language was devised in order to prevent industrial raiding. It was developed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. MUSKIE] and is intended to prevent the enticement of industries away from the healthy areas—of which, I must confess, there are many in New York State, just as there are many in the States represented by other Members of the Senate here at this moment.

Certainly we do not want to create new depressed areas, in our efforts to help areas which now are in distress. If loans for machinery and equipment are available, this presents a real temptation to firms which now have obsolete equipment. They could establish plants in depressed areas, using Federal funds to buy all new machinery, and then could close their home plants or scale to a minimum their operations there. I think it would be much better if we concentrated area redevelopment assistance on permanent facilities, which are inherently a part of the distressed area and which will remain there permanently to contribute to the economy of the area.

Mr. President, I want at this time to make a point which thus far has been passed over rather lightly. I refer to the fact that the total amount authorized under Senate bill 1 is a little less than $400 million for 3 years. Thus, a good argument can be made for limiting the type of assistance given to any single area or any single firm. If we gave too much aid to one firm or one area, that would have the effect of limiting the total national impact of Senate bill 1, which establishes or at least seeks to establish a truly national program.

It is important that we have a clear understanding of just what the overall impact of Senate bill 1 will be. The total amount—$389 million—for 3 years, as authorized under this bill—is less than the cost of two Forrestal-class aircraft carriers. When this amount of capital is spread throughout the country, it certainly will not provide very large amounts of assistance to any single distressed area.

In a sense, this is a pilot program. For this reason, I was pleased that the so-called Bush amendment was accepted yesterday to terminate this program at a given date, in order that Congress may again evaluate it.

I think my colleague from New York [Mr. JAVITS] has made an extremely strong case for this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. KEATING. May I have 1 more minute?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield an additional minute to my colleague.

Mr. KEATING. I thank my colleague.

Mr. President, this amendment is important to healthy areas, such as New York State. Fortunately, most of our States are presently in a generally good state of economic health. Unless we adopt the amendment, there will be a real danger that the purposes of this bill will be violated and undermined by giving an unfair competitive advantage to the areas eligible for receiving area redevelopment assistance.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for a question?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I ask the question for purposes of information: Does not the condition stated in the bill—namely that the money shall not be loaned or granted, if in doing so industries may be moved, thus causing substantial unemployment in the area from which the movement is made—apply equally to the moneys provided for the purchase of machinery and equipment?

Mr. JAVITS. Yes, it does. The only difficulty is—and I am sure the Senator from Ohio will remember this, if he listened to what I said before, for I, myself, made that point—that the antipirating provisions are now excellent, although they were not before; but the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. MUSKIE] have really tightened them up. However, they deal with existing businesses and branches and affiliates of existing businesses which we would have objection to losing; and in such case the antipirating provision is effective.

But I am talking about new businesses, which constantly are being created. They are needed in every so-called under par area, in order to help put it on an equal basis, so it can compete with New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Michigan, and other States. But if we permit this money to be used for the purchase of machinery and equipment, we shall be giving a competitive advantage beyond the normal basis. That is the argument I make, and therefore I believe that provision should be stricken from the bill.

I have just come across a point which may be of interest to other Senators—namely, that private business is not the only source of funds for machinery and equipment. I have already referred to this fact, which provides a safety valve, because some machinery manufacturers will also have to pass on the question of whether the new plants placed in these areas are economic enterprises. But I find that, in addition, the Small Business Administration has much money to loan for equipment and machinery. That, too, is an independent agency. Of course, in making legislative provisions, we constantly have a tendency to duplicate. For example, I am greatly concerned about the provisions of the bill for rural development, because we already have in the Department of Agriculture an excellent rural development program which could well be buttressed with $5 million, instead of providing $100 million for such a purpose in connection with this bill. That program in the Department of Agriculture has been very widely hailed. For instance, the report states:

Since the inception of SBA in 1953, over $955 million in loans have been approved in the business loan program. Of this amount, $106,523,000 was authorized to be used for financing machinery and equipment.

There, too, we have an economic sanction; and that agency has had a large amount of experience in regard to the likelihood of success of a small business enterprise which, with any kind of chance for success, will be loaned such funds for the purchase of machinery and equipment.

But if we deal with that matter in this measure, we shall be giving more than the normal advantages to an area which is trying to attract business in a competitive way—for instance, as regards tax indulgence, training help, constructing a building—and now we would be giving it an opportunity to have a plant built and completely equipped. I think that would be most unfair to many of the States which constantly have to compete for business. For instance, in New York we, too, need 2500 jobs, every week, according to President Kennedy's figure; and every week Ohio and other States need new jobs, also, as do the areas which are in distress. I simply do not like to have the dice loaded against our States.

Mr. President, let me ask the Chair to advise me when I have used all but 3 minutes of the time available to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield again?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Let us assume that in New York there is a plant that is not located in a substandard area; and let us assume that the managers of the plant learn that they can obtain funds for the purchase of machinery and equipment if they locate the plant in a substandard area, but that they cannot obtain such funds for the plant which is located in New York. Would the provision relating to a substantial impact on employment be of any help to New York State in the matter?

Mr. JAVITS. Yes, it would, to the extent that it would prevent the company from moving out of New York or moving any important part of its operations out of New York. But if the company were going to expand into the production of a new product, and wanted to establish a new factory for it, the provision would not stop it. In fact, the company would be given a special inducement to locate elsewhere than in New York.

The Senator from Ohio is helping me greatly, because this situation is precisely what we are shooting at. We industrial States are going to pay for the bill, and we are going to underwrite it. Let us assume most of us are willing to do it because a real problem is presented; but we are not willing to do it at the cost of creating unfair competition as between us and other States.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Senator has cited the example of a company in New York. It could not get aid if it was found that substantial unemployment would be created if the company moved out.

Mr. JAVITS. That is correct.

Mr. LAUSCHE. But it could establish another branch of the company in another State, open up a whole new business, and borrow money for machinery and equipment, which it could not borrow if it remained in New York. Is that correct?

Mr. JAVITS. That is precisely correct.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BUSH. In the original text of the bill, in reference to the matter under discussion, it stated, in parentheses: "including in exceptional cases machinery and equipment."

That language was changed in the bill as now before the Senate, but the parentheses remain, enclosing the phrase "including machinery and equipment in cases of demonstrated need."

My question to the Senator is, Why were the parentheses included in the first place, and why are they still there?

Mr. JAVITS. They are still there as a matter of form only. The parentheses are not needed, because demonstrated need is the test. The parentheses were there because of the original language "exceptional circumstance" or "exceptional need." Now the parentheses are no longer needed, but they have been carried over in order to make the grammar appear as if there is a difference; but there is no difference.

Mr. BUSH. The Senator is very generous to the author of the bill; but my impression is that the parentheses are there as an element of doubt. In other words, they do not believe it, and put the language in parentheses and closed it off from the rest of the language, hoping they might get away with it. Does the Senator from New York think there is any ground for that suspicion?

Mr. JAVITS. The Senator from Connecticut has had exceedingly wide experience. I certainly know he may be right and I may be wrong. May I say, for that reason, that the language can easily be stricken, and it would not in any way interfere with the organic content of the bill if it is stricken.

Mr. BUSH. I am certainly supporting the Senator in his amendment, as he knew I was.

I ask the Senator if it is or is not very loose language to talk about demonstrated need. How do we distinguish need on the basis of its being a demonstrated need? I do not understand it. I would not want to have the responsibility of determining it. In other words, if it is proper to include machinery and equipment for investment under this bill, it ought to be stated. If it is not, it ought to be stricken, as the Senator proposes to strike it. It is difficult to interpret words like "substantially," "substantial unemployment," and "demonstrated need." To me, that kind of language does not belong in legislation. Either money is going to be lent for a certain purpose, or it is not. Does the Senator think that is a valid statement?

Mr. JAVITS. Yes. I again want to give credit to the Senator for the adoption of the antipirating provision, which has the interest of Senators coming from industrial States like New York, Connecticut, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. Let me also point out I am trying to "button up" the one element which still remains to be taken care of, and that is normal competition, which cannot be covered by the antipirating provision. I point out that my position absolutely relies upon the achievement the Senator from Connecticut has already been successful in obtaining by way of the antipirating provision.

Mr. BUSH. I should like to compliment the Senator from New York for his very fine minority views as stated in the report, in which he makes a classic case for his amendment. I compliment him on the very able presentation of the amendment this morning.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, if the Senator has time, will he yield to me?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Senator has referred to the substantial impact on employment in the movement of a plant. May I ask—and this is asked from a philosophical standpoint—what right does the Federal Government have to lend or to grant or to give its money to one State, the money to be used to take jobs away from another State?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I shall not press the question. I shall develop it later.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the distinguished minority leader yield me 5 minutes on the bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Does the Senator follow what I have in mind?

Mr. JAVITS. I do.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Why is it right to take a small number of jobs—

Mr. JAVITS. Even a small number of jobs.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Yes, but not a large number of jobs, away from a State? If a job is taken away from a State, how is there a difference, except in degree, in the moral quality of the taking?

Mr. JAVITS. There are two answers to the question. One is the antipirating provision is even better than the Senator has indicated, because it deals not only with a substantial detriment—which is what the Senator from Ohio is speaking of—but deals with merely transferring jobs from one community to another. So we assume, if there was a transfer of jobs there would be a substantial detriment.

I shall pursue this matter in a discussion with the Senator handling the bill. I wish to make it very clear for the RECORD that the antipirating provision includes not only the case of substantial detriment but a loss of jobs as the Senator has pointed out.

The second answer is the obvious one, which affects us in everything we do—namely, the greatest good for the greatest number. Some States are under par, whether it be in natural resources, educational facilities, or economic development. Most of us want to help them, but not at the cost of putting them in a better position than we are in an opportunity to compete for new business and jobs, which the country urgently needs.

It is for that purpose that I offer the amendment.

I wish to state to the minority leader that I have concluded the presentation of my case for the amendment, with the most gracious aid of my colleagues.

I wish to emphasize the point made by my colleague from New York [Mr. KEATING] that the money provided under the bill is inadequate, so why load it down with another requirement that loans be made for machinery and equipment, instead of spreading it as far as that can go, even though it is a pilot plan.

I should like to ask the minority leader whether any time is to be taken in opposition to the amendment, or whether we are ready to vote.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I should like to ask the acting majority leader [Mr. HUMPHREY] whether the chairman intends to oppose the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes; the committee intends to oppose the amendment. I understand the same amendment was considered in committee, and voted down.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] went to the Finance Committee. If the proponents of the amendment have concluded their argument, I suggest we might have a quorum call. In the meantime I shall discuss the matter with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], because I know he wishes to express some views on the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. I know he does.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN] asked me yesterday for about 5 minutes to discuss a matter. I wonder if he is ready to do so at this time.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes, if it is convenient at this time. I merely wanted to state my position on the pending bill before it came to a final vote.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why not do it now?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Very well.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield 5 minutes on the bill to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, my first inclination was to support this bill. Its alleged purpose has an appeal to all of us. That purpose, I understand, is to relieve distressed areas which may exist in some sections of our country.

At first thought, this may seem to be a worthy objective for the Federal Government to undertake by legislation. Upon second thought I wonder whether it is the function of the Government, by the expenditure of public funds, through loans and grants, in an area or in many areas in the country, to undertake the making of investments for the sole purpose of resuscitating or strengthening the economy in a particular locality.

If so, Mr. President, we are now launching a gigantic project, one of no small magnitude. I cannot give my consent to such an undertaking. I foresee that the minute this is done, many areas which now do not contemplate such action will conclude that if it is a proper function of the Government to help finance industry in any section or any area by the expenditure of public funds from the U.S. Treasury to help build the economy in that area, in one section or in one community, then that responsibility devolves upon the Government to give equal aid in every area, in every section and community. The next step will be to have the Federal Government take the full responsibility for providing a prosperous economy everywhere throughout the land.

I cannot support it, Mr. President, for in my judgment that just should not be done.

I wish to mention some things in the bill which I could not support even if I favored the program.

The bill has been amended now to remove one of the objectionable features, which was the setting up of an exclusively independent new agency with all the powers the measure contains vested in an administrator. However, Mr. President, the powers which were vested in the Administrator under the terms of the bill originally are now to be vested in the Secretary of Commerce as the bill has been amended. Not only will the Secretary of Commerce be endowed with broad authority to determine the areas which will receive assistance under the bill, Mr. President, but also he will control to an alarming degree how much and upon what terms such assistance will be given.

For instance, there is no limit placed on the amount of Federal loans or grants that the Secretary of Commerce can make to any one project. The language of section 8(b) implies that in the case of public facilities, he is authorized to make both loans and grants to a single project. Further, section 8(b)(2) indicates that the local governments need contribute nothing in the case of constructing public facilities. Thus the Federal Government conceivably could be required to foot the entire cost of the project.

Mr. President, if we ever begin permitting the Government to enter one area, one community, and foot the entire cost of a project, then we shall have every community in the country appealing to the Federal Government for the same treatment.

With respect to loans to private industries under section 6 of the bill, the Secretary's discretion is also shockingly extensive. To illustrate, section 6(b)(7) limits such loans to a term of not exceeding 25 years, but the Secretary of Commerce may under section 12(5) extend such loans for an additional 10 years. He is given similar authority with respect to loans for construction of public facilities. The Secretary of Commerce is given discretion to extend the latter from 40 to 50 years.

Mr. President, let us make no mistake about this. This proposal is not for temporary legislation. It is for a permanent program for 50 years. It could well take that long for the program to be executed and consummated under the terms of this measure.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield, if I have any time remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CAPEHART. I am sure the Senator knows that under the terms of the bill the Secretary of Commerce could lend all of the money to one concern.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have so intimidated.

Mr. CAPEHART. I simply wish to emphasize it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is true.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Secretary could lend all of the money to one concern.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am stating what I believe to be the proposal. This is not a measure to provide temporary relief in a distressed area or in distressed areas. This is to be a permanent program of the Government, to operate in this field from now until the end of the next half century, under the terms of the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. We brought out yesterday in the colloquy the fact that the Small Business Administration can do everything provided under the terms of the bill, and in addition the Small Business Administration can lend money for working capital.

There is an amendment pending which would strike out of the bill the provision with regard to machinery and equipment, yet the Small Business Administration can make loans up to 100 percent on machinery and equipment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I think the bill in some respects, at least, would provide a duplication of authority now in existence.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Small Business Administration can do everything for industry and business that the bill would permit, and in addition can make loans for working capital and can make loans on machinery and equipment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I believe that is true. I have not examined the law carefully enough to be sure, but I believe the bill would provide a duplication of authority in certain areas, and it encompasses an extension of powers which would make the program permanent for 50 years.

Mr. CAPEHART. We placed in the RECORD yesterday the exact language with respect to the Small Business Administration, which permits such to be done.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. President, section 6(b)(9)(D) and section 7(d) gives the Secretary of Commerce authority to subordinate the Federal Government's security on loans. This, in effect, makes the Government a second mortgagee on all projects in which it would participate under the bill. What is worse, Mr. President, if the Secretary so desires he can in his discretion defer any payments on the indebtedness to the Federal Government until such time as all "other loans made in connection with such project and in accordance with this section have been repaid in full."

The powers granted to the Secretary of Commerce in section 12(4) are likewise exceedingly broad. For example, he may "under regulations prescribed by him, assign or at public or private sale, or otherwise dispose of for cash or credit, in his discretion and upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as he shall determine to be reasonable, any evidence of debt, contract, claim, personal property, or security assigned to or held by him in connection with the payment of loans made under this act."

I emphasize the following words: "and collect or compromise all obligations assigned to or held by him in connection with the payment of such loans until such time as such obligations may be referred to the Attorney General for suit or collection."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, may I have an additional 2 minutes?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield 2 minutes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is apparent that the proposed legislation would repose unconscionably wide and extensive powers in the Secretary. It would virtually make him dictator over the various programs prescribed in the bill.

It is also my firm conviction that in many respects the provisions of the bill would duplicate Federal enactments already on the statute books. For example, we now have functioning loan programs for private industry under the Small Business Act and the Small Business Investment Act of 1958. Loans for public facilities are presently being made by the Community Facilities Administration within the Housing and Home Finance Agency. So as the need arises to adapt these existing programs to the needs of our depressed areas, it seems to me that the better method would be to amend these statutes rather than to create a completely new and unnecessary administrative agency which will surely be done—another agency within the Department of Commerce.

The bill is also objectionable to me because its major financing will be not through annual appropriations from the Congress, but through borrowing by the Administrator from the Treasury Department. This is the familiar method of back-door financing that frustrates an annual review of the legislation's effectiveness by the Congress. Indeed, the whole flavor and essence of the bill smacks of a desire to get the control of the essential elements of the programs away from Congress and into the head of an executive agency. This, I believe, is completely uncalled for. I do not believe the Congress should abdicate its responsibility and duty to make or, in its judgment, to reject annual appropriations for this program.

Finally, I noted with interest the very candid remarks of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] last week when he stated that—

This measure will not reduce this recession * * *. S. 1 is not an antirecession measure (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Mar. 9, p. 3376, col. 3).

I agree with him.

S. 1 is not a temporary measure designed to lessen the effect of the current recession. Let no one regard it as such. It is the commencement of a permanent program. For 50 years the bill envisions 40-year loans that may be extended for 10 years, making a half century. Once the bill is passed and the program is inaugurated, it will grow and grow, and more and more communities and businesses will seek the favors that the bill bestows. Either the requests of other communities will have to be granted, or rank discrimination will be imposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, how much additional time does the Senator from Arkansas desire?

Mr. McCLELLAN. One minute.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield 2 additional minutes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not want to see American citizen taxpayers saddled with this uneconomical, extravagant, and unnecessary burden.

I cannot support a bill of the magnitude and consequences entailed by this measure. It is with regret that I decide I cannot do so, but the consequences I foresee preclude me from giving it my endorsement and vote.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am very happy to yield if I have any time remaining.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield 2 additional minutes to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Senator from Arkansas mentioned the existence of the Small Business Administration Act, and the Community Facilities Act, which is embodied in the Housing Administration's functions, and he stated that the bill would pile further lending and giving programs on top of these other acts.

May I have the view of the Senator from Arkansas on this question: Congress passed the Small Business Administration Act, which provides liberal authority to make loans for the construction of buildings and the purchase of machinery to be located wherever the borrower determines to place his business. The Community Facilities Act, in order to stimulate development in communities, provides money to be loaned for the installation of gas lines, water lines, sidewalks, powerplants, and so forth.

The Rural Electrification Administration also lends money to provide plants for the distribution or the generation of electricity.

Efforts were made through those several means to induce businesses to settle in what are supposed to be rural communities and undeveloped communities, but such efforts failed.

By the terms of the bill, Congress, through legislative declaration, would attempt to convert what are unacceptable areas for the establishment of a business into areas that supposedly would be acceptable.

I now ask my question. Through the appropriation of money can Congress provide buildings in an area close to a supply of raw material and close to the supply of the consuming public, and thus create out of an undesirable area one that is desirable from the standpoint of maintenance of good Government, reasonable taxes, and pleasant surroundings?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not believe Congress can do so without incurring a continuous heavy subsidy. I believe the bill would ultimately lead to such result.

I point out another weakness in the bill. If we should establish a plant or project to bring economic life into a community, we would have provided all the money that can be borrowed, and there would be no working capital remaining. There is not even a requirement that sufficient working capital be shown to be available for the operation of the project, plant or factory after it has been built.

Mr. LAUSCHE. Mr. President, may the Senator from Arkansas have an additional 3 minutes?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, before we yield additional time, how much time remains to our side on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One hundred and sixty-eight minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. LAUSCHE. The Senator from Arkansas was the chairman of the McClellan investigating committee. Six or seven years ago, while I was Governor of Ohio, a strike took place in 5 States, including Ohio. The strike was in progress for a number of weeks.

The Governor of Ohio received a call from a top echelon official of another State, suggesting that a shutout was in existence, and that shutout unemployment compensation ought to be paid. The knowledge of the Governor of Ohio concerning the facts was in complete disagreement with that recitation. Ohio did not award unemployment compensation, because there was in existence a voluntary work stoppage. The State from which the call came did make an award of unemployment compensation. Subsequently, the courts of that State ruled the award invalid. I respectfully submit that the provisions of this bill regardless of how much money is spent will not generally operate as an inducement for stable business to settle in such surroundings.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am not, I must confess, an astute businessman, but I believe that anyone with any judgment at all would take into consideration that factor in establishing a business in any place. Particularly is that true today. I should like to point out that the businesses that may be established by the use of loans and grants under this bill will have to bring in raw materials, and meet all the other expenses connected with such operation just as is done in other areas where the same product is manufactured. They must still meet the competition in marketing their product. Otherwise, they cannot survive. I can well understand that a man might decide to set up a business and for that purpose get a temporary loan from a bank for a small amount and then get a grant, 65 percent of it from the Government, and put in very little capital of his own. When he does that, he is in business. Perhaps he will be a success. If he is not, he has had his chance without any loss of consequence, and the taxpayers have footed the bill.

Mr. LAUSCHE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, this is bad legislation.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE NATIONAL FARMERS' UNION

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes. A very important convention is taking place in our Capital City. It is the 1961 convention of the National Farmers' Union, which opened on Monday, March 13, at the departmental auditorium. We welcome this great farm organization. It represents the finest traditions and principles of our democracy.

Last evening, the Secretary of Agriculture addressed the delegates. He delivered a splendid and informative address on the agricultural policy of the Kennedy administration. He is doing a good job in his new responsibility as the Secretary of Agriculture.

Other members of the administration have spoken to the assembled delegates. Mr. Chester Bowles, Under Secretary of State, addressed the delegates on Tuesday. He made a remarkable address on American foreign policy and revealed some of the new approaches in our foreign policy as developed by the Kennedy administration.

This morning the delegates were addressed by Mr. John A. Baker, Director of Agricultural Credit Services. As we know, one of the needs of agriculture is an improved and expanded farm credit structure. I am happy to call to the attention of the Senate that Mr. Baker has announced plans for broader and a much improved farm credit program, particularly in the Farmers Home Administration. Already, the Department has taken emergency action to release additional credit to our family farmers.

This afternoon Mr. Kenneth Holum, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, will address the delegates. Mr. Holum comes from South Dakota. He is a farmer and well acquainted with the needs of our family farmers. He vigorously supports the public power program which is so vital to many of our Western States. The Presiding Officer [Mr. METCALF] comes from a State where some of the great electrical energy resources of the Nation are found and developed.

On Thursday the delegates will hear Mr. George McGovern, director of the food for peace program. On Friday Mr. Arthur Goldberg, Secretary of Labor, will address the convention.

Finally, the concluding session will be addressed by Mr. David Brinkley, NBC news commentator. I do not know what happened to Mr. Huntley, but at least Mr. Brinkley will speak to the delegates.

I wish to take this opportunity to commend Mr. McGovern on his outstanding work as director of the food for peace program, particularly for the proposals he has made for long-term sales of food under a food for peace program. Soon the administration will propose a much expanded program. Our food reserves can and will be converted into a powerful ally to our overall foreign policy.

I wish to salute Mr. Patton, the national president of the Farmers Union, and to commend him for his outstanding leadership, for our family farmers and, indeed, for all of America. I am very proud that at this convention some 300 members of the Minnesota Farmers Union are in attendance. We are very pleased with the splendid record of our Farmers Union in Minnesota. The State president, Mr. Edwin Christensen, of the Minnesota Farmers Union, is in Washington attending the convention. The Minnesotans, coming from Farmers Union locals throughout the State, are here because of their desire to participate in the proceedings of the convention and because they wish to see the Nation's Capital. I commend to all Senators in the deliberations of this very important convention. The program of the Farmers Union is good for America.

Mr. President, I observe that the Senator from Illinois has come to the floor and that he wishes to reply to some of the comments which have been made by the opposition to the area redevelopment bill.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I wish to address myself primarily to the amendment now before the Senate; namely, the amendment of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS] to strike from the bill the provision which permits, in loans on machinery and equipment in cases of demonstrated need. The Senator from New York wishes to eliminate that provision completely, and, I take it, on two grounds.

First, he says it is not necessary, because private credit will meet the need for such machinery; and second, that this would hurt industrial States such as New York. Let me point out there is a feature in the bill which seems to have been neglected in the whole debate. I tried to point this out yesterday. It is in the RECORD, but apparently has escaped attention. On page 47, in section 6(b)(4), will be found this proviso:

No such assistance shall be extended hereunder unless the financial assistance applied for is not otherwise available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on reasonable terms.

This means that if a business can obtain loans on machinery and equipment for, say, 5 years' duration on reasonable terms, no loan under the area redevelopment bill can be made to that business firm. So we hope that private credit facilities will be adequate to provide funds for machinery and equipment to new business firms or to business firms which wish to expand. We simply say that if private funds are not available, and if the business and the local redevelopment committees are able to demonstrate that the private firm needs a loan on machinery and equipment, the loan could be permitted to be made under the act. It is not mandatory to make such a loan; in fact, there are a series of hurdles which the applicant must be able to pass. He must prove that the loan is not available from private sources, and then must prove that there is a demonstrated need for it.

It is anticipated that the majority of the loans will be exclusively for land and buildings, without an allowance for machinery and equipment; but we do not wish to include an absolute prohibition of such loans which the Senator from New York would now fasten upon the bill.

I would like to point out that land and buildings normally do not comprise much more than 25 percent of the capital cost of a manufacturing enterprise. We are limiting the maximum percentage of the loan which can be made by the Area Redevelopment Administration to 65 percent of the cost; so the maximum would be approximately 65 percent of 25 percent, or roughly 16 percent of the total cost. In addition to this, the actual benefit which the bill provides is only a lower rate of interest; namely, a probable rate of around 4¼ percent, as compared with a commercial rate of something over 6 percent. So the inducement which would be customarily held out would be a 2-percent annual saving upon one-sixth of the capital cost—a 2-percent economy on one-sixth of the capital charge.

This is far from being the hydra-headed monster which some previous speakers have said it to be. On the contrary it is an extremely modest proposal. There may be certain cases in hard-pressed communities where this will not be a sufficient inducement to new industry; therefore, we do not wish to rule out completely the possibility of loans for machinery and equipment. The Senator from New York would completely eliminate any possibility of doing this.

I know the Senator from New York is a fine-spirited man. He has been a sincere supporter of the bill. Not only has he been a sponsor of the bill, but yesterday I think he was one of the Republicans who voted against the crucial Robertson amendment. I express my indebtedness to the Senator from New York for that vote, and say that it was really the acid test, which he passed, in my judgment, with high credit, as he does virtually every test which is imposed upon him in the Senate.

Now, concerning his statement that this provision in the bill would cripple New York and—that it might be used to draw industry away from New York—I remind him that the bill contains a very stringent provision against pirating, a provision which I was very glad to have included. So far as growth of our economy is concerned, we want New York, as well as other areas, to share in the growth.

This morning, I was in the Committee on Finance and vigorously supported the position of some of the large industrial States, of which my State of Illinois is not one, but of which New York is one, to try to have a larger burden of the cyclical unemployment borne by the Nation as a whole, instead of being thrown upon the employers of a particular State which has been hard hit by unemployment. New York is one of the States which has been hard hit. So I do not think I need say anything more about my desire to protect the employers and the people of the State of New York.

However, I call attention to the fact that New York has a number of so-called depressed areas of high and persistent unemployment. They are listed on page 68 of the report of the committee. I shall read them:

Amsterdam, where there is 14 percent unemployment.

Auburn, which has 9 percent unemployment.

Gloversville, the center of the glove industry, has 15 percent unemployment.

Jamestown-Dunkirk, with 5.8 percent unemployment.

In the northern New York area, the area of Ogdensburg-Massena-Malone has 14 percent unemployment; and Plattsburg, on Lake George, has more than 8 percent unemployment.

So New York would be as much in need for machinery and equipment loans as any other State in the Union. I do not think we should adopt a parochial point of view on this matter. In general, the Senator from New York does not adopt a parochial point of view.

But in the cases of those communities which are hard pressed, if we confine ourselves in all instances purely to lower interest rate loans on buildings and land, we may not have enough of an inducement to help rebuild the economy of the area. If adequate private capital is not available, and if the need for capital can be demonstrated, then I do not believe we should foreclose completely the possibility of helping those people with loans for machinery and equipment.

Moreover, I am a little puzzled by the criticisms which come from the other side of the aisle, and in some instances from this side of the aisle, about the bill.

The Senator from New York is saying that we should not make loans for machinery and equipment. Last night the Senator from Indiana said we were not lending enough, and that we should provide working capital as well as fixed capital. I think working capital should be provided by the commercial banking system. The advances for raw materials and for payrolls should be met by private business, out of the resources of the individual enterprises, and out of the local banks.

I am very happy to see entering the Chamber the two distinguished Senators from West Virginia, who have been stalwarts in connection with this matter. I say frankly—as all of us know—that West Virginia is one of the States which has been most severely hit. If we rule out the possibility of the making of loans for the purchase of machinery and equipment, it will be much more difficult to get new industries into those areas, and it will be harder to get new industries into eastern Kentucky, eastern Tennessee, southwest Pennsylvania, southern Illinois, northern Michigan, northern Minnesota, and, I may say, also the depressed areas of upper New York State.

So, Mr. President, I hope very much the amendment of the Senator from New York will be rejected.

Possibly we may be able to make adjustments, in conference; but I do not think this is the time to make such adjustments. I think yesterday I demonstrated conclusively that I was in a most cooperative mood; I accepted various amendments, both because I felt the weight of the votes was against me, and also because of a desire to show that I was conciliatory.

But, Mr. President, much as I like to demonstrate my liking for the Senator from New York, I frankly state that I cannot consent to "selling out" the hard-pressed areas.

I see across the aisle from me the genial senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. I would remind him that the cutover regions in northern Wisconsin are also in trouble.

Mr. President, I think that is about all I wish to say on this issue.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from New York will be rejected.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself the remainder of the time available to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. METCALF in the chair). The Senator from New York is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I should like to reply to two points which have been made by the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

First of all, I assure him that these comments are not to be construed as in any way a reflection on our respect for each other, which will continue to survive, regardless of the result of the vote taken on this amendment. Of course, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The Senator from Illinois spoke of the possibility that the provisions of the amendment will be used for the purchase of machinery and equipment, "except in rare cases"—those were his words. But I point out that a change was made from the original draft of the bill. Originally the draft of the bill used the words "exceptional cases"; but that was changed so as to use the words "except in rare cases." But, Mr. President, I say that the words "except in rare cases of demonstrated need" are much less stringent than the words "exceptional cases."

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am perfectly willing to revert to the original language, "exceptional cases," if the Senator from New York will agree to withdraw the amendment and will obtain consent of the Senate to have that change made.

Mr. JAVITS. I would say that would not go to meet the full objection. But I was making that point as bearing upon the way Members should vote on this amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If we revert to the original language of "exceptional cases," and if we eliminate the words "of demonstrated need," would the Senator from New York then be willing to accept the change and to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. JAVITS. No; I have already made that clear.

Mr. DOUGLAS. In other words, the Senator from New York wants a dictated agreement.

Mr. JAVITS. No, Mr. President; I am sorry that the Senator from Illinois is not being quite just to me. I was alluding to the fact that it is claimed that one of the arguments in favor of defeating my amendment is that it will be used only rarely; and the Senator from Illinois himself used, in referring to that point, the words "in rare cases."

I have pointed out that it has been made easier, rather than more difficult, although that is by no means the total answer.

The Senator from Illinois also said we may not have enough inducement for building up or redeveloping an area. I say there is too much inducement. That is the whole nubbin of my argument. There would be more inducement than would constitute fair competition as between depressed areas and States such as my own.

Finally, the Senator from Illinois said aid is available under this amendment when it is not available from other sources—from Government sources, such as the Small Business Administration, or from private sources, such as machinery and equipment suppliers. But I say that is a source we should not give up. The success of a project may depend upon whether credit is available on reasonable terms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time available to the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 2 minutes on the bill.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if credit on reasonable terms is not available, then I say that by turning over to the local community the right to finance it, nonetheless, out of credit available under this bill, we shall be depriving ourselves of a piece of insurance which represents the independent judgment of the Small Business Administration or of the private supplier; and I do not think we should do that.

Mr. President, that is my whole argument in behalf of the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the Senator from New York.

Mr. President, I support the amendment of the Senator from New York. It must be used for land and facilities for the building of plants only.

The use of the words "exceptional cases," as directed to machinery and equipment, is to my mind vague and indefinite. That provision might be used to favor one section of the country over another, or even to favor one section of a State over another, by permitting a more generous allocation or a more varied kind of aid to a favored section.

In view of the fact that a number of communities have an unfortunate labor surplus, I think the purpose of the bill can better be accomplished, and certainly it would be more simple to administer, if we confined ourselves to the land and facilities provision.

Therefore, as I have stated, I am very happy to support the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I should like to make a final point: If Senators really want to make the bill go as far as it can, to aid in restoring these communities to a normal competitive situation, then my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this time we may have a quorum call, without charging to either side the time required for the quorum call.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does the Senator from New York yield back the remainder of the time available to him?

Mr. JAVITS. No more time is available to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Let the Chair inquire whether the Senator from Illinois will yield back the remainder of the time available to him.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President—

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from West Virginia wishes to speak at this time. I shall be glad to yield to him, if the Senator from New York will withdraw his request for the time being.

Mr. JAVITS. Of course.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then, Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from West Virginia whatever time he may wish to have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I am grateful to the Senator from New York for temporarily withholding his suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

I do not desire to make a formal speech. But with the manager of the bill, the Senator from Illinois, now present, and with the Senator from New York, the author of the amendment, also present on the floor, I say to them and to my other colleagues that insofar as West Virginia is concerned, and I believe that in this matter my colleague from West Virginia [Senator BYRD], and I are joined—more than a mere building would be needed in many instances.

The structure itself may not provide the answer. It is very reasonable to expect that there could well be, on merit, an application which would require the loan of funds necessary to provide machinery. In the State of West Virginia this problem is something that concerns us very much. There are already too many empty buildings.

The rehabilitation of an old building or the construction of a new one will provide employment in the construction stage—but it takes more than a structure to create new permanent job opportunities. It is only when there is machinery in place and functioning that there is production—and it is production and marketing that brings manpower into action, sustains payrolls, and makes for economic growth.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes, I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I think the Senator has sufficient time, or, if he does not, time may be yielded to him on the bill. I do not wish to use any of the time he may find necessary to take.

However, it seems to me, in fairness to the argument—and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] has been very kind in saying that I am friendly to the bill, which I am—this is a matter involving a narrower fulcrum than merely the question of lending money. It involves the question of lending money for machinery that might be available for other purposes. We are assuming the fact that the money that would be available, on reasonable terms, represents a penalty for us. The Small Business Administration, the banker, or other lender, can make the money available, and it should not be taken away from the money that will otherwise be made available under this bill. It should not be so used, even if it cannot come from anywhere else, because we defeat ourselves, and defeat those in West Virginia, from the economic viewpoint. The lenders can look at the purpose of the loan and say, "It is worth making a loan for machinery and equipment." It is not that the money is not available; the point is that the money will be available on reasonable terms, so I think we should leave it that way. Then there is the sanction of a banker or a Government official, who has looked at it from the economic point of view, and has said, "This loan is feasible. Let us lend the money for the machinery or equipment."

Mr. RANDOLPH. I understand the point made by my eminent colleague. I heard that argument in the days when loans were made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I hear that argument made when loans are administered through the Small Business Administration. Do not misunderstand me when I say I have heard that argument; but constantly we are told there are other avenues through which we may proceed to procure the necessary funds with which to do the job, let us say, of rehabilitating an industry.

I ask my colleague from New York now, if it is good in one agency and the lending ability is present in that agency to provide the funds, what is wrong with setting the opportunity in motion under this bill to provide funds in relation to machinery?

Mr. JAVITS. Again, the judgment of the Senator from West Virginia may be better than my own. I can only advance my best judgment. I say it is wrong because there are different criteria. The very criteria in the bill permit uneconomic loans for machinery and equipment, whereas the criteria in the Small Business Act provide for economic loans. So I say, surely, if we have to do it, be uneconomic in buildings or other facilities; but do not be uneconomic when it comes to machinery and equipment.

That is precisely my argument. It is why I have submitted the amendment. It is a business reason. I am not living in an abstract world: I have had experience in business, in service on boards, and so forth. There is a business reason for the amendment. There is a different criterion if the money is obtained somewhere else than if it is obtained under the bill.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will my colleague from West Virginia yield to me?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; I am delighted to yield.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I am sure my colleague joins me in stating that sources from which financial assistance might normally be expected certainly have not proved to be the whole answer to the problems of our own business firms in West Virginia.

The distinguished senior Senator from New York made reference to the Small Business Administration and to bankers and to others who might be willing, in some States at least, to provide financial assistance. He indicated that it would be good for those people to enter into the picture.

I should like, with my colleague's permission, and with the unanimous consent of the Senate, to present for the RECORD some letters that have been written to me by businessmen in West Virginia, which testify to the fact that long-term, low-interest capital simply is not available to our people in West Virginia.

I have in my hand a letter from Mr. Roswell H. Alt, president of the Petersburg Industrial Development Corp., Petersburg, W. Va., located in the congressional district which my able and distinguished senior colleague represented in the House of Representatives for so many years.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If I may, I interpose only to say that Grant County is one of the strongest Republican counties in the State, Petersburg being the county seat of the county. Its citizens of all political affiliations are generally enterprising and frugal.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I insert the letter in the RECORD with unanimous consent, but I want to read only one or two sentences. The president of the Petersburg Industrial Development Corp. says:

Again, we want to bring to your attention our conversation on the pressing and immediate need for long-term, low-interest-rate financing for prospective industry. From the dozens and dozens of proposals we have submitted to interested industrial companies, this seems to be our largest obstacle. The best industrial financing we can offer at present is our community participation in a Small Business Administration loan. Needless to say, under today's competition for industry, this is very inadequate due to length of term, interest rate, and other problems.

That has reference to the difficulty involved in attempting to get loans from the Small Business Administration.

I ask unanimous consent to have the letter printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PETERSBURG INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT
CORP.,

Petersburg, W. Va., February 10, 1961.

HON. ROBERT C. BYRD,
U.S. Senator from West Virginia,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BYRD: We want to express our appreciation to you for your interest in and your visit to our area in connection with the West Virginia unemployment situation and, in particular, your efforts in exploring the possibilities of improving the national forests in West Virginia. The improvement of the national forests, as we see this, not only affords immediate employment but also provides by far the largest gain for the future in increased recreational facilities, watershed control, water impoundments, reforestation, increased future timber yield, etc.

Again, we want to bring to your attention our conversation on the pressing and immediate need for long-term, low-interest-rate financing for prospective industry. From the dozens and dozens of proposals we have submitted to interested industrial companies, this seems to be our largest obstacle. The best industrial financing we can offer at present is our community participation in a Small Business Administration loan. Needless to say, under today's competition for industry, this is very inadequate due to the length of term, interest rate, and other problems. We earnestly solicit the efforts of you and your colleagues in the Congress to enact some type legislation to enable such communities as ours to offer long-term, low-interest-rate loans to prospective industry.

Thanking you, we are,

Very truly yours,

ROSSELL H. ALT, President.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I have in my hand a letter which I received from Mr. James Paul Geary, secretary-treasurer of the same corporation, in which he says:

The actual purpose of my writing is to reiterate statements made by me at said meeting with reference to the operating procedures of Small Business Administration. From personal knowledge, it takes approximately 6 months to 1 year from the time application is made to the closing of a loan.

I ask unanimous consent to have the letter printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PETERSBURG INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT CORP.,

Petersburg, W. Va., February 15, 1961.

Hon. ROBERT C. BYRD,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. BYRD: Your personal letter and acknowledgment of the meeting held in Petersburg, Grant County, W. Va., was appreciated, and I was particularly interested in your interest for the Forest Service. Frankly, a large appropriation for this Department would definitely benefit the surrounding area of the Monongahela National Forest.

The actual purpose of my writing is to reiterate statements made by me at said meeting with reference to the operating procedures of Small Business Administration. From personal knowledge, it takes approximately 6 months to 1 year from the time application is made to the closing of a loan. This time element does not necessarily injure local businesses that make application, but is a hindrance when and if Small Business Administration is needed for securing assistance to small businesses or industries that might desire to come into a community. Also, we have been faced with a tremendous problem of competitive interest rates, and, as you know, the 5, 5½, or 6 percent interest rates prohibit communities in West Virginia from competing with State programs such as Pennsylvania and North Carolina now have in effect.

I would like to suggest the possibility of creating a Federal agency specifically designed to assist States such as West Virginia in procuring loans for qualified industries with two principal factors underlying its operation: (1) Immediate action upon application; (2) low interest rates.

Perhaps this could be a temporary agency and the administration of same attached to the now existing Small Business Administration setup.

Very truly yours,

JAMES PAUL GEARY,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I should also like to enter into the RECORD a letter which has been made available to me, a letter written by the president of the Raleigh County Bank.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I point out that Raleigh is his home county.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Yes, it is my home county.

This letter is written by one of our most capable past Governors, the Honorable Okey L. Patteson, now president of that bank.

I think it would be worthwhile if I took the time of the Senate to read the entire context of the letter. I think this letter will be of particular interest to the author of the bill, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. It reads:

FEBRUARY 24, 1961.

Mr. CHARLES S. LEWIS, Jr.,
Beckley, W. Va.

DEAR MR. LEWIS: You have handed me a copy of Senator ROBERT C. BYRD's letter to you of February 10 with reference to depressed area legislation.

Unquestionably risk capital has for some time been a great need in the depressed areas of West Virginia. In my opinion the availability of low rate risk capital would be extremely beneficial to the present effort to aid our State generally and this area in particular. Our bank has had numerous applications for business loans that we were unable to accommodate. Our inability is explained in several ways:

First, we are strictly supervised by the State banking department and the Federal Reserve System. Both of these agencies are extremely critical of any loans that are not on a reasonably short term basis and are not adequately collateralized.

Secondly, because of the large number of depositors whose money we are using as trust funds we have to be able at all times to meet with their withdrawal demands.

Thirdly, approximately 50 percent of our deposits are on savings accounts or time certificates. These require payment by us of an interest rate of a minimum of 2 percent and a maximum of 3 percent. Patently, we cannot make loans at approximately the same rate we are paying for money and continue in business.

Fourthly, our loan limit by law for any one loan, either to any one person or corporation, is approximately $150,000, if we have it available. It would, therefore, be apparent that even the full amount of our loan capacity would be of no practical help to any sizable industry or business.

There are many other reasons that could be given for the bank's inability to meet the present need, but in the interest of brevity we mention only the above. But, from the above, I am thoroughly convinced of the great need for the availability of financial help to business and industry here.

Sincerely yours,

OKEY L. PATTESON,
President.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter to Mr. Lewis from Elmer L. Davis, executive vice president of the Beckley National Bank of Beckley, W. Va.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BECKLEY NATIONAL BANK,
Beckley, W. Va., February 14, 1961.

Mr. CHARLES S. LEWIS, Jr.,
Lewis Chevrolet Co.,
Beckley, W. Va.

DEAR MR. LEWIS: With reference to your memorandum requesting my opinion of the need for long-term, low-interest capital loans to interested persons seeking to locate in our great State, I am very pleased to pass along to you my thoughts in this connection.

I am very sure the need for long-term, low-interest capital in West Virginia would be desirable and attractive to any industry planning on locating or expanding their facilities. The availability of this type of financing, I am sure, would be an excellent talking point to anyone considering our State.

Banks are limited by regulations as to the type of loans that they are permitted to make as well as the size of the loan. Banks are, as a rule, conservative and are not in a position to extend loans that would be considered risk capital for expansion or new development. They also are limited to 10 percent of the capital and surplus of the individual banks. Our bank's loan limit is $150,000 by regulation.

I certainly believe, if an arrangement could be made by the Federal Government to make available to industry long-term, capital loans at an attractive interest rate, this would be most encouraging and attractive to those wishing to locate within our State.

I trust the above information will be helpful to you in preparing your report on this matter to Senator ROBERT C. BYRD.

Sincerely yours,

ELMER L. DAVIS,
Executive Vice President.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, without imposing upon the time of the Senate further, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a letter from the Tug Valley Chamber of Commerce; a letter from the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce; an editorial from the August 22, 1960, Huntington Advertiser; a letter from Andrew W. McLaughlin, of the Blue Grass Federal Savings and Loan Association of Lewisburg, W. Va.; and a letter from Charles J. Eib, of Marlinton, W. Va.

There being no objection, the letters and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TUG VALLEY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,

Williamson, W. Va., February 28, 1961.

Subject: Risk capital requirements for Tug Valley area.

Senator ROBERT C. BYRD,
U.S. Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BYRD: During your efforts in behalf of assisting areas with persistent unemployment, your attention should be directed toward the need for risk capital in many areas.

Within the Tug Valley area we have experienced this need for several years, because our local banking facilities are rather conservative with their lending policies, thereby creating an extremely difficult situation for many of our local business firms and/or individuals who are in dire need of additional financing.

Many of these individuals borrowed money several years ago during a period that their operating capital was such that high monthly payments were possible without any inconvenience; however, today these same people experience financial difficulty as a result of our depressing economic conditions and can not maintain satisfactory repayments schedules. Although their position within our communities is excellent, their potential to borrow funds for the purpose of refinancing is limited within our immediate area. This condition necessitates trips to other cities for the purpose of securing additional funds with which to survive businesswise and on a basis which would provide sufficient operating capital.

Assuming that a young man wished to embark on a new venture in our area, the odds would be that he would have a difficult time establishing himself sufficiently so that he could borrow any sufficient sum of money, assuming, of course, that there was no one here to endorse his note for a loan or that he did not possess any type of security in fixed assets or real estate.

Then again, we have several established business firms and/or individuals who have tried to expand their present business operation or strengthen their present financial status who have been presented with this constant refusal to loan them the necessary funds.

For example, several months ago, one of our local established businessmen visited our office to discuss a planned improvement to his property which is located almost directly across the street from my office. This improvement would have greatly improved not only his property, but a section of our downtown business district. He could not secure the necessary capital from our local banks. He had to leave our city—our county—and our State to secure the necessary funds with which to do the work. I might add that he is currently engaged in the property improvement and, upon completion, he will have a beautiful retail outlet.

Even our lumber dealers resort to utilization of outside capital to finance some of their homebuilding programs, because our local banking institutions will not provide necessary funds.

Generally speaking, I would state that our local banking facilities do not possess the confidence required for a vigorous, aggressive approach to our economic survival within this area. Risk capital is a phrase which is frowned upon within these circles.

I strongly feel that risk capital which would be made available to our area would permit several smaller business firms to secure a vital "shot in the arm," so that they can survive the future economic problems which we will encounter.

Realizing of course that these loans with risk capital would be repaid, our business firms and/or individuals could stimulate our local economy via necessary arrangements for improving their business conditions and operations.

Another example, several months ago we had a local man visit us to discuss the possible establishment of a garment industry within our area. He needed $10,000 with which to start the project. He was willing to invest an additional $5,000 of his personal funds for the business. Neither of our county banks would loan him the requested amount of capital, because they did not feel that he would survive the current economic conditions. The Tug Valley Industrial Corp., Williamson, Mingo County, W. Va., finally approved a $10,000 loan to this individual. He has been in operation since December 1960. Today he is out taking orders for finished goods which have already been completed. He is experiencing difficulty with this venture, but he is trying to do his best and is devoting a great amount of time and effort toward this goal. He is also trying to secure Government contracts and subcontracts for his firm in order to prove successful. Under the terms of our loan, his first payments do not become effective until the end of 1963, therefore, he has plenty of time to overcome his problems.

We also refer to a metalworking plant which had a desire to locate within our area. This project consumed approximately 12 months of contacts, investigation, and coordination. In the final analysis, our local bank refused to assume a participating loan portion in the amount of $12,500. The total loan agreement with the Small Business Administration was for $50,000. We lost the firm. The financial status of this firm was not the best in the world; however, the man is still in operation and seems to be surviving.

In a nutshell, we do not anticipate any new industry coming into our area with any "gold-plated" proposition, because we are in an area which is in dire need of internal improvements, many of which must be accomplished via local effort. Risk capital is but one of our many local problems.

We do feel that a change of heart with some of the lending policies within our area will assist substantially with overcoming this present defect within our economy. The sooner the better.

Your assistance in this respect with regard to any type Federal action in this field would be greatly appreciated by many small businessmen and business firms.

Thank you.

FRANK G. TSUTRAS,
Managing Director.

MORGANTOWN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Morgantown, W. Va., March 1, 1961.

HON. ROBERT C. BYRD,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BYRD: I have received your letter of February 22 and I appreciate the opportunity to pass along to you local data substantiating the need for long-term, low-interest capital in West Virginia.

Our local chamber of commerce, just in the past 3 months, has been aiding three local manufacturing companies to obtain long-term, low-interest capital for expansion in these plants. These companies are the Valley Manufacturing & Distributing Co., the Galis Electric & Machine Co., and the Industrial Manufacturing Co., all local Morgantown companies. These companies at the moment all have loans from our local banks but the companies are still in need of more financial assistance and risk capital. One company already has an application in for a Small Business Administration loan, we are assisting one of the other companies in making an application for a Small Business Administration loan, and the third company still does not have a solution to its needed capital problem. These are all three good companies employing a total of over 250 local workers.

Another company that has not contacted the chamber concerning needed capital but has requested an additional loan from one of our banks is the Industrial Machine & Manufacturing Co. of Morgantown.

As you know, Morgantown does not have too great a number of local industries. Quite a portion of our basic salaries comes from employment at West Virginia University, the U.S. Bureau of Mines Appalachian Experiment Station, and the local coal companies.

To a reasonable extent our local banks have been able to provide a limited amount of capital for our local industries. However, a good part of it has not been nearly as long-term or as low-interest rate as would be desired. I also feel that if business does not take an upturn for the better, more local companies will be in need of additional long-term capital.

Hoping that this information will be of some assistance to you in preparing your comments on the proposed depressed areas legislation and thanking you again for the opportunity to make these observations, I remain,

Most sincerely,

JAMES R. MCCARTNEY,
Managing Director.

[From the Huntington (W. Va.) Advertiser,
Aug. 22, 1960]

FINANCING IS MAJOR OBSTACLE TO STATE INDUSTRIAL GROWTH

An illuminating and challenging letter for all West Virginia has come to us from Lloyd A. Cook, president and general manager of Ravens-Metal Products, Inc., of Parkersburg.

The company was the first to organize in the Ohio Valley for fabricating aluminum from the giant Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. works at Ravenswood.

At the time it was formed 4 years ago, the Advertiser published an editorial commenting on the opportunities here and all along the Ohio Valley for men with enterprise and know-how to launch similar industries.

The Kaiser Co. itself had expected such satellite plants to spring up in West Virginia as they had near the firm's operations at Spokane, Wash. But even after 4 years the development is not taking place.

At least one of the major reasons why it is not was pointed out in Mr. Cook's letter referring to our editorial. The difficulty his company has encountered, he believes, may apply to the entire area of industrial development.

So his experience seems to tell in part why the State has lagged in creating new jobs for men idled by the mechanization of coal mines.

The difficulty is financing.

To begin operations the Ravens-Metal Co. had to sell stock to the public.

Those who bought at that time have seen the value of their shares rise from $10 to $15. The advance has taken place as a result of steady growth of the business that has required the opening of two new plants, one at Elizabeth and another at Ellenboro.

During the 4 years the number of employees has risen from 5 to 55. Assets have climbed from $127,000 to $400,000. Annual sales have leaped from $57,000 in 1957 to a 1959 total of $500,000. The sales goal for this year is $750,000.

That is substantial progress. No doubt it has required hard work, dedication, and loyal cooperation throughout the team of management and employees.

But even with all the company's human and material assets and its remarkable record of growth, it still has to go to the public for its financing.

Neither banks nor Government agencies have responded to the need.

And having to go to the public week after week to sell stock to finance expansion needed almost constantly to keep production up with sales takes time and effort that should go into planning, development, and supervision of operations.

The problem is of particular importance here because the chamber of commerce has adopted as a major project for the year the development of plants to fabricate products of basic industries in this area.

Solving it would help meet the State's particular need of small plants in the mountainous mining areas unsuitable for large industries.

One solution has been suggested by Andrew W. McLaughlin, Lewisburg businessman, who spoke before the Rotary club here this month. His plan calls for the creation of a State manufacturing and marketing commission composed of a five-man board in each county.

The county boards would choose a seven-member board of managing directors. This group would employ a paid managing director and an auditor.

The commission would be provided with at least $15 million for loans to new industries and those needing money for expansion. The money might come from a State appropriation or partly from Federal funds for assisting the recovery of depressed areas.

An obstacle would be the necessity of a constitutional amendment for authorizing the commission to make loans to private corporations.

The urgent need of some such plan has been demonstrated not only by the slow industrial growth in West Virginia but by the faster development in other States that have programs for helping new concerns get started and to meet the needs of expansion.

The problem should get the serious attention of officials and of all organizations interested in speeding industrial expansion to move the State out of the economic doldrums.

SAVINGS & LOAN ASSOCIATION,

MR. WENDELL S. REYNOLDS,
Huntington Publishing Co.,
Huntington, W. Va.

DEAR MR. REYNOLDS: I have your letter of February 13, requesting information of new industries that are in need of capital in their expansion and growth.

I could list many of these for you in various counties throughout the State, but I shall limit this list to those in our immediate vicinity which is as follows: Greenbrier Instruments and Greenbrier Electronics in Ronceverte, Fairlea Metal Works, Fairlea, Maxwellton Manufacturing Co., Lewisburg.

These are a few of those that have been established and managed to survive to a certain point, one thing needed for industrial development and expansion is capital.

I have read with interest, your various editorials on industrial development; Jean Harper sends them to me. I certainly commend you for the work that you are doing.

Very sincerely,

ANDREW W. McLAUGHLIN.

MARLINTON, W. VA., February 13, 1961.

HON. ROBERT C. BYRD,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SR: In answer to your request for my views on helping West Virginia and Pocahontas County, made at a dinner meeting here, I submit the following suggestions:

It is my belief that too many people for too long have been looking to the Government to take care of all their problems, thus causing many to lose their self reliance. It is my contention that Government should only help people to help themselves, and that free handouts should be held to a minimum.

However, there are vast projects such as the national forests, flood and power dams, reclamation work, etc., which could not be handled by private individuals alone, and it is in these fields that Government must step in. But in this connection I would like to point out that probably 95 percent of the people believe or delude themselves into thinking that Government projects are free since the Government furnishes them, not realizing that Government work is very costly in the long run.

Also, we must face the fact that the unemployment crisis in West Virginia has been building up for a long time, and hungry people cannot wait for long-range projects and must be put to work immediately. However, I believe that while a crash program is in progress, attention must be given to long-range planning so that our economy can again be rebuilt.

For example, Pocahontas County is an important producer of lumber, yet the majority of this product is exported to other States for manufacture. I am reliably informed by U.S. Forest Service employees that last year only 30 percent of the timber on the Monongahela National Forest was cut that should have been cut, because there was no suitable market. It is my belief that small woodworking plants throughout the area would give real help to the unemployment problems * * * let's produce our own furniture, dimension stock, pressed board, etc., right here where the timber is grown. The same theory applies to other West Virginia products.

Since its inception 2 years ago, I have been associated with a small furniture plant here, the buildings of which were the former exhibit buildings of the Pocahontas County Fair. The principal products of this factory, two-piece living room suites (upholstered) have been widely accepted and compare favorably with those produced in other States and are sold at a better price, yet because the plant was started on a shoestring, it has never been able to really get going because of lack of sufficient working capital. The local people who are interested in this project do not have the money, while the people who have the money are not interested in local development.

It was my dream, in helping to get this plant started, that it would prove to be a pilot plant for other woodworking and furniture establishments throughout the Greenbrier Valley area, and I still believe that this dream can become a reality. There are still many people left who have courage, imagination, and initiative, and were they to be encouraged to the point where the Government could furnish sufficient risk capital on a long-term basis, say on a 50-50 matching basis. I believe that establishment of many small plants would result. I realize that when the Government puts up money of this type, it wants security, as is shown by the Small Business Administration, but we as a people have lately squandered billions around the world, so it should not be too great a problem to take a chance on reputable people in our own land. We residents of West Virginia should learn to create wealth through the products that the Creator has given us. We have the products, but we must learn how wealth is created. This phase of manufacture should be included in a retraining program, which could well give some thought to the tourist potential also.

If any of the thoughts or experiences I have mentioned here can be of any help in assisting West Virginia to rise to the place it should occupy, I will indeed be very grateful.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES J. EIB.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, these letters all testify to the fact that adequate sources of risk capital simply do not exist in West Virginia.
